THE NEXT GREAT LAW REFORM.

Law Reform, beyond all other reforms, is self-promoting. One change compels many more. Law is a system more or less perfect, all the parts of which are mutually dependent, and are regulated with reference each one to the others. The consciousness of this relationship and of the extreme difficulty of altering any part without altering and possibly reconstructing the whole, was the true obstacle that impeded for so many years the beginning of Law Reform. Statesmen and Legislators shrank from the labour and the responsibility; the Lawyers were loath to promote anything that involved the sweeping away of their tediously acquired knowledge, and the recommencement of the study of their profession when they should be pursuing the profitable practice of it. But society will outgrow its wisest institutions: the most stubborn must yield to necessity. Our legal system was unsuitable to modern times; public opinion decreed a change, and of that change we are now witnessing the first steps,—or we should rather call them the first strides.

Manifestly these are but the beginnings of still greater change. The establishment of the County Courts, the Reform of the Equity Courts, and of the Common Law Courts, are only parts of a series of Reforms that must be extended to the rest of our tribunals. Two Courts yet remain for revision, the Ecclesiastical Courts and the Magistrates' Courts. When these are reformed, the cycle of administrative reform will be completed; there will then remain the still more difficult and extensive task of reforming the law itself.

Foremost in the number and magnitude of their abuses, and therefore the proper subject of the next great Law Reform, are the Ecclesiastical Courts. If the Court of Chancery has been the subject of more censure, it is only because it affects a greater number of persons and larger interests. The abuses of the Ecclesiastical Courts are not inferior to those which have been swept from the Equity Courts amid the applauding shouts of the whole country. These abuses are not denied; they have been denounced in Parliament and in the press for many years; measure after measure has been introduced into the House of Commons for their abolition; but although they found no defenders in speech, they have hitherto succeeded, through some backstairs influence, in defeating all attempts to reform them. But there is hope now that even the Court of Chancery has been reformed. Lord DERBY has acknowledged the necessity and promised the attention of the Government to this subject. The handwriting is upon the wall. This must be the next Law Reform. At this very time, to our knowledge, an able, active, and influential member of the Legislature is preparing himself for the coming struggle.

But it will not be disposed of so easily as either of its predecessors. There was no question in any mind as to the propriety of preserving the Common Law Courts and the Equity Courts; the only difference of opinion was as to the extent of their reform. It is otherwise with the Ecclesiastical Courts. The first question to be determined with them is this—shall they not be abolished altogether? Only if that be resolved in the negative, will the manner of their reform come to be considered? But it would be a waste of thought and time to treat of that until the propriety of their combined existence in any shape shall have been submitted to discussion and decision.

The Ecclesiastical Courts are a relic of the domination of the Roman Catholic Church. They are an anomaly in a Protestant country. They were founded upon the assumption that there are certain subjects peculiarly within the province of Ecclesiastical authority, as doctrine and morals. To these priestcraft cunningly added a jurisdiction over wills and intestacies, on the daring assumption that the former was the last act of a man's life, and therefore under the direct inspection of the Church, and the latter a duty with which the Church was intrusted by those who died within its pale, by virtue of its ministration of the last offices of religion. Such a claim might be recognised in a Roman Catholic country, or even in a Protestant country, if all the people were of one faith, members of the one church, and therefore subject to its jurisdiction. But neither of these conditions exists in England. We are Protestant, and our people are divided into a multitude of sects. Yet here do we perceive in all its original audacity the claim of an Ecclesiastical power, to determine questions of doctrine and morals, to grant or withhold divorce, to take possession of and control the wills of the whole community, to levy an enormous revenue for its permission to next of kin to administer the properties of those who die intestate.

Why anything so monstrous as this has been so long submitted to with patience in a country where anything in the shape of an infringement of religious liberty is usually assailed with vehement outcries, is one of those problems of English character that perplex the foreigner and confound the philosopher. But so it is. A tribunal whose origin, foundation, structure, and practice is wholly at variance with the religion, the habits, the opinions, and the prejudices of the people, not only exists, but has successfully thwarted the endeavours of successive Governments to reform it, and remains at this moment with all its anomalies and abuses in full vigour, when even the Court of Chancery, which was believed to be impregnable, has been compelled to yield to the spirit of the times.

Having given some thought to the subject, we have come to the unhesitating conclusion that the Ecclesiastical Courts ought to be abolished, their jurisdiction transferred to the Civil Tribunals, and Wills confided to the custody of the State.

The reasons for this, and the manner of doing it, we propose to submit to our readers in another article.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

In our last number several of the sections of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 84, are examined, which effect considerable improvement in the procedure of the

Court of Chancery with relation to the parties to suits. One source of considerable expense under the old system, arose from the rule with regard to misjoinder. For instance, if any person who was joined as co-plaintiff should, by any act, or by conduct amounting to assent or acquiescence, have disentitled himself to relief, all the co-plaintiffs were bound by it, and were deprived in that suit of the relief which they might otherwise have had. It therefore became a common practice to have a single plaintiff, and that plaintiff, if possible, an infant, who could not by any act or omission have prejudiced his right to relief, the other parties interested being made defendants. By these rules and from these considerations it was necessary frequently to have a very large number of persons defendants in a Chancery suit, who might all appear by separate solicitors, and all put in separate answers. (Ch. Comm. Rep. p. 8.)

To prevent these inconveniences, the 49th section of the Act provides that no suit in the court is to be dismissed by reason only of the misjoinder of persons as plaintiffs therein, but wherever it appears to the Court that notwithstanding the conflict of interest in the co-plaintiffs, or the want of interest in some of the plaintiffs, or the existence of some ground of defence affecting some or one of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs, or some or one of them, are or is entitled to relief, the Court is to have power to grant such relief, and to modify its decree, according to the special circumstances of the case, and for that purpose to direct such amendments, if any, as may be necessary, and at the hearing before such amendments are made, to treat any one or more of the plaintiffs as if he or they was or were a defendant or defendants in the suit, and the remaining or other plaintiff or plaintiffs was or were the only plaintiff or plaintiffs on the record; and where there is a misjoinder of plaintiffs, and the plaintiff having an interest shall have died leaving a plaintiff on the record without an interest, the Court may, at the hearing of the cause, order the cause to stand revived as may appear just, and proceed to a decision of the cause, if it see fit, and give such directions as to costs or otherwise as may appear just and expedient.

The two following sections of the Act, viz. the 50th and 51st, giving power to the Court to administer partial and declaratory relief, will in a great many cases put an end to much unnecessary expense and delay. Formerly, it was a well-known rule of the Court, not to execute trusts partially, nor to make a decree merely declaratory. For instance, if a question arose upon the construction of a testator's will, the Court would not consider the question except in a suit for administering the estate, and after taking the accounts and ascertaining the property. It is needless to speculate upon the origin of the rule, but if the unfortunate suitors were no gainers by suits unnecessarily protracted, there certainly were persons whose incomes were not diminished by every additional step which that complicated farrago of injustice, called Chancery Practice, compelled the suitor to take. Assuming, however, that the rule originated and was perpetuated by an over-anxiety to do complete justice, it is now almost universally acknowledged that in all those cases where only partial or declaratory relief was sought, it overshot the mark, and rendered it the most prudent course to a person, especially a poor one, having the clearest rights, to make considerable concessions to an unscrupulous, and perhaps wealthy, opponent, rather than have recourse to a tribunal where the cost of justice was often equal to, sometimes even greater than, the value of the subject-matter in dispute. The evils occasioned by the rule were in some degree remedied by Sir GEORGE TURNER'S Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 35), which enabled parties by agreement to take the opinion of the Court upon a special case. By the 50th section no suit in the court is to be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it is to be lawful for the Court to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief.

By the 51st section, power is given to the Court to adjudicate on questions arising between parties notwithstanding that they may be some only of the parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen, or that the property in question is comprised with other property in the same settlement, will, or other instrument, without making the other parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen, or interested under the same settlement, will, or other instrument, parties to the suit, and without requiring the whole trusts and purposes of the settlement, will, or other instrument to be executed under the direction of the Court, and without taking the accounts of the trustees or other accounting parties, or ascertaining the particulars or amount of the property touching which the question or questions may have arisen: and it is provided that, if the Court shall be of opinion that the application is fraudulent or collusive, or for some other reason ought not to be entertained, it is to have power to refuse to make the order prayed.

The delay and expense occasioned by making numerous parties to suits, was greatly aggravated under the old Chancery practice, by the necessity of filing, on the death or the transmission of the interest of any of them, what are termed bills of revivor and supplement. This may be seen from the following brief outline of the old practice:—"On the death of a plaintiff, his legal personal representative or heir, as the case might be, filed a fresh bill against all the parties to the original suit, who were all served, and had all to enter appearances; each separate solicitor taking an office copy of the bill of revivor, for which he paid office fees. Similar proceedings took place on the marriage of a female plaintiff. Sometimes one of several plaintiffs died, or was married, and the legal personal representative or husband was disinclined to go on as plaintiff. In this case the other plaintiffs filed their bill of revivor against all the old defendants and the new parties. If a defendant died, a similar bill was filed against his personal representative or heir. In cases of simple revivor, after the lapse of a few days, and no objection being taken, an order of course was obtained for reviving the suit, as it was technically called; the suit being, until revivor, considered abated or suspended. In cases of revivor it nevertheless happened frequently that an answer must be put in, and the cause formally heard, and a decree taken. The ordinary instance of this was when the person dead was an accounting party, and it was necessary to obtain a decree charging his assets with the debt to be found due from him. The cases, moreover, in which a simple order of revivor would suffice were comparatively rare. If the transmission of interest were anything other than simple transmission by marriage, heirship, executorship, or grant of administration, the bill was obliged to be what was called a bill of supplement. If there was a devise, or a marriage settlement, or a bankruptcy or insolvency, or a change of office, as in the case of a bishop, or incumbent, or the like, or if a new person had come into existence interested in the subject of the suit, a bill was in that case filed, to which answers were required, and all the formalities of a hostile Chancery suit gone through in order to obtain what was called the usual supplemental decree; that is, a decree directing that the proceedings in the original suit might be carried on between the parties in the supplemental suit in the same way as between the original parties." (Ch. Comm. Rep. 20.)

The Act substitutes a very simple process for these useless and expensive formalities. For upon any suit becoming abated by death, marriage, or otherwise, or defective, by reason of some change or transmission of interest or liability, it is not to be necessary to exhibit any bill of revivor, or supplemental bill, in order to obtain the usual order to revive such suit, or the usual or necessary decree or order to carry on the proceedings; but an order to the effect of the usual order to revive, or of the usual supplemental decree, may be obtained as of course upon an allegation of the abatement of such suit, or of the same having become defective, and of the change or transmission of interest or liability; and an order so obtained, when served upon the party or parties who, according to the present practice of the Court, would be defendant or defendants to the bill of revivor or supplemental bill, is from the time of such service to be binding on such party or parties, in the same manner in every respect, as if such order had been regularly obtained according to the existing practice of the Court; and such party or parties are thenceforth to become a party or parties to the suit, and are to be bound to enter an appearance thereto in the office of the Clerks of Records and Writs, within such time and in like manner as if he or they had been duly served with process, to appear to a bill of revivor or supplemental bill filed against him or them; and it is provided that it is to be open to the party or parties so served, within such time after service, as in that behalf prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, to apply to the Court by motion or petition, to discharge such order, on any ground which would have been open to him on a bill of reviver or supplemental bill, stating the previous proceedings in the suit, and the alleged change or transmission of interest or liability, and praying the usual relief consequent thereon: and it is provided also, that if any party so served is under any disability other than coverture, such order is to be of no force or effect as against such party, until a guardian or guardians ad litem have been duly appointed for such party, and such time have elapsed thereafter as prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf. (Sec. 52.) By one of the general orders having reference to this section, "any party under no disability, or under the disability of coverture, who may be served with an order to revive any suit, or to carry on the proceedings therein, may apply to the Court to discharge such order within twelve days after such service; and any party being under any disability, other than coverture, who may be so served, may apply to the Court to discharge such order within twelve days after the appointment of a guardian or guardians ad litem for such party; and until such period of twelve days have expired, such order is to have no force or effect as against such last-mentioned party. (Order 43.)

Another source of great and unnecessary expense was often occasioned by what are termed supplemental bills. These were rendered necessary by a merely technical rule of the Court, viz. that anything which had occurred since the original institution of the suit could not be introduced into a bill by way of amendment; and that there must be a new bill, with a new subpœna, a new appearance, and a new answer, in order to bring such supplemental matter before the Court. The origin of such a technical rule may, like many others tending to increase the fees of the officials of the court, be readily conceived; nor perhaps, since salaries have been substituted for fees, is its existence down to the present time much to be wondered at, as there may have been others (always excepting the suitors) who may to a considerable extent have profited by it. It is now abolished, and after the commencement of this Act it is not to be necessary to exhibit any supplemental bill in the court for the purpose only of stating or putting in issue facts or circumstances which may have occurred after the institution of any suit; but such facts or circumstances may be introduced by way of amendment into the original bill of complaint in the suit, if the cause is otherwise in such a state as to allow of an amendment being made in the bill, and if not, the plaintiff is to be at liberty to state such facts or circumstances on the record, in such manner and subject to such rules and regulations with respect to the proof thereof, and the affording the defendant leave and opportunity of answering and meeting the same, as shall in that behalf be prescribed by any General Order of the Lord Chancellor. (Sec. 53.) The General Order is as follows:—"If the plaintiff in any cause which is not in such a state as to allow of an amendment being made in the bill shall desire to state or put in issue any facts or circumstances which may have occurred after the institution of the suit, he may state the same, and put the same in issue by filing in the Record and Writ Clerk's office a statement either written or printed, to be annexed to the bill; and such proceedings by way of answer, evidence, and otherwise, are to be had and taken upon the statement so filed, as if the same were embodied in a supplemental bill: provided always, that the Court may make any order which it shall think fit for accelerating the proceedings thereunder, or proceedings therein, in any manner which may appear just and practicable." (Order 44.)

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

XXII. AMENDMENT.

To put an end as far as possible to merely formal objections, a larger power of amendment has now been vested in the Courts and Judges, and the 222nd section provides that the Courts, "and every Judge thereof, and any Judge sitting at Nisi Prius," may at all times amend "all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not." Such amendment is to be made with or without costs, and on such terms as the Court or Judge shall deem fit. And lest any possible question should arise as to the extent of the power thus given, it is further expressly enacted that "all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made."

After this it will be almost impossible for any suit to go off upon any question of form—all will be decided upon their merits. What object will be gained by an objection in point of form to any pleading or proceeding, if the only result be an order for its amendment? The Judges have shewn by their leanings against formal objections for some years past that they will carry out this provision in the spirit in which it was framed.

XXIII. RULES AND ORDERS TO BE MADE BY THE JUDGES.

It is manifest that such great changes could not be effected in the procedure and practice of the Common Law, without leaving unprovided for much that no sagacity could anticipate in the application of that which was new to much that still remains of what is old. Unforeseen difficulties and doubts must for a long time to come be arising continually, as circumstances present themselves in novel combinations, and the solution of which would be impracticable, if the Courts were restrained by the strict terms of an Act of Parliament, designed to trace out rather the outline than the details of a great measure of reform. The Legislature has accordingly wisely invested the Courts with very extensive powers for regulating by rules of their own framing, from time to time as occasion offers, the practice of the Courts in accordance with, and for the better carrying out of the design of the statute. The 223rd section recites that "in order to enable the Courts and Judges to carry the Act thoroughly into effect," the Judges, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said Courts shall be three, may from time to time, "make all such general rules and orders for the effectual execution of this Act, and of the intent and object thereof, and for fixing the costs to be allowed for or in respect of the matters herein contained, and the performance thereof, and for apportioning the costs of issues, and for the purpose of enforcing conformity of practice in the allowance of costs in the said courts, and of insuring as far as may be practicable an equal division of the business of taxation among the Masters of the said courts." They are also empowered to exercise the jurisdiction given them by the "Pleading Act" of last session (which has never been carried into operation), "with respect to any matter herein mentioned relative to practice or pleading; and the provisions of that Act as to the rules, orders, and regulations made in pursuance thereof shall be held applicable to any rules if made in pursuance of this Act." So that the Judges have now full power to make any further alterations they may deem to be necessary either in pleading or practice, or for the regulation and disposal of the business of their courts.

They are also empowered to frame new writs and forms of proceeding necessary to give effect to the provisions of the Act, and to make rules for the government of the officers of the courts.

XXIV. INJUNCTIONS AND ORDERS TO STAY PROCEEDINGS.

Injunctions and orders to stay proceedings in any action, suit, or proceeding at law or in equity, issued by any Court, are to take effect upon any other court, upon production to such Court, or the Judge thereof, of such writ of injunction, rule, or order, upon which all further proceedings contrary thereto shall be stayed, and thenceforth any that may be taken shall be utterly null and void.

XXV. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The Queen in Council is empowered to extend the provisions of this Act to any Court of Record. The provisions, so far as they are applicable, are to extend immediately to the Palatine Courts. The Act is not to extend to Scotland or Ireland. It is to be cited by the short title of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852."

REMARKS.

The reader will have observed that the improvements effected by this statute are almost wholly limited to the procedure previously to trial. It does nothing to facilitate, or simplify, or improve the trial itself, by regulating anew the periods for the Assizes, or the places for holding them; it makes but slight alterations in the regulations of Juries: it does nothing to raise the character of the Common Jury, or to abolish the injustice of the Special Jury: it imposes no checks upon that greatest of the abuses by which justice is so often defeated—the motion for a new trial. Without the further changes which the Act entirely omits, all the many improvements it has effected are almost worthless; for to facilitate procedure is of little practical utility if the interval that must elapse before trial can be had is not abbreviated also. The Act provides ample security against the defeat of justice by parties seeking to reverse a judgment by appeal to a Court of Error, but it does nothing to prevent that much more frequent and more favourite, because more easy, method of defrauding a successful adversary of the fruits of his verdict by the motion for a new trial and the delay thus obtained, and which delay is in nine cases out of ten the sole object of the application. We know not whether these further improvements are under the consideration of the Common Law Commissioners, or if that body deems its duties done. If so it be, we trust that the Government will issue a new Commission, charged expressly with the business of re-arranging the Circuits, increasing the Assizes to four in the year, and making more perfect provision for sending the Judges to the suitors, instead of bringing the suitors to the Judges. Lord Derby's Ministry enjoys the honour of having passed, if not of having framed, the greatest measures of Law Reform that this country has ever seen. We trust they will complete the work so well begun for them by others, and so wisely adopted by themselves, by those further improvements of which the credit both of inception and completion may belong to them alone.

PROFESSIONAL INCOMES, SINECURES, AND MONOPOLIES.

If the returns to the commissioners of the professional incomes of lawyers in 1852 were carefully analysed, they would disclose some remarkable facts. It would be interesting to ascertain how very few of the ten thousand gentlemen in Mr. Tilsey's list who have devoted their lives to the study and practice of the English law—who have expended so many years in statu pupillari, and paid such large sums to acquire the degree of Barrister or Attorney,—make, at this moment, the large profits which the public give the lawyers credit for making;—how many make a reasonable per centage on the heavy sums they have sunk in paying their footing;—how many have been compelled to make the disheartening acknowledgment that from the profession of a lawyer, carried on during the last year, they have made no net profits at all.

The income-tax proceedings operate cruelly, it must be confessed, on this class. Some think it hard to have to pay a tax on professional earnings at all. It is still more hard for a professional man to have to acknowledge that his profession has been to him a failure,—that any day it might truly be said of him—

> If to account for all their various evil,
> Lawyers hereafter go unto the devil,
> This man hath done so little by the laws,
> He'll surely go below without a cause.

The world has long been accustomed to make merry at the expense of "brieflees barristers" and "pettifogging attorneys;" and the unthinking crowd, regarding success as the chief test of merit, are apt, whilst they pay honour to the lawyer who thrives, to view with something more than suspicion the less prosperous members of the fraternity. Need it be wondered at, then, that professional men among themselves too often over-estimate those who enjoy a large share of the profits of the profession, and depreciate others who have a small share? The pluralist rector who derives 10,000*l.* from the money annually expended in law costs in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury,—the six clerks whose sinecure share of Chancery suit expenditure is confirmed by a statute of Queen, Lords, and Commons,—are once in a dozen years dragged in their golden trappings before the public, that they may be duly execrated, but then retire into sweet seclusion, and enjoy their otium cum dignitate. The struggling practitioner, meanwhile, whose income may equal that of the deputy's deputy of one of these great sinecurists, is coolly regarded as the hungry and grasping lawyer, sneered at by the vulgar rich, dreaded by the ignorant poor, and too often visited with unmerited contempt.

A classified list of all the sinecures and monopolies which at this day actually exist in the profession of the law would shew how directly injurious they are, not only to the public, but to the Profession generally, and its working members particularly. For every Registrar who has a patent for making a fortune without doing more than eating, drinking, sleeping, and signing his name,—for every son of a great man, who, by family influence, succeeds to office or practice,—there are, at least, fifty deserving men who are unjustly forced into the background, deprived of the legitimate advantages of honourable competition, and too often driven to less worthy expedients to keep up appearances.

There are, of course, monopolies which cannot be avoided—which exist by the general voice of the public, and which the public have always the power to control—the monopoly of custom, as it may be called, for instance. The eminent firm of A. B. C. and the eminent barrister, Mr. Q. enjoy a species of monopoly of this kind. Hundreds of others may be able to conduct the business every whit as well,—generally speaking, indeed, a great deal better, from being able to devote more time to it; but clients, big with the importance of their particular cause, may prefer its being even neglected by men of eminence, to being attended to by men of less note. Amongst this kind of monopolies is the monopoly of Parliamentary business, by which two or three dozen gentlemen, wholly freed from legal restrictions, are enabled to secure to themselves the exclusive practice of almost the only really profitable branch of professional practice, to the exclusion of the less favoured crowd of practitioners. There are other monopolies which it is difficult but not impossible to prevent,—for example, the monopoly arising from family influence. The son of an influential country magistrate will most likely be pushed into practice as effectually as a bench of magistrates is capable of aiding him. The son or the nephew of any other man of influence will probably enjoy all the practice that the father or the uncle can secure for him, whilst perhaps the great agency firm of X. Y. Z. may be able to spread out the different branches of their families into the sunshine of respectable mediocrity on either side of Westminster Hall in easy country quarters, and among the silent conveyancers and special pleaders of Lincoln's-inn and the Temple.

But it is not of such monopolies we desire to speak. The cure for any abuses which they may give rise to is, for the most part, within the power of the Profession itself. No positive law can remedy them. There are, however, prejudicial monopolies in the profession of the law which the Legislature can remedy, and which the heavily-taxed members of the Profession may fairly require to be remedied.

Is not the whole system of Doctors' Commons—Doctors, Proctors, Registrars, and all—such a monopoly, with all the additional evils of the family influence system in the bargain? Mr. Moore rightly asks why public odium should be directed against him, when there are so many other sinecurists and monopolists in existence? We think he is right. The public is indebted to him for bringing the question of the existence of sinecures and monopolies to a fair trial. We would not deal out to Mr. Moore one-sided justice. We would abolish all monopolies and all sinecures wherever they are to be found. Revolutionary as it may seem, we are quite prepared for a mere Attorney or Solicitor, responsible to the Courts at Westminster, being entrusted with the duties which the law of the church has religiously reserved for the exclusive benefit of the Proctors.

Give John Bull a small taste for office-smashing, and we shall probably see his virtuous indignation excited against these very improper places. Let a few persons hold lanterns in the proximity, and the profession of the law will at last get rid of the nuisance. It will not then require the amount of an ordinary fortune to advance so as to be qualified to conduct the business of a Parliamentary or Patent Agent, to conduct suits in Chancery or the Ecclesiastical Courts; and, what is of not less importance to professional men, legal monopolies must be carried away by the same tide, and the practical monopolies which the present system encourages must immediately follow.

THE ATTORNEY; (a)

HIS EDUCATION, PRACTICE, AND DUTIES.

CHAPTER XXV.

RECOVERY OF DEBTS.

The subjects on which an attorney is consulted, are almost as various as are the affairs of life. Theoretically, he is the adviser of his client on legal matters; practically, he is their adviser on all matters in which the counsel is desired of a man of good sense, sound judgment, and knowledge of the world, and whose interest and duty it is to deal faithfully with him. Such advisers can rarely be found within the circle of a man's personal friends. Few are disinterested; fewer still are competent to advise on subjects out of the immediate range of their special pursuits; even if competent, it is an unpleasant office when performed gratuitously; such advice is carelessly given on the one side, thanklessly received on the other. But advice-giving is an Attorney's business, and he fits himself for it accordingly. The client pays for it, and is entitled to the fullest hearing of his case, the most careful consideration of the course to be advised, and the most active assistance in carrying into execution whatever may have been resolved upon. There is another cause for an Attorney being usually selected as the general as well as legal adviser of his client. Few persons are willing to confide their difficulties and troubles to their friends. In despite of the poets and essayists, who have enlarged with so much rapture on the duties and advantages of friendship, the instinct of almost every one of us is to withhold from our friends the confession of our own faults, follies, or misfortunes. It wounds our pride to be pitied, and we know that even our best friends would not afterwards hold us in the same esteem as before. Therefore it is, you will find, soon after you begin to practise, that a considerable portion of the business that is committed to you is not strictly legal, or to be performed in your character as an Attorney, but has grown out of your other more important and influential character as the general adviser and agent of persons who have other affairs to occupy their time and thoughts, and find it more profitable to pay you to think and act for them in matters out of their regular business, than to do so for themselves.

Having in an earlier part of this treatise told you what are the studies by which you should qualify yourself for this office, and how you might be best prepared for business when it comes, it will probably be the most convenient course now to consider in succession each of the most important branches of business upon which an Attorney is likely to be engaged, and to describe as minutely as possible what is the course to be pursued in each, from its commencement to its conclusion. And here it is necessary to premise, that it is not our purpose to exhibit the legal procedure, for which reference must be made to the books of practice, but only to describe the office arrangements and methods, the rules that should govern your conduct in respect to it. Thus we propose in this manner to review what is to be done by you when a client comes to consult you on the sale or purchase of an estate, the bringing or defending of an action, the conduct of parish business, or proceedings in the County Court or before a Magistrate, in Bankruptcy or Insolvency, to compound with creditors, or make his will, or to prove one, or to conduct an election for him, or insure his life, or manage a trust, or an executorship, or to promote or oppose a bill in Parliament, and so forth, until we have treated of the principal branches of a country Attorney's practice, that being the most various in its character, and demanding the greatest amount of skill and knowledge, a fact not recognised by the profession in London, but nevertheless strictly true.

We begin with that which, at all events at the commencement of your practice, will be the most frequent duty required of you,—the Recovery of Debts.

The client who has first introduced himself to you at your office is a tradesman, who brings a list of debts which he desires you to recover; and here, at the very outset of your career, you will be met by a difficulty, which we will endeavour to remove, although at the risk of offending some prejudices.

Your client will probably ask upon what terms you will undertake the desired task. You will remember that the regular charge is 3s. 6d. for each letter, with attendances, &c. You look at the list of debts, and you see twenty or thirty names of debtors, with debts varying, it may be, from 2*l.* to 20*l.* You mentally calculate that if you have but one letter and one attendance for each, your bill will be a formidable one, that would swallow up a considerable portion of the moneys you are likely to recover, and that you would not afterwards be likely again to see the face of your client within your office. You prudently hesitate to answer. You fear the loss of a client on one side, and on the other the rules you have heard about the duty of adhering to the regular charges. Your client sees your hesitation, and proposes his own terms. "I have a great number of debts to collect; some are good, some bad; I cannot afford to pay lawyers' charges for every letter and attendance, it would be better to lose my debt altogether. I don't want to be troubled with bills either. If you like to take the trouble of writing a letter and the chance of what you may get from the debtor, you shall have five per cent. on all that is recovered. If you won't do that, I must find somebody who will. There's an accountant at the County Court who offers to do it for one per cent. But I prefer to employ a regular lawyer, if he will be reasonable in his charges."

And is it not reasonable? Could what are called the regular charges be endured by such business? Is not an arrangement of this sort equitable for both parties? You will be sufficiently well paid for the trouble of writing a few short circular letters; your client will be pleased to know that he will not be required to pay unless he has obtained an equivalent advantage. But your profit is not limited to the five per cent. you obtain from him. You demand the regular charge for the letter from the debtor, and although this is rarely paid, if the demand is settled without further proceedings, if resort to legal process should become necessary, you will then receive your costs from the defendant. Thus it is advantageous even as a pecuniary arrangement.

But it is not less so in other ways. Collecting debts is the best and easiest introduction to practice for a young attorney who is making his own business. It brings to his office a great number of persons, many of whom are creditors as well as debtors, and if they are pleased with the manner in which the debt has been collected from themselves, they are very likely to employ him to recover other debts for themselves. It happens not unfrequently that a debtor in embarrassed circumstances, when pressed for a debt, determines to offer a composition, or to relieve himself by bankruptcy or insolvency, and he employs the attorney who is already acquainted with his difficulties by suing him, to conduct him to the desired settlement. Thus does the practice of a skilful attorney roll together, one matter leading to another, in a manner most full of hope to those who have the tact and ability to avail themselves of opportunities.

We must therefore so far depart from the traditions of the Profession, as to recommend you to accept the proposal of your client, and to undertake the collection of his debts for payment of five per cent. on all that are paid, in addition, of course, to all moneys actually paid by you out of pocket. Then, taking your Day-Book, you make your first entry, setting down the name of your client, the terms on which you have undertaken the collection, and the list of debts to be recovered.

Proceed immediately to the performance of your task. Address a formal application to each of the debtors in the list. Let it be short, lawyer-like, and plain, carefully avoiding anything like impertinence or incivility. It may run thus:—

"Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. A. of B. to apply to you for the sum of 5l. due to him; for which, if not paid to me by Saturday next, the 27th inst. with 3s. 6d. the costs for this letter, legal proceedings will be taken against you."

If the debt is paid without more, you can only ask the costs of the letter; you cannot compel them, if refused. In such case you must accept the debt, and give a receipt for it.

But if no notice be taken of your application, do not avail yourself of it to commence proceedings immediately, except in special cases, where there is reason to fear that the debtor will abscond, or that you will be anticipated by others; but write a second letter, referring to the first, and somewhat more peremptory; as thus:—

"Sir,—No notice having been taken by you of my application for the 5l. due to Mr. A. I now beg to inform you that unless it be paid to me, together with my costs, by Wednesday next, legal proceedings for its recovery will be taken, without further notice."

When the time appointed has expired, go to your client to ascertain if payment has been made to him, or if he has any objection to proceedings being commenced. Take from him a warrant to sue, printed forms of which should always be kept upon your table for use, and then proceed in due form of law.

And now a question will occur to you upon which we will say a few words in this place, as it is one that must in future often present itself to the practitioner. Where shall you bring your action,—in the Superior Court or in the County Court? For your costs, and consequently your profits, will be greater in one than in the other.

Upon this we can offer but one rule of conduct: consider only the interest of your client. Go where he can obtain his debt most surely, speedily, and cheaply, and with the least trouble. Do for him as you would do for yourself, if you were about to recover your own debt. That which most profits him will, in the end, most profit you. A great deal more is to be gained by the reputation of being a prompt and successful collector of debts than by the difference in amount of costs in a few actions.

But the most important, and, unhappily, most often-neglected duty remains—to pay over the debts you recover as soon as you have received them. If your client lives not far off, let not a day pass without giving to him the moneys you have received. Be assured that nothing will secure for you so high a reputation as this; no conduct is so pleasing to clients or so certain to secure them. Seeing your promptitude and punctuality of payment in this, they will soon come to confide to you matters of more importance, and they will be sure to make it known to their neighbours, that there is an Attorney from whom they receive their debts as soon as paid to him, and that they have not in your case, as we fear it is too often found, and as, indeed, is proverbial among tradesmen, that it is more trouble to procure the debt from the Attorney who has recovered it than from the debtor, and, therefore, that it is useless to employ an Attorney to recover debts for them. Be it your care to prove that this prevailing opinion of tradesmen is not a just one; that you, at least, are prompt of payment; that you have no wish to keep in your hands for a moment longer than you can help it, money that is not your own, nor to run the risk of confusing it with your own.

And the advantage of such prompt payment will be as great to yourself as to your clients. It will avoid the danger that too much besets Attorneys, of mingling the moneys of their clients with their own, and, forgetting the limits of each, spending the one as the other, and thus involving themselves in inextricable difficulties. If you keep in your hands, or at your bankers, only the money that is actually your own, handing to your clients their money as soon as you receive it, you will certainly secure their confidence and your own stability.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 VICTORIA, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

CAP. LIII.

An Act to provide for the Exercise of certain Powers vested in the Bishop of Quebec in respect of Districts severed from his diocese. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LIV.

An Act further to facilitate and arrange proceedings in the County Courts. (June 30, 1852.)

This Act has already been published entire at p. 123.

CAP. LV.

An Act to extend the Provisions of "The Trustee Act, 1850." (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1850: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same,

1. Court of Chancery may make an Order for vesting the estate, in lieu of conveyance by a party to the suit after a decree or order for sale.—That when any decree or order shall have been made by any Court of Equity directing the sale of any lands for any purpose whatever, every person seised or possessed of such land, or entitled to a contingent right therein, being a party to the suit or proceeding in which such decree or order shall have been made, and bound thereby, or being otherwise bound by such decree or order, shall be deemed to be so seised or possessed or entitled (as the case may be) upon a trust within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1850; and in every such case it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, if the said Court shall think it expedient for the purpose of carrying such sale into effect, to make an order vesting such lands, or any part thereof, for such estate as the Court shall think fit, either in any purchaser or in such other person as the Court shall direct; and every such order shall have the same effect as if such person so seised or possessed or entitled had been free from all disability, and had duly executed all proper conveyances and assignments of such lands for such estate.

2. Power to make an order for vesting the estate, on refusal or neglect of a trustee to convey or release. — That sections numbered seventeen and eighteen in the Queen's printer's copy of the Trustee Act, 1850, be repealed; and in every case where any person is or shall be jointly or solely seised or possessed of any lands or entitled to a contingent right therein upon any trust, and a demand shall have been made upon such trustee by a person entitled to require a conveyance or assignment of such lands, or a duly authorised agent of such last-mentioned person, requiring such trustee to convey or assign the same, or to release such contingent right, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, if the said Court shall be satisfied that such trustee has wilfully refused or neglected to convey or assign the said lands for the space of twenty-eight days after such demand, to make an order vesting such lands in such person, in such manner and for such estate as the Court shall direct, or releasing such contingent right in such manner as the Court shall direct; and the said order shall have the same effect as if the trustee had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of the lands, or a release of such right, in the same manner and for the same estate.

3. Power to make an order for the transfer or receipt of dividends of stock in name of an infant trustee.—That when any infant shall be solely entitled to any stock upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting in any person or persons the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof; and when any infant shall be entitled jointly with any other person or persons to any stock upon any trust, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, either in the person or persons jointly entitled with the infant, or in him or them together with any other person or persons the said Court may appoint.

4. On neglect to transfer stock for twenty-eight days, order may be made vesting right to transfer in such person as the Court shall appoint.—That where any person shall neglect or refuse to transfer any stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for or recover any chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, for the space of twenty-eight days next after an order of the Court of Chancery for that purpose shall have been served upon him, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting all the right of such person to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, in such person or persons as the Court may appoint.

5. On like neglect by executor, similar order may be made.—When any stock shall be standing in the sole name of a deceased person, and his personal representative shall refuse or neglect to transfer such stock or receive the dividends or income thereof for the space of twenty-eight days next after an order of the Court of Chancery for that purpose shall have been served upon him, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, in any person or persons whom the said Court may appoint.

6. Bank of England and companies to comply with such orders.—When any order being or purporting to be under this Act, or under the Trustee Act, 1850, shall be made by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or by the Court of Chancery, vesting the right to any stock, or vesting the right to transfer any stock, or vesting the right to call for the transfer of any stock, in any person or persons, in every such case the legal right to transfer such stock shall vest accordingly; and the person or persons so appointed shall be authorised and empowered to execute all deeds and powers of attorney, and to perform all acts relating to the transfer of such stock into his or their own name or names, or otherwise, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of the order; and the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatever, and all persons shall be equally bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of such person or persons so appointed as aforesaid, to the extent and in conformity with the terms of such order, as the said Bank of England, or such companies, associations, or persons would have been bound and compellable to comply with the requisitions of the person in whose place such appointment shall have been made.

7. Indemnity to Bank and companies so obeying.—That every order made or to be made, being or purporting to be made under this or the Trustee Act, 1850, by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or by the Court of Chancery, and duly passed and entered, shall be a complete indemnity to the Bank of England, and all companies and associations whatsoever, and all persons, for any act done pursuant thereto; and it shall not be necessary for the Bank of England, or such company or association, or person, to inquire concerning the propriety of such order, or whether the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, or the Court of Chancery, had jurisdiction to make the same.

8. Power to appoint new trustees in lieu of persons convicted of felony.—That when any person is or shall be jointly or solely seised or possessed of any lands or entitled to any stock upon any trust, and such person has been or shall be convicted of felony, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon proof of such conviction, to appoint any person to be a trustee in the place of such convict, and to make an order for vesting such lands, or the right to transfer such stock, and to receive the dividends or income thereof, in such person to be so appointed trustee; and such order shall have the same effect as to lands as if the convict trustee had been free from any disability, and had duly executed a conveyance or assignment of his estate and interest in the same.

9. Power to the Court to appoint new trustees where there is no existing trustee.—That in all cases where it shall be expedient to appoint a new trustee, and it shall be found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable so to do without the assistance of the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees, whether there be any existing trustee or not at time of making such order.

10. Chancellor may make orders for appointment of trustees, without it being necessary that it should be made in Chancery, &c.—In every case in which the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid has jurisdiction under this Act, or the Trustee Act, 1850, to order a conveyance or transfer of land or stock, or to make a vesting order, it shall be lawful for him also to make an order appointing a new trustee or new trustees, in like manner as the Court of Chancery may do in like cases, without its being necessary that the order should be made in Chancery as well as in lunacy, or be passed and entered by the registrar of the Court of Chancery.

11. As to powers of persons intrusted with the care of lunatics.—That all the jurisdiction conferred by this Act on the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care of the persons and estates of lunatics, shall and may be had, exercised, and performed by the person or persons for the time being intrusted as aforesaid.

12. Act to be construed as part of Trustee Act, 1850.—That this Act shall be read and construed according to the definitions and interpretations contained in the second section of the Trustee Act, 1850, and the provisions of the said last-mentioned Act (except so far as the same are altered by or inconsistent with this Act) shall extend and apply to the cases provided for by this Act, in the same way as if this Act had been incorporated with and had formed part of the said Trustee Act, 1850.

13. All orders made under Trustee Act, 1850, or this Act, to be chargeable with the same stamp duty as deeds of conveyance.—That every order to be made under the Trustee Act, 1850, or this Act, which shall have the effect of a conveyance or assignment of any lands, or a transfer of any such stock as can only be transferred by stamped deed, shall be chargeable with the like amount of stamp duty as it would have been chargeable with if it had been a deed executed by the person or persons seised or possessed of such lands, or entitled to such stock; and every such order shall be duly stamped for denoting the payment of the said duty.

CAP. LVI.

An Act for regulating the Qualifications of Pharmaceutical Chemists. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LVII.

An Act to provide for more effectual Inquiry into the Existence of corrupt Practices at Elections for Members to serve in Parliament. (June 30, 1852.)

Whereas it is expedient to make more effectual provision for inquiring into the existence of corrupt practices at elections of members to serve in Parliament: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Upon address of Houses of Parliament, her Majesty may appoint commissioners to make inquiry into corrupt practices at elections.—Where by a joint address of both Houses of Parliament it shall be represented to her Majesty that a Committee of the House of Commons appointed to try an election petition, or a committee of that House appointed to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices in any election or elections of a member or members to serve in Parliament, have reported to the House that corrupt practices have, or that there is reason to believe that corrupt practices have, extensively prevailed in any county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place in the United Kingdom electing or sharing in the election of a member or members to serve in Parliament, at any election or elections of such members or member, and the Houses shall thereupon pray her Majesty to cause inquiry to be made under this Act, by persons named in such address, such persons being (where the inquiry to be made relates to a place in England or Ireland) barristers-at-law of not less than seven years' standing, or (where such inquiry relates to a place in Scotland) advocates of not less than seven years' standing, and not being Members of Parliament, or holding any office or place of profit under the Crown, other than that of a recorder of any city or borough, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by warrant under her royal sign manual, to appoint the said persons to be commissioners for the purpose of making inquiry into the existence of such corrupt practices; and in case any of the commissioners so appointed die, resign, or become incapable to act, it shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing commissioners or commissioner to act in such inquiry as if they or he had been solely appointed to be commissioners or a sole commissioner for the purposes of such inquiry, and (as to such sole commissioner) as if this Act had authorised the appointment of a sole commissioner; and all the provisions of this Act concerning the commissioners appointed to make any such inquiry shall be taken to apply to such surviving or continuing commissioner or commissioners.

2. Commissioners to be sworn.—Every commissioner appointed in pursuance of this Act shall, before beginning to act in the execution of this Act, take the following oath (that is to say),

"I, A. B., do swear, that I will truly and faithfully execute the powers and trusts vested in me by an Act intituled [here insert the title of the Act], according to the best of my knowledge and judgment. So help me God."

And every such commissioner appointed in England or Ireland shall take such oath before a Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or a Baron of the Court of Exchequer, in England or Ireland respectively; and every such commissioner appointed in Scotland shall take such oath before a Judge of the Court of Session in Scotland.

3. Secretary and clerks to be appointed.—It shall be lawful for any commissioners appointed under this Act to appoint, and at their pleasure to dismiss, a secretary, and so many clerks, messengers, and officers as shall be thought necessary by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, for the purpose of conducting the inquiry to be made by them, and to pay to such secretary, clerks, messengers, and officers such salaries and allowances as shall be thought reasonable by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

4. Place of meeting.—The commissioners appointed under this Act to make inquiry as aforesaid in relation to any county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place, shall, upon their appointment, or within a reasonable time afterwards, go to such county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place, and shall from time to time hold meetings for the purposes of such inquiry at some convenient place within the same, or within ten miles thereof, and shall have power to adjourn such meetings from time to time, and from any one place to any other place within such county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place, or within ten miles thereof, as to them may seem expedient; and such commissioners shall give notice of their appointment, and of the time and place of holding their first meeting, by publishing the same in some newspaper in general circulation in such county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place, or the neighbourhood thereof: Provided always, that such commissioners shall not adjourn the inquiry for any period exceeding one week, without the consent and approbation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

5. Commissioners may hold meetings in London and Westminster.—Provided also, That it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, with such consent and approbation as aforesaid, to hold meetings of the said commissioners in the cities of London or Westminster, and to adjourn the same from time to time, as they may deem fit.

6. Inquiry by the commissioners.—Such commissioners shall, by such lawful means as to them appear best, with a view to the discovery of the truth, inquire into the manner in which the election in relation to which such committee as aforesaid may have reported to the House of Commons, or where the report of such committee has referred to two or more elections, the latest of such elections, has been conducted, and whether any corrupt practices have been committed at such election, and if so, whether by way of the gift or loan or the promise of the gift or loan of any sum of money or other valuable consideration to any voter or voters, or to any other person or persons on his or their behalf, for the promise or the giving of his or their vote or votes, or for his or their refraining or promising to refrain from giving his or their vote or votes, at such election, or for his or their procuring or undertaking to procure the votes of other electors at such election, or whether by the payment of any sum of money or loan or other valuable consideration whatsoever to any voter, or to any other person on his behalf, before, during, or after the termination of such election, by way of head money, or in compliance with any usage or custom in the county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place to which the inquiry relates, or how otherwise, or whether any sum of money or other valuable consideration whatsoever has been paid to any voter, or to any other person on his behalf, after the termination of such election, as a reward for giving or for having refrained from giving his vote at such election; and in case such commissioners find that corrupt practices have been committed at the election into which they are hereinbefore authorised to inquire, it shall be lawful for them to make the like inquiries concerning the latest previous election for the same county, division of a county, city, borough, university or place; and upon their finding corrupt practices to have been committed at that election it shall be lawful for them to make the like inquiries concerning the election immediately previous thereto for such county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place, and so in like manner from election to election, as far back as they may think fit; but where upon inquiry as aforesaid concerning any election such commissioners do not find that corrupt practices have been committed thereat, they shall not inquire concerning any previous election; and such commissioners shall from time to time report to her Majesty the evidence taken by them, and what they find concerning the premises, and especially such commissioners shall report with respect to each election the names of all persons whom they find to have been guilty of corrupt practice at such election, and as well of those who have given bribes for the purchase or for the purpose of purchasing the votes of others as of those who have themselves received money or any other valuable consideration for having given or having refrained from giving, or for the purpose of inducing them to give or to refrain from giving their votes at such election, and also the names of all persons whom they find to have given to others, or to have received themselves, payments by way of head money, or as a reward for giving or refraining from giving their votes at such election, and all other things whereby in the opinion of the said commissioners the truth may be better known touching the premises.

7. Reports to be laid before Parliament.—Every report which such commissioners make to her Majesty in pursuance of this Act shall be laid before Parliament within one calendar month next after such report is made, if Parliament be then sitting; or if Parliament be not then sitting, then within one calendar month next after the then next meeting of Parliament.

8. Power to send for persons and papers.—It shall be lawful for such commissioners, by a summons under their hands and seals, or under the hand and seal of any one of them, to require the attendance before them, at a place and time to be mentioned in the summons, which time shall be a reasonable time from the date of such summons, of any persons whomsoever whose evidence, in the judgment of such commissioners or commissioner, may be material to the subject-matter of the inquiry to be made by such commissioners, and to require all persons to bring before them such books, papers, deeds, and writings, as to such commissioners or commissioner appear necessary for arriving at the truth of the things to be inquired into by them under this Act; all which persons shall attend such commissioners, and shall answer all questions put to them by such commissioners touching the matters to be inquired into by them, and shall produce all books, papers, deeds, and writings required of them, and in their custody or under their control, according to the tenor of the summons: provided always, that no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by such commissioner shall, except in cases of indictment for perjury committed in such answers, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, civil or criminal.

9. Persons implicated in corrupt practices who may be examined, and shall make a faithful discovery, indemnified.—For the more effectually prosecuting any inquiry under this Act, every person who has been engaged in any corrupt practice at or connected with any election of members or a member to serve in Parliament for any county, division of a county, city, borough, university, or place to which any inquiry under this Act relates, and who is examined as a witness, and gives evidence touching such corrupt practice before the commissioners appointed under this Act to make such inquiry, and who, upon such examination, makes a true discovery to the best of his knowledge touching all things to which he is so examined, shall be freed from all penal actions, forfeitures, punishments, disabilities, and incapacities, and all criminal prosecutions to which he may have been or may become liable or subject at the suit of her Majesty, her heirs or successors, or any other person, for anything done by such person or persons in respect of such corrupt practice; and no person shall be excused from answering any question put to him by such commissioners on the ground of any privilege, or on the ground that the answer to such question will tend to criminate such person.

10. Witnesses examined not to be indemnified unless they shall have a certificate from the commissioners.—Where any witness is so examined as aforesaid, such witness shall not be indemnified under this Act unless he receive from such commissioners a certificate in writing under their hands, stating that such witness has, upon his examination, made a true disclosure touching all things to which he has been so examined; and if any action, information, or indictment be at any time pending in any court against any person so examined as a witness in manner above mentioned, for any corrupt practice at any election to which the inquiry made by such commissioners had reference, such court shall, on the production and proof of such certificate, stay the proceedings in any such action, information, or indictment, and may, in its discretion, award to such person such costs as he may have been put to by such action, information, or indictment.

11. Commissioners to examine on oath, &c.—It shall be lawful for any such commissioners, or one of them, to administer an oath, or an affirmation where an affirmation would be admitted in a Court of Justice on the ground of religious scruples, to all persons who are examined before them touching the things to be inquired into by them under this Act.

12. Penalty for non-attendance, or refusing to give evidence.—If any person on whom any summons shall have been served, by the delivery thereof to him or by the leaving thereof at his usual place of abode, fail to appear before the said commissioners at the time and place specified in such summons, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to certify such default under their hands and seals, or under the hand and seal of any one of them, to any of her Majesty's Superior Courts in England or Ireland or to the Court of Session in Scotland, or to the Lord Ordinary on the bills in the said Court, as the case may be; and thereupon such Court or Judge shall proceed against the person so failing to attend, in the same manner as if the said person had failed to obey any writ of subpœna, or any process issuing out of the said Court; and if any person so summoned to attend as aforesaid, and having appeared before the said commissioners, shall refuse to be sworn, or to make answer to such questions as are put to him touching the matters in question by the said commissioners, or to produce and shew to the said commissioners any papers, books, deeds, or writings being in his possession or under his control, which the commissioners may deem necessary to be produced; or if any person shall be guilty of any contempt of the said commissioners or their office, the said commissioners shall have such and the same powers to be exercised in the same way as any judge of any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of England or Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland, sitting under any commission, may now by law exercise in that behalf; and all headboroughs, gaolers, constables, and bailiffs shall and they are required to give their aid and assistance to the said commissioners in the execution of their office.

13. Penalty for false swearing, &c.—Every person who, upon examination upon oath or affirmation before any commissioners to be appointed under this Act, wilfully gives false evidence, shall be liable to the pains and penalties of perjury.

14. Expenses of witnesses.—The said commissioners shall have power, if they deem fit, to award to any witness summoned to appear before them a reasonable sum for his or her travelling expenses, and for his or her maintenance according to a scale to be determined and approved of by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and the said commissioners shall certify to the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury the names of the said witnesses, together with the sums allowed to each, and the said commissioners shall pay to the said witnesses the said sums so allowed as aforesaid, out of any money which may be provided by Parliament for the purposes of the said commission.

15. Expenses of the inquiry.—It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to make an order for the payment of the necessary expenses of any inquiry under this Act; and every commissioner to be appointed under this Act shall be paid, at the conclusion of the inquiry, over and above his travelling and other expenses, such sum as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury think fit; and any commissioners so appointed shall, after the termination of their last sitting, and after they have made their report to her Majesty, as hereinbefore directed, lay or cause to be laid before the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury a statement of the number of days they have been actually employed in the inquiry made by them, together with an account of the travelling and other expenses of each of such commissioners; and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall make an order for the payment to each commissioner of the sum which the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall so think fit to be paid to him, and in respect of his travelling and other expenses, which said payments shall be made out of any money which may be provided by Parliament for that purpose.

16. Protection of commissioners.—That the commissioners shall have such and the like protection and privileges, in case of any action brought against them for any act done, or omitted to be done, in the execution of their duty, as is now by law given by any Act or Acts now or hereafter to be in force to justices acting in the execution of their office.

17. Limitation of actions.—No action shall be brought against any commissioners appointed under this Act, or any other person whomsoever, for anything done in the execution of this Act, unless such action be brought within six calendar months next after the doing of such thing.

GAME CERTIFICATES—RABBITS.

With reference to 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, sched. L, can your professional readers point out any case deciding that a gentleman may alone, under a written direction or authority from the owner or tenant of land, take or destroy rabbits thereon (as under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 29, he may hares by virtue of an annually registered authority) in the personal absence of such owner or tenant, without subjecting himself to game certificate duty? THE MILITIA.

The East Riding.—The whole of the volunteering militia force in the Hull district appeared for one day this week, to go through the usual legal form of attestation before the magistrates of the Hull Bench. The "force" consisted of one person only; and we may take this occurrence to be a fair example of the absolute failure of the scheme upon which it may be said the present ministry attained office. Difficulties unforeseen and unprovided for have, in fact, arisen, which bid fair to render the volunteering project perfectly nugatory. Besides the immediate effect of a large demand for labour in more productive and legitimate occupations than that of playing at soldiers, we have the operation of a newly-discovered obstacle to the embodiment of a national corps of volunteers. It consists of the peculiar provisoes inserted in the rules of societies established for the relief of members in case of sickness, denying such relief to persons who may enter either the regular army, the police, or the militia force. The members of such benefit clubs constitute the mass from whom it was expected that the volunteer levy would be obtained; and the obvious disadvantage much more than out-balancing the very meagre inducement offered in the shape of pay, has no doubt caused the failure, so far as voluntary enlistment into the militia is concerned. Clubs or societies, such as we allude to, will, through their officers, devise means of meeting the difficulty, by equalising, so to speak, the rates of insurance against risk; but so long as the individual disadvantage exists—and it cannot be destroyed—it makes one of the most formidable difficulties to the establishment of a permanent militia force.

West Essex.—The enrolling of volunteers for this corps proceeds with more success than was at one period anticipated, up to the present time 38 having been attested in the Chelmsford division, and 27 in that of Dengie; and 100 of the men have now been raised. What will be the total number required for the regiment is as yet uncertain. The number, 1,049 men, applies to the whole county, the authorities being directed to raise that number for both regiments, but in what proportion these will be divided has not yet been finally decided on. In reference to the arrangement that has been made as to the 6*l.* bounty, the reason for this and for not paying it all down at once is apparent enough, for there is too much cause to fear that many of the men, having obtained the whole of the money, would be found missing when the muster roll was called for training; but it is not improbable that if a guinea were paid on attestation, and the 10s. transferred to the last year of service, it would much facilitate the process of enrolment. It should be known that the 5s. for bringing in a volunteer is payable to any person as well as the constable, and in cases where recruits have induced companions to join them as comrades in the corps, and have brought them in, they have received the money.

Bristol.—Only one volunteer for the militia has appeared at Bristol; at Southampton there were two.

City of London.—On Tuesday, the aldermen, deputies, and common-councilmen of the City assembled within their respective wards, for the purpose of providing the required number of men for the city of London royal regiment of militia, in compliance with the orders issued by the Court of Lieutenancy, and also to make a return of those volunteers who have been approved of and attested. The aldermen presided at their respective wardmotes. Notwithstanding that recruits are eligible (subject to the approval of the Secretary-at-War) up to the age of forty-five, and of the height of five feet three inches, the recruiting for this service proceeds very slowly; and it is a singular fact that up to the present time not one freeman has enlisted, and comparatively few persons who reside in the City have joined the corps; and although the staff of the regiment in Bunhill-row, and the various ward officers, are indefatigable in their exertions to obtain recruits, it is doubtful when the number (600) will be made up.

Wales.—General meetings of the lieutenants of the various Welsh counties have been held, and the customary steps taken for the enrolment of the various quotas of men for each county. In Carmarthenshire no great difficulty is expected in procuring a sufficient number of men as volunteers. In Flintshire, however, great disinclination has been manifested against volunteering, a fact which may be traced to the harvest operations having given full work to the labourers. Now that agricultural operations are not so pressing, it is deemed that volunteers will be more plentiful. No fewer than 670 men are required for the county of Glamorgan, for the raising of which number the ballot will be necessary, as the iron trade and its adjunct the coal trade, are in full activity, and labour is not over-abundant.

Lancashire.—Misstatements having crept into the newspapers relative to the militia establishment, we find upon enrolment for the 2nd Lancashire (the Liverpool) regiment is going forward as rapidly and as satisfactorily as possible. The enrolment commenced in Liverpool on the 4th inst. and up to the 18th the number actually enrolled was 601. The number examined by the medical inspector was 746, of whom 145 were rejected. At Prescott, on the 17th and 18th inst. 191 volunteers were enrolled; many of these are labourers at Knowsley, and to whom Lord Derby has promised half-wages during the militia training. It is expected that the present week will furnish, voluntarily, the complement for this district.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

A case of some importance to the owners of land abutting on a projected line of railway, was tried at Nisi Prius before Cresswell, J. at Stafford Assizes. (Doe dem. Armistead v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 374.) It was a question on the construction of that part of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, which defines the powers of railway companies to take land. The local Act for the formation of a railway empowered the company to enter upon, take, and use such lands as were delineated and described in the books of reference for the purposes of the railway. The company having taken possession of land under the 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 85 (the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, which was incorporated with their special Act), the powers of which are confined to such lands as are required to be purchased or used for the purposes and under the powers of that or special Acts, it was held by Cresswell, J. that the right of the company to take possession of land necessary for the railway, under the above specified provisions, was not confined to land without which the railway could not be constructed, but extended to such land as was reasonably necessary for the advantageous use of the railway; and the question what land was reasonably necessary was for the jury, and so left to them. Cresswell, J. in his address to the jury, after referring to some decisions in the Q. B. as to the power of a company to take land, said—"That Court has decided every point but the one, whether the land is necessary for the railway. The company has the right to take the land described in the book of reference, but has only power to take what is necessary for the railway. The word 'necessary' does not mean that without which the railway cannot be constructed from A. to B. It extends to such land as is reasonably necessary for the advantageous use of the railway. For instance, houses, sidings, and standings for carriages are reasonably necessary, although not absolutely necessary. Therefore I advise you to consider the question with reference to what you think is reasonably required for the advantageous use of railways. This question cannot be judged of by a person who knows nothing of the intentions of the company, but the engineer tells you positively the land is required for sidings and buildings for carriages. It is true it has not been yet applied to those purposes, but the company had no sooner taken possession of the land than the action was commenced. That seems to me to be a clear answer why they have not hitherto used it. The question you have to consider is, whether you think these two roods and six perches of land was land that the company would reasonably require for the use of their railway."

Another point decided in the same case is reviewed under its proper heading in another column.

WINDING UP.

The National Land Scheme.—The inquiry directed by the Court of Chancery under the Act of Parliament for winding up and disposing of the estates of this company, terminated on Tuesday, so far as regards the first estate located under the title of O'Connorville. The proceedings were directed to the purpose of fixing the future rents to be paid by the allottees in possession, who had established their titles, and with the view also of assessing the aggregate value of the estate for public auction. The result of the inquiry on this point is important, involving as it does the material question, as to whether the present class of occupants can remain upon the soil, and so still continue to concentre themselves upon the settlement, or whether they will have to make way for a different class of persons. The valuations made by Mr. Woodthorpe, surveyor, for Mr. Goodchap, the official manager, assisted by Mr. Roxburgh, assessor, and Mr. J. Tucker, his solicitor, were upon the principle defined by the Act of Parliament, which directs that the allottees shall be entitled to their respective allotments, subject to the payment to the company and their assigns, of a perpetual fee farm rent-charge for the allotment, to be fixed by the official manager, and calculated according to the actual value of the allotment for occupation at the time of fixing the rent. Proceeding on this principle the two-acre allotments were valued at a rent of 6*l.* 12s.; the three-acre allotments at 9*l.* 5s.; and the four-acre allotments at from 10*l.* 10s. to 11*l.* 10s. The valuations made by Mr. Roche and Mr. Caffall, on behalf of the allottees, were respectively 4*l.* 12s. for the two-acre allotments; 6*l.* 13s. for the three-acre allotments; and 8*l.* 4s. to 9*l.* 2s. for the four-acre allotments. Several of the allottees were examined on the subject, and in their evidence stated as the result of three or four years' experiment, that no one could cultivate a two-acre allotment and pay more than 2*l.* per acre; that it would be impossible to pay the rent intended to be imposed, and that when the rent-charges of 6*l.* 12s. came to be sold in the market they would not realise 4*l.* It was contended on behalf of the allottees, that the value assessible in respect of occupation depended not on the fertility of the land only, but upon its particular situation; and, in the present case, the estate was situated at a distance from any market town, and in an altogether isolated district, and there was no source independent of the land, of an indifferent quality in itself, from which the occupants would receive benefit or profit, neither was there any demand on the neighbouring farms for their services. This being the case, the value, it was argued, for occupation should be determined by ascertaining if the produce of the land, after maintaining the labour necessary for producing and bringing it to market, yielded any and what profit to the cultivator, on the principle propounded by Adam Smith, "that rent, considered as the price paid for the use of land, is naturally the highest the tenant can afford to pay in the actual circumstances of the land." The experience derived from the experimental working of the O'Connorville system of land labour and allotments went to shew that the produce of the land, after maintaining the labour for bringing it to market, yielded little or no profit, and that the land did not produce a greater quantity of food than was sufficient to maintain the labour necessary for bringing it to market, and that even if there is any surplus it is not more than sufficient to replace the stock employed in the labour. After considerable discussion, the official manager and assessor fixed the future rents payable at the valuation of their assessor, with permission to the parties to appeal. In dealing with the question of "back rent," as it is termed—that is to say, rent not paid by the present occupiers, considerable allowances, tantamount almost to a remittance of the rents in several cases, were made. Had the back rents been enforced, it was not thought probable they would be paid, and the only alternative would have been the ejectment of the defaulters.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Several cases upon the construction of wills and other points of interest in equity were reported in our last two numbers. In Re Barton's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 362, the interest of a sum of money was bequeathed to A. for life, and after her death, the capital was given amongst B. C. D. and E. in such a manner as made them equally joint tenants. B. married, and her husband became bankrupt. She died, and subsequently A. the tenant for life, died. It was held by Vice-Chancellor Turner, on a division of the fund, that C. D. and E. the other surviving joint-tenants were entitled, in preference to the assignees of the husband of B. who had become bankrupt. A curious case is Blundell v. Gladstone, 19 Law T. Rep. 354. The Court there admitted evidence to throw light upon a latent ambiguity in testator's will. A testator having two farms, A. and B. in C. both in the occupation of the same tenant, D. by his will made a general devise of all his real estates (except the hereditaments thereinafter particularly devised), including all estates vested in him upon trust, or by way of mortgage, to trustees, their heirs and assigns; nevertheless as to such trust and mortgage estates, subject to the subsisting trusts and equity, or right of redemption thereof. In a subsequent part of the will, the said testator devised his farm with the appurtenances in C. in the possession of D. unto the Rev. T. R. in fee. Evidence was admitted which shewed that both by the testator's ancestor and himself it was considered that B. one of the farms in C. was held upon trust for the Roman Catholic priest for the time being at L. It was held by Lord Chancellor Truro, reversing the decision of the late Vice-Chancellor of England, that as the testator considered he held the estate B. upon the trusts before-mentioned, he must be taken to have intended to devise estate B. to the trustees as a trust estate, and that it was immaterial whether the trusts were valid or invalid; and that estate A. (as being excepted from the former devise) was intended to be devised to the Rev. T. R. who, having died in the testator's lifetime, it lapsed for the benefit of the testator's heirs-at-law.

In Peard v. Kekewich, 19 Law T. Rep. 360, several questions as to construction, accumulation, power of appointment, and the divesting of interests, found solution. S. P. by his will, gave and devised certain property to G. P. for life, remainder to such of G. P.'s children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment remainder to the children equally as tenants in common in tail. G. P. by his will bequeathed, devised, and appointed to trustees in trust for his eldest son G. S. P. his heirs, executors, &c. to be conveyed, assigned, and assured to him when and as he should attain the age of twenty-three; and if he should die before twenty-one, then to the use of the second, third, &c. son of G. P. in tail, with remainder over. He then directed the payment out of the rents of annuities for the benefit of his wife and children, and subject thereto, to invest the residue of the rents and profits in government or real securities, to accumulate, and also "to accumulate the accumulations in like manner until his son G. S. P. (who was born at the death of S. P.), or &c. should attain the age of twenty-three, and then to pay, assign, and make over all such securities and accumulations to G. S. P. &c. for his own absolute use and benefit." It was held by the MASTER of the ROLLS that the will of G. P. was a good exercise of the power of appointment created by the will of S. P. That G. S. P. took an estate in fee, liable to be divested in case of his death under twenty-one. That the accumulation directed by G. P. in favour of G. S. P. who was born at the death of S. P. or such other son as should attain twenty-three, was valid as to G. S. P. But the Court thought such a trust for sons not in esse at the time of the creation of the power would not be valid.

A curious question, and one not likely to arise frequently, was considered in Edlestone v. Collins, 19 Law T. Rep. 371. The point there raised was, whether a conditional surrender of copyhold property of inheritance, belonging to a married woman, made by her and her husband, the acknowledgment having been taken, after the examination of the lady, by a deputy-steward who was an infant, was valid. It was held by Vice-Chancellor TURNER, that the officer being ministerial, and not judicial, the surrender was good. A case deserving attention, where a point was settled as to marshalling assets, is reported in Robinson v. Geldard, 19 Law T. Rep. 365. It was there held on appeal from a judgment of the late VICE-CHANCELLOR of ENGLAND, that although according to general rule personalty savouring of realty and pure personalty, will not be marshalled so as to throw the general legacies on the former, and to leave the latter for the payment of the charitable legacies, if the testator shews a clear intention to give priority to the charitable legacies with reference to the pure personalty, the Court will give effect to such intention.

Another question as to which takes precedence as a charge on pure personalty, charitable or general legacies, was decided in the same case. The testator gave legacies to charities to be raised and paid out of such of his ready money, goods, and personal effects as he might or could by law charge with the payment of the same; and he gave other legacies for charitable purposes. The LORD CHANCELLOR held, reversing the decree of the Court below, that the charitable legacies were a primary charge on the pure personalty, in preference to the general legacies.

THE LAW OF MORTMAIN.

THE select committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider the policy of extending the Law of Mortmain, so as to include personal estate, and generally whether any alteration should be made in the law as it affects testamentary or other dispositions in favour of religious, charitable, or permanent objects, have presented the following report:—

Your committee have, in the last and present sessions of Parliament, examined several witnesses of different positions in life, and belonging to various religious communities, with the view of obtaining full information concerning the subject of inquiry referred to them for investigation. Your committee have also had before them a report made in the year 1844, on the same subject, by a select committee of the House of Commons, together with the evidence that was taken upon that occasion. It will be found on reference to that report that not only were the origin and progress of the law of mortmain in England explained at that time by witnesses of great learning and ability, but that also the law on this and kindred subjects in other parts of the empire, and in many foreign countries, was submitted to a careful and elaborate inquiry.

Before making any suggestion for a specific alteration of the law, or answering the particular question referred to your committee, namely, whether it be expedient that the law of mortmain should be extended so that it should include personal estate, it will be convenient to state what are the material provisions now existing upon the subject. With this object, and to render the past legislation intelligible, attention must first be directed to the distinction which exists between the word "mortmain," in its original and technical meaning, and the same word in its modern and popular acceptation. The strict meaning of the word "mortmain" is the conveyance of lands to a corporation having a perpetual succession and existence. The popular meaning of the word is the vesting of land or other property either in a corporation or in individuals, in such a form as that the produce or beneficial interest becomes permanently applicable to religious or charitable objects.

When land is conveyed to a corporation it ceases to be subject to the ordinary laws of devise and descent, because the corporation, the legal owner, is an undying body, intended in its original constitution to last for ever. Thus the lands of such religious houses as existed in former times, of a municipal corporation, or of an incorporated railway company, continue in the same legal ownership without devolution from individual to individual. This is the original application of the word "mortmain."

Where, however, lands are given to individual trustees, to be held by them upon charitable or religious uses, the legal ownership is subject to continued change, either when new trustees are appointed and the land is conveyed to them, or when by the deaths of trustees it descends upon their heirs or survives to their co-trustees. In gifts of this nature a Court of Equity fixes upon the produce or beneficial interest of the lands, and compels the legal owners, whosoever they may be, to apply it to the religious or charitable purposes to which it was devoted, so that in these cases, not strictly of mortmain, but of mortmain in its popular signification, the objects to which the land is applied remain fixed and unchangeable, though the legal holders are subject to alteration. This distinction between the original and the present meaning of the word "mortmain" may appear to be in some respects rather one of form than of substance, but it will be found to enter materially into the law of the subject, and to be necessary for a correct understanding of the statutes now in force.

The ancient statutes which prohibit the alienation of land to corporations, are separate and distinct from the more modern Acts which apply to the vesting of land in trustees for charitable purposes, and it will be convenient first to consider the law arising under the former class of Acts before proceeding to the more important questions which arise under the modern statutes.

In the early periods of the history of the country the practice of giving land to trustees was not known, and the only mode by which at that time the produce of land could be made permanently applicable to a perpetual charitable or religious object was, by vesting the land in a religious house or other corporate body. To prevent the practice of giving lands to religious houses or other corporate bodies, there are a series of statutes, commencing with Magna Charta, and continuing down to the time of the Reformation, either prohibiting or placing various restrictions upon such alienations in mortmain These statutes are, many of them, quite obsolete, and it is not now necessary to refer to them further than to say, that their general effect is that land cannot be vested in a corporation, except by license from the Crown, or under the power of the particular Act by which the corporation is created. By the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 33, the Crown possesses a general power to confer licences upon corporations to hold lands in mortmain. Moreover in Acts of Parliament passed for the purpose of creating corporations either for trade or for any great work, such as railroads, dock, canals, and a variety of other purposes, it is the practice to permit a certain limited quantity of land to be held in mortmain.

With reference to those statutes which prohibit or place restrictions upon the vesting of land in corporate bodies, some points of practical importance have been brought before the notice of your committee, wherein an improvement of the law might be effected. It is expedient to dispose of these in the first instance. On this point, your committee would refer to the evidence of Mr. Barber, the secretary to the Chancery Commission, which will be found at page 336. It appears from his statement that there are two defects in the law for which a remedy ought to be provided.

In the first place, it is doubtful whether such trading bodies as happen to be incorporated can take any valid security upon land, unless they are expressly empowered so to do by Act of Parliament. For instance, in a case that occurred in practice, doubts were entertained whether a Scotch corporation could advance money upon the security of railway mortgages, and other property of that description. The doubt arose under the statute 15 Rich. 2, c. 5, which is one of the old statutes that prohibited alienations in mortmain according to the strict meaning of the word. There does not appear to be any necessity for such a restriction upon trading corporations, and your committee are of opinion that the law should be made clear upon this subject. The other defect in the law on this head, pointed out in Mr. Barber's evidence, concerning which there is no doubt, is more important. It is this. Trading corporations, when they have legally advanced money upon land, are unable to realise their security by foreclosure, or otherwise acquiring possession of the land itself, without danger of immediate absolute forfeiture to the Crown. A case of this kind occurred some years ago, which may be mentioned as an instance of the evil. The University Assurance Society was incorporated by letters patent on the 28th of June, 7 Geo. 4, with power to hold lands not exceeding the value of 1,000*l.* a year. The corporation, having lent money on mortgage of lands exceeding that sum in value, and having received an intimation that they had thereby exceeded their powers, themselves brought their case before the law officers of the Crown, and thereupon a commission was issued to five barristers, for the purpose of inquiring into the subject. An inquisition was taken under that commission, and it was found that the corporation had exceeded their power, and taken on mortgage lands of a much greater value than 1,000*l.* a year. The lands were declared forfeited, and passed into the hands of the Crown. An Act of Parliament was subsequently obtained, by which the mortgages were confirmed, and the corporation allowed to lend money on mortgage, with the restriction, however, that if they came into possession as mortgagees, the land should be sold and the money realised within a certain period. It appears from Mr. Barber's evidence, that a similar privilege has been specially conferred by Act of Parliament in other cases, and that the period of five years has been taken as the time during which a corporation should have the power of selling land acquired by them in any suit for foreclosure or other proceeding for the enforcement of a security for money.

Your committee are of opinion that privileges of this description should be made general, and should not be confined to particular trading corporations. They therefore think that the statute 15 Rich. 2, c. 5, should be repealed, and its material provisions re-enacted with reference to modern times, in such form as that, first, corporations should without doubt be able to advance money on the security of real estates; secondly, that they should be compelled to sell or dispose of land coming into their actual possession upon the realisation of their securities within a certain limited period, and that subject to this restriction they should be at liberty to adopt the same remedies as private individuals to enforce the repayment of money they had advanced.

Before concluding this branch of the subject it may be observed that there is this distinction between a void gift in mortmain under these ancient statutes, and a void gift to a religious or charitable use under the more modern Act, namely, that in the former case, that is, of a corporation illegally attempting to acquire land, a title accrues to the Crown, which takes the property as forfeited; whereas in the case of a void gift to individual trustees for a charitable or religious use, the Crown acquires no right, but the heir, or next of kin of the testator, or the donor himself, as the case may be, becomes entitled to the property.

It may be well here to mention the 43rd Eliz. c. 4, which, although it did not, in direct terms, either impose or take off any restriction upon the alienation of land to charitable purposes, yet had an effect upon the decisions of the Courts of Law, and was considered to shew a tendency in the Legislature in favour of charities. The title of the Act, and the principal object in view, was to redress the misemployment of real or personal estate given to charitable uses. The construction put upon this Act by the Courts authorised appointments to corporations for charitable uses, and even enlarged the devising capacity of testators by rendering valid devises to those uses by a tenant in tail, and also by a copyholder without a previous surrender to the use of a will.

Your committee will now proceed to consider the more important branch of the inquiry submitted to them, namely, the prohibitions or restraints imposed upon alienations of property to religious or charitable purposes. It appears that the 9th Geo. 2, c. 36, is, for all practical purposes, the first statute which affects gifts of this description, and that this statute, though in some respects modified by subsequent legislation, is the modern law upon the subject. It is therefore desirable, in the first instance, to state its provisions with accuracy.

The preamble of the statute is as follows:—"Whereas gifts or alienations of lands, tenements, or hereditaments in mortmain are prohibited or restrained by Magna Charta and divers other wholesome laws, as prejudicial to and against the common utility; nevertheless this public mischief has of late greatly increased by many large and improvident alienations or dispositions made by languishing or dying persons, or by other persons, to uses called charitable uses, to take place after their deaths, to the disherison of their lawful heirs."

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Whilst reading your valuable reports not long ago, I met with a decision, to the effect that the words "by and at the expense of the purchaser," in a condition of sale relating to the production of deeds, threw upon him the whole expense not only of preparing, but also of perusal by the covenantor's solicitor, and execution by the covenantor himself of the covenant to produce. A similar point having presented itself in my practice, I am wishful to refer to this case, but cannot, because I have forgotten its title. Can any of your readers refer me to it? If not, can they inform me of any other case to that effect, or what is the usual practice under similar conditions of sale? The words being "Every deed of covenant to be entered into in pursuance of this condition shall be prepared by and at the expense of the person or persons requiring the same."

NEW WILLS ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I fear it will be found that the new Act, 15 Vict. c. 24, for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to the execution of Wills, is totally inoperative as regards the wills of females.

In reading up the important statutes of last session, as a long-vacation exercise, it has struck me that such is the case, the interpretation clause of the Act in question being confined to the word "will," while the material enacting clause (the 1st) speaks of the wills of males only.

Surely it cannot be contended that the words "every will" made use of in the first and second sections supply the omissions I have indicated.

I am sir, yours, &c.

COUNTY COURTS.

CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

WE have received on application the following statement from the gentleman who reported the case of Norman v. Marchant, 21 L. J. Rep. 256, Ex.:—"The head-note, the argument, and the judgment shew that the decision only was that the original contract was a material part of the cause of action, and being signed within the jurisdiction of the County Court within which the defendant dwelt, the cause of action arose in some material point within the jurisdiction of that County Court. For this the report may be relied on as authority. The statement that the plaintiff and defendant resided more than twenty miles apart was improperly inserted. The error will be corrected in the forthcoming number of the Law Journal."

ADVOCACY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In reference to the letter of Mr. Field Roberts contained in your publication of the 21st ulto. he will be surprised to learn that it is a common rule in this part of the world to evade the Act he refers to, by getting the client to retain an Advocate-attorney (resident perhaps thirty miles off), and for the latter to employ the real and ordinary attorney of the client as his agent to do all the work except the talking in court. In my humble opinion the clause referred to is one of the many abortions of modern legislation. Suppose a client chose to retain four or ten attorneys (as counsel are sometimes retained) in his cause, half of them talkers, and the rest plodding chamber lawyers, where is the law to prevent him?

ATTORNEYS' COSTS IN COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—With reference to the question of costs in the County Courts, permit me to suggest, through you, that assistance may be derived by referring to the schedule of costs contained in the 11 & 15 Vict. c. 57, being the Irish Civil Bill Act. I do not observe in it any costs in interpleader cases, which are perhaps the most difficult and responsible which fall within an Attorney's province.

ASSISTANT CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I was glad to see the letter of "An Assistant Clerk," in your last week's LAW TIMES, as it is bringing a grievance to light, of which the promoters of the new County Courts are quite unaware. The case is by no means a solitary one, and there is no doubt every one will admit that a remedy should be applied. It is granted that the new County Courts are a great boon to the country, and so far from being an expense to the nation, they are, in the whole, a considerable source of revenue. But then in some districts the receipts are utterly inadequate to remunerate the parties who have to work them out. In fact, so far from being a benefit to the officers, in some places they are worked at a positive loss to the clerks out of their own private purses. It is plain that in such cases the clerks ought to be remunerated out of the surplus arising from other districts.

Hoping to see a remedy applied to this injustice,

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ANOTHER ASSISTANT CLERK.

NEW SCALE OF FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The following circular, issued with a view to furnish suggestions useful in the framing a scale of costs and charges in the County Courts, has been adopted and circulated in this neighbourhood:—

"Sir,—At a meeting holden on the evening of the 9th inst. by a few gentlemen of the legal profession, to deliberate upon what "suggestions to communicate" to the five Commissioners appointed to frame a scale of costs and charges in the County Courts as between Attorney and client and party and party, Messrs. ——— were appointed a committee to receive, collect, and revise information as to what costs and charges should be allowed, particularly with reference to cases in which members of the Profession may have been concerned, involving a considerable loss of time and expense in preparing for trial, for which no remuneration could be obtained from the losing party; also in attendances on reference by order of Court.

"A general meeting of the members of the Profession, to assist the committee, is requested for Thursday next, the 16th inst. at the Law Library, at 8 p.m.—Yours, &c."

If the same course were taken in other places, a fund of information would be obtained which would be available for many purposes besides the matter just now in hand. The course resolved upon at the within-mentioned meeting was for each attorney to write out the particulars of each case in which he had been concerned, involving a considerable loss of time in preparing for trial, whether for plaintiff or defendant, for which no costs were recoverable from the losing party; and to transmit the information, with the name of the case and before whom tried, and where, to the secretary of the five judges, in order that they might have information before them shewing the gross injustice of the present system of refusing costs for preparing for trial, &c.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Preston, Lancashire. ONE, &c.

SIR,—A circular has been issued by the secretary to the judges appointed for settling the new scale of costs in the County Courts, to the various Law Societies, asking for information to guide them in preparing the list of fees. Allow me to throw out a hint in the LAW TIMES to the various attorneys practising in the County Courts, to draw out a list of cases which have occurred in their own experience, where there has been considerable labour bestowed in preparing to try cases for either plaintiff or defendant in the County Court, giving the names of the cases, and where tried; and stating the nature of the case, and the labour bestowed; all which to be sent in to the secretary to the judges in question. I have not the slightest doubt that an amount of information would in this way be laid before the judges that would convince the most illiberal of the inadequacy of the remuneration allowed to the attorneys in preparing cases for trial in the County Courts.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Summary.

EQUITY.—A case, in which the mode of dealing with a fund paid into court for the benefit of a lunatic was settled by the LORD CHANCELLOR, is reported in Leaf v. Coles, 19 Law T. Rep. 356. In that case the dissolution of a partnership had been decreed, because of the lunacy of one of the partners, and large sums had been paid into Court to the separate account of the lunatic in respect of his share of the capital and profits of the business. The LORD CHANCELLOR, on the complete recovery of the lunatic, ordered the fund to be paid out to him. Some important points to Solicitors, for which, when reviewing the case last week, we could not find space, were decided by the MASTER of the ROLLS, in Re Geidge, 19 Law T. Rep. 359. The Solicitors' Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73) provides "that no order of course to tax a bill shall be directed after a verdict shall have been obtained, or a writ of inquiry executed in any action for the recovery of the demand of such attorney or solicitor." The Court held, that the words "writ of inquiry executed" were put in for the purpose of shewing that a mere judgment obtained by the party was not to prevent his obtaining the order of course; so that the Act provides that the order of course shall go in every case where there has either not been a verdict in a contested action or not been a writ of inquiry, where the judgment goes by default, to assess the amount of damages. That consequently, where a solicitor brought an action for a bill of costs, and obtained judgment by default, for want of a plea, and then the client obtained an order of course to tax, and there was no writ of inquiry executed, the order of course was not irregular or invalid on that account. Sed quære (for in the case of an action for debt, there is no writ of inquiry), the judgment is final. That, however, there having been previously to obtaining the order of course three several applications made to the Courts of Common Law, one of which had been granted upon terms, and afterwards abandoned, and the other two refused, that was a material circumstance which ought to have been mentioned to the officer from whom the order of course was obtained, and as it was not, the order of course must be discharged with costs. This case should be noted in PULLING'S serviceable book, "The Law of Attorneys." A point of practice, under the Trustee Act of 1850, was settled in Re Prescott's Trust, 19 Law T. Rep. 371. That was a petition by tenant for life of a fund to have a vesting order under the Trustee Act 1850. Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY said, that as the Act only provided a summary remedy, instead of the proceeding by bill; the cestuis que trust interested in the fund must be before the Court, as if the remedy had still been by bill. A case interesting to creditors, whose credits are secured by bond, is Coles v. Waters, 19 Law T. Rep. 371. A deed of composition recited the debts as simply debts, without stating whether they were simple contract debts or by specialty, rating them in proportion to the amount of debts owing to the creditors respectively. The Court held that the simple contract debts were not thereby turned into specialty debts carrying interest; and, furthermore, that those creditors whose debts were secured by bond could not receive more for principal and interest than the amount of the penalty in which the bond was taken. In Miles v. Durnford, 19 Law T. Rep. 369, A. the surviving executor of B. filed a bill to set aside a mortgage of assets made by C. the deceased executor of B. A. was also the administrator of C. It was held by the LORDS JUSTICES, that A. might, notwithstanding he filled these two characters, file a bill to set aside the deed of C.; also, that the mortgage made by C. must be considered as primâ facie good, although the money was originally advanced to him without security, and that in the absence of evidence impeaching it, the bill filed for setting it aside ought to be dismissed. A curious question as to a contract to settle a marriage portion contained in a letter was considered in Moorhouse v. Colvin, 19 Law T. Rep. 370. The statement of facts necessary to the understanding of the case is so long, that we can only here refer to it, as deserving attention. A case where the question arose whether a trust to accumulate came within the Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, is reported in Browne v. Buckton, 19 Law T. Rep. 372. The testator devised his freehold estates to trustees in trust, to accumulate the rents during the life of his niece, and on her decease to stand seised of the estates to the use of her first and other sons in tail. The Court held, that the trust for accumulation became void at the end of twenty-one years from the testator's death; that the void accumulations were undisposed of, and therefore that, as regarded the residuary personal estate of the testator, the accumulations thereof, from the period of twenty-one years after the testator's death, belonged to the personal representative of the sole next of kin of the testator at the time of his death. In the clauses for the maintenance and advancement of the children of his niece, the testator termed the provision which he had made for them sometimes "their portions," and sometimes "their portions or shares." The Court held, that such provision was not one within the meaning of the 2nd section of the Thellusson Act, and did not prevent the operation of the 1st section of that Act.

COMMON LAW.—Touching the admissibility of letters written by a director of a railway company to the lessor of the plaintiff in an action of ejectment brought against the company, there is the case of Doe dem. Armistead, 19 Law T. Rep. 374. That was an action of ejectment brought by a landowner o recover land taken by a railway company. A question arose, in the course of the trial, whether letters writen to the lessor of the plaintiff by one of the directors, who had executed a bond to him under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 85, were admissible in evidence against the company. It was held by CRESSWELL, J. that they were admissible. Two other points in the law of evidence were also reported last week. In Anderson v. Whalley, 19 Law T. Rep. 365, it was held by TALFOURD, J. that a ship's log written by the mate, but read by the captain, about a week after it was written, might be used by the captain to refresh his memory. And in Camfield v. Bond, 19 Law T. Rep. 365, which was an action for slander, it was held by JERVIS, C.J. that the plaintiff may give in evidence other slanderous words than those alleged in the declaration in order to shew the animus of the speaker. In the same case there was a variance between the slanderous words alleged in the declaration and those proved; the Court refused to amend the declaration, and let the case go to the jury, because the words proved were not actionable.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

ALREADY the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act has been found of great value in protecting the rights of creditors against fraudulent debtors. We have observed it put in force, in various parts of the country, with the best effect. One case is reported in our last number. (Powell v. Hayes, 19 Law T. Rep. 373.) In that case a debtor, who resided in Ireland, stated it to be his intention to leave a place in England, where he then was, in the presence of his creditor, "for Ireland and foreign parts, and to reside abroad." On affidavit of this by the debtor, a Commissioner of Bankrupts forthwith issued a warrant for his arrest. It should be remembered, that the power of issuing such a warrant is by this Act extended also to the Judges of the County Court, so as to be applicable with speed and facility all over the kingdom.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

THE chief subjects that have occupied the attention of the Society during the past year have been the removal of the distinction between the procedure of the courts of law and equity in this country; the reconstruction of the Masters' office, involving its gradual abolition; the enfranchisement of copyholds; the simplification of the transfer of land; the relations between the bar, the attorney, and the client; and the establishment of a law school, with a provision for an effective examination before granting a law degree on admission to the bar.

On the first subject—the fusion of law and equity—our special committee on law and equity procedure have presented a third report, not only recommending several measures for the immediate adoption of the Legislature, but giving the outlines of a code by means of which this great change might be effected.

The subsequent appearance of the first report of the Chancery Commissioners, and the introduction of the bills founded upon it, have afforded us the gratification of seeing not only the views, but in some cases the very words of our reports and resolutions proposed for the sanction of Parliament under the highest auspices.

We therefore trust that in procedure at least, as eventually we hope in all other respects, law and equity will soon be wholly united.

On this subject we refer with pleasure to the second visit which our Society received last autumn from its distinguished member, Mr. David Dudley Field, of New York, and to the additional evidence which he has supplied (and which has since been increased by a communication from the state of Missouri) of the satisfactory working of the conjoined courts of law and equity in America. Your council have no wish to hasten prematurely a change so extensive and important as this. They have only to express their conviction that it is as practicable and advisable in this country as it has been proved by experience to be practicable and advisable in the United States of America. They willingly accept as an instalment of justice the following opinion of the Chancery Commissioners in their first report, signed as it is by three Equity Judges, one Common Law Judge, and several eminent counsel, and statesmen not of the legal profession:—

> We have arrived at the conclusion that, without abolishing the distinction between law and equity, or blending the courts into one court of universal jurisdiction, a practical and effectual remedy for many of the evils in question may be found in such a transfer or blending of jurisdiction, coupled with such other practical amendments, as will render each Court competent to administer complete justice in the cases which fall under its cognizance.
> We think that the jurisdiction now exercised by Courts of Equity may be conferred upon Courts of Law, and that the jurisdiction now exercised by Courts of Law may be conferred upon Courts of Equity, to such an extent as to render both courts competent to administer entire justice without parties in the one court being obliged to resort to the aid of the other.

These are valuable admissions, and are surely sufficient justification to this society for introducing the great question of a fusion of law and equity in this country to the notice of the Legislature and the public.

A Bill has been since brought in to effect the alterations proposed by the Commissioners, and both in its provisions and in the debates respecting them in Parliament the principle of a fusion of jurisdictions has received great support. It was, indeed, generally admitted that its accomplishment in effect, if not in name, is not far distant. By this measure also several improvements suggested and recommended by this society as to the printing of legal proceedings, and the introduction of viva voce evidence into Courts of Equity, will become law.

With respect also to the office of Master in Chancery, we have to congratulate the Society on the introduction by the Lord Chancellor of a Bill containing provisions almost identical with those which our equity committee have recommended, and in execution of the plan reported by the Chancery Commissioners, and fully adopted by the late Government, which issued the commission. This measure will prevent the delay now arising from proceedings commenced before a Judge being referred either in whole or in part to the Master. On the 12th day of January last a resolution was carried at a meeting of this Society recommending this change, and the gradual abolition of the office of Master in Chancery, and we can only express a hope that its doom is sealed, and that a procedure so mischievous both in theory and practice is practically swept away. Although a specific resolution for the abolition of the Masters' office was only come to by the Society on the 12th of January, yet the proposition for the abolition of the Masters' office, and the completion of the whole business in a suit by the Judge, has been for many years before the Society, where it has gradually advanced in favour, and has at length proved triumphant. It is right also to say that it was much considered and much evidence adduced upon it in a committee of the House of Lords, which sat last summer, and reported the opinions as well as the other evidence of witnesses in its favour.

A Bill for the improvement of the procedure of the Common Law Courts has also passed through most of its stages. It rests on the authority of the Common Law Commissioners, and has received high professional sanction. This Bill doubtless contains many important and useful provisions, but your council are desirous of stating their opinion that the remedies proposed leave many of the evils in the procedure of the Superior Courts of Common Law still existing, and that until these are remedied the County Courts will be preferred by the suitor, who will demand, and with justice, the extension of their jurisdiction. Considering the long period allowed for the preparation of this Bill, the high authorities under whose sanction it was introduced, and the many revisions it has undergone, it was not unreasonable to expect something complete in conception and careful in execution. Some partial improvements have been made, but the leading principle—the abolition of forms of action—has been sacrificed. The Bill may be allowed to be a slight improvement, but not a permanent settlement of common law procedure. There is, moreover, a very serious defect in the execution, which will be the certain cause of endless disputes and enormous expense. In order to save a few weeks' labour to the draughtsman, it is left quite uncertain which of the innumerable statutes applying to procedure are repealed, and which are still in force. The old rules of court are also left in the same position. In order to understand the new system the practitioner must master the old, and then, after careful comparison, qualify the enactment by introducing into its construction all those principles which it does not abrogate by necessary implication. The amount of expense, uncertainty, and vexation thus introduced is incalculable. The present system, faulty as it is, is at any rate well understood. It is distressing to contemplate how much money must be spent in clearing up mere points of form before the new one can be placed in an equally satisfactory position. These considerations become yet more important when it is remembered that this new code is intended to enter into competition with the County Courts, in which the litigant is not called upon to expend one farthing for any purpose except the very merits of the suit.

Our fears may be unfounded, but there is some ground to apprehend that the new element of expense and uncertainty thus introduced without any corresponding amelioration, together with the references which may be made to the Court, amounting to as many as three-and-forty in a single suit, will finally decide in favour of the County Courts the question between central and local judicature.

The present state of the Ecclesiastical Courts loudly calls for large alteration and amendment, and your council have made a reference on this subject to a committee.

Your council have witnessed with much satisfaction the introduction of a Bill this session for the compulsory enfranchisement of copyholds, giving as well to the lord as to the tenant power to demand such enfranchisement. This Bill, after passing through the House of Commons without opposition, was referred to a select committee of the House of Lords, by whom it was carefully considered, and your council anticipate great benefit from the adoption of a measure as to which there is so general a concurrence of opinion, and which is calculated to remove a great obstacle to the cultivation of the land and to the erection of buildings. An elaborate report on this subject was lately presented by one of your committees, which gave rise to much interesting discussion. It was received by the society, and elicited a resolution affirming the advantage of a compulsory enfranchisement of copyholds. Here also this society has endeavoured to act as a pioneer to the Legislature, to discuss the legal difficulties of the subject with a view to ascertain the true principle on which the Legislature may properly and safely proceed; and again the efforts of the society have been successful.

With the subject of copyholds is connected that of the transfer of land, the copyhold tenure and its incidents frequently imposing, as is well known, a heavy tax on such transfer. On this subject, so important in all its bearings, one of your committees—the committee on the law of property—has submitted to the society a paper in which a former recommendation of the same committee for assimilating the transfer of land to that of stock has been again brought before the society. If this can be effected, it is difficult to say who would be most benefited, the owners of land by the increase of the value of their property, or the people at large by the strong motive which the prospect of possessing land would afford for greater frugality.

Your council consider that the plan proposed in the paper just mentioned is not only deserving of the utmost attention, but, as coming from an eminent and experienced solicitor, affords great hope that this difficult and most important question may be solved, and may be conducted to a practical and satisfactory result.

Little real progress has yet been made towards the establishment of a good law school, with effective examinations; the late recommendation of the inns of court your council cannot but consider as insufficient; but we trust that both the Profession and the public at large are becoming more and more alive to the necessity for such a provision, and that the heads of the inns of court are becoming more aware of the serious responsibility which rests upon them in this respect. We are glad to find the subject of legal education mentioned in the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the state of the revenues of the University of Oxford, and are gratified at seeing the opinion of this society adduced in support of a proposal by the commissioners to apply a portion of the funds of the university to imparting a knowledge of the laws of the country. We hope to see the same recommendation in the report on the University of Cambridge, and that in the course of a few years there will be at each of these seats of learning an efficient law school.

Still more do your council hope and believe that from the present inns of court will at length arise a complete and satisfactory law university, endowed with the funds originally vested in those societies for legal education, and which cannot be better devoted than to the purpose of teaching the law. Nor can your council entertain a doubt that if the benchers do not so apply these funds, their proper application will be enforced by the Legislature. Thus the law student would have an opportunity of commencing and afterwards continuing his studies under able professors, both in the Universities and in London, with all the advantages that the wealth of those bodies and of the inns of court could command. While on this subject, we would throw out the suggestion that interesting and instructive popular lectures on the laws of the country might be given at Mechanics' Institutions and other similar places. The publicity of our courts of justice, the presence of a jury of fellow-country-men, and the practice of oral examination, render our trials matters of universal interest, and several branches of the law, by means of such lectures, might be brought to the knowledge of the community which is bound to obey them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I think your correspondent of last Saturday's TIMES, will find all needful information on applying to the secretary of the society for promoting the building of baths and washhouses for the labouring classes, George Woolcott, esq. 18, Buckingham-street, Strand, who will probably know all the solicitors who have acted for the established institution; and I may mention (for the information of humane members of the profession) that a pamphlet of a very practical character for the use of those interested in the establishment of these excellent institutions in our large towns and cities, can be obtained, perhaps by post from him, at the cost of the materials of printing, &c. in about ten days from this time, as I was informed at the office.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. LEX.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

RECOVERY OF DEBTS IN THE CITY OF LONDON.—On the 29th inst. the new Act "For the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands within the City of London, and the Liberties thereof" will come into force, from which day the Acts 10 & 11 Vict. c. 71, and the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 152, will be repealed. There are 139 clauses in the Act, comprising some of the principal provisions in the County Courts Acts. From the commencement of the Act actions may be commenced for sums amounting to 50*l.* and in cases where the parties agree, actions beyond that amount may be tried. The judge of the Sheriffs' Court is to preside under this Act, and the court is to be holden at Guildhall, or where the corporation shall direct. The Act provides for the performance of the duties of clerks, bailiffs, and other officers connected with the Court. The officers may be paid by salaries instead of fees. A prison may be provided for the purposes of the Act, and money borrowed. All suits are to be by plaint. A jury of five may be summoned when required by either party. As in the County Courts Acts, an appeal is given under this Act to the Superior Courts on points of law, or the admission or rejection of evidence. Defendants may be summoned on unsatisfied judgments and committed to prison, which imprisonment is not to operate in discharge of the debts. Among the powers conferred by the Act on the city of London is one to obtain possession of small tenements, where the tenant holds over, without bringing an action of ejectment. The fees to be charged are set forth in a schedule annexed to the Act.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—A new feature in the practice of the Court of Chancery, to commence from the 1st of November next, will be the public examination of witnesses orally in the Court of Chancery when required. Evidence may be given by affidavit, and in answer to interrogatories. It is provided by the 31st section of the 15th and 16th Vict. c. 86, that all witnesses to be examined orally shall be so examined by or before one of the examiners of the Court, or by an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court, the examiner to be furnished by the plaintiff with a copy of the bill and of the answer, if any, in the cause, and such examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses so examined orally shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination, and such examination, cross-examination, and re-examination shall be conducted, as nearly as may be, in the mode now in use in courts of common law with respect to a witness about to go abroad, and not expected to be present at the trial of a cause.

THE COURT OF CHANCERY AND THE COMMON LAW COURTS.—In order to avoid the expense of sending cases from the Court of Chancery to the Common Law Courts two provisions of an important character have been inserted in the new Chancery Act, cap. 86. The 61st section states that "it shall not be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, in any cause or matter to direct a case to be stated for the opinion of any Court of Common Law, but the said Court of Chancery shall have full power to determine any questions of law which, in the judgment of the said Court of Chancery, shall be necessary to be decided previously to the decision of the equitable question at issue between the parties." And by the 62nd section it is enacted that "in cases where, according to the present practice of the Court of Chancery, such Court declines to grant equitable relief until the legal title or right of the party or parties seeking such relief shall have been established in a proceeding at law, the said Court may itself determine such title or right without requiring the parties to proceed at law to establish the same."

AFFIDAVITS.—A great improvement will take place under the new Act with respect to affidavits filed in the Court of Chancery. It is provided that every affidavit shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and as nearly as may be shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject. From the 1st of November the practice of engrossing bills on parchment is also to be discontinued, and a printed bill is to be filed instead in the Court of Chancery; and by one of the new Chancery Acts, which will shortly take effect (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), the Lord Chancellor is empowered, in consequence of the additional duties imposed on the examiners of the Court of Chancery in the viva voce examination of witnesses, to increase their salaries from the 1st November next to 1,500*l.* a year each.—Globe.

JUDGMENTS BY THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is enacted by the new Chancery Act (c. 80), that a retiring Lord Chancellor may deliver written judgments within six weeks after his resignation. It is stated that it has frequently happened that after cases have been fully heard by the Lord Chancellor in the Court of Chancery and are standing for judgment, the Lord Chancellor has delivered up the Great Seal without being able, by reason of other urgent public business, to deliver judgment therein, and much inconvenience and expense to the parties has been thereby occasioned.

INJUNCTIONS.—A new practice will shortly be adopted in the Court of Chancery with respect to injunctions. It is provided by the 58th sect. of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that the practice of the Court of Chancery with respect to injunctions for the stay of proceedings at law shall be, so far as the nature of the case will admit, assimilated to the practice of such court with respect to special injunctions generally, and such injunctions may be granted upon interlocutory applications, supported by affidavit, in like manner as other special injunctions are granted by the Court.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST EXECUTORS.—It is provided by the 45th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that it shall be lawful for any person claiming to be a creditor, or a specific pecuniary or residuary legatee or the next of kin, or some or one of the next of kin, of a deceased person, to apply for and obtain as of course without a bill or claim filed, or any other preliminary proceeding, a summons from the Master of the Rolls, or any of the Vice-Chancellors, requiring the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of such deceased person to attend before him at chambers for the purpose of shewing cause why an order for the administration of the personal estate of the deceased should not be granted.

CONVEYANCING COUNSEL.—Another feature in the new Chancery practice about to be adopted will be the appointment of conveyancing counsel. It is lawful, according to the 41st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, for the Lord Chancellor to nominate any number of conveyancing counsel, in actual practice, not less than six, who shall have practised as such for ten years at least, to be the conveyancing counsel upon whose opinion the Court, or any judge thereof, may act in the cases mentioned, and to supply such vacancies in such list from time to time, and to distribute the business among such counsel in such order and manner, as the Lord Chancellor shall deem fit. By the preceding section, the Court and judges sitting at chambers are empowered to receive and act upon the opinion of conveyancing counsel in actual practice in all cases in which, according to the present practice of the Court and the Master's office, it has been usual for the Master to require or receive the opinion and aid of conveyancing counsel. The Taxing-Master is to regulate the fees to be paid to conveyancing counsel.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

Popular Tables, arranged in a new form for ascertaining, according to the Carlisle Table of Mortality, the Value of Lifehold, Leasehold, and Church Property, Renewal Fines, the Public Funds, annual average Price of Interest on Consols from 1731 to 1851, and various interesting and useful Tables. By CHARLES M. WILLICH, Actuary to the University Life Assurance Society. London: Longmans. 1852.

AFTER an examination of the contents of this book, we unhesitatingly pronounce it one of the most serviceable and complete of the kind ever laid before the public. It furnishes in a clear and easily accessible form precisely the information most needed (and that, too, with indifferent facilities for obtaining it) by the practical man, and will be found, as a work of ready reference, equally adapted to the office or chambers of the man of business and to the library table of gentlemen. Its "getting up" is equally liberal and tasteful.

The author has endeavoured to render the various subjects of which he treats less intricate than they usually are, by a simple arrangement of the figures, shewing at once both the number of years' purchase, and the present worth of 100*l.* a-year. By this means a correct idea of the value of any property is conveyed at sight; and, if required, an exact valuation of any amount of annuity or rental may be readily extracted. Preferring the Carlisle to the Northampton Table of Mortality, as giving a closer approximation to the actual duration of human life, the author has adopted it in the calculations, whose result here appears in tables. He has supplied, at the instance of some stewards of manors, in Table 29, a desideratum long felt, shewing the fine payable for the renewal of two lives in a similar lease. Not less serviceable to those "who wish to enjoy a certain high rate of interest on their investments, while, from the state of the money market, they can only re-invest the surplus income at a low rate of interest," is Table 15, shewing the present worth of a lease, estate, or annuity of 100*l.* for a given term of years certain, supposing the purchaser to take thereout five, six, or seven per cent. as an available interest on his purchase-money advanced, while only able to re-invest the surplus beyond the available interest, so as to make three, three and a-half, four, or five per cent. in order to replace the purchase-money or capital. A variety of desirable information of a general nature, comprising amongst other matters, interest-tables, annual averages of wheat, value of tithe rent-charges, coins and currency tables, measures of extent and capacity, value of annuities chargeable with legacy duties, and examples of the charge of those duties, add to the completeness of a work which will be found fully to bear out our opinion and recommendation, and will approve its value to every buyer.

M. VECHTE'S GOODWOOD VASE.—This vase or cup, which was one of the prizes at the last Goodwood races, has attracted more attention than is usually bestowed upon mere racing cups, and the appreciation of its merits in the highest quarter in the country has resulted in a command for a fac simile reproduction by the artist. Those who feel interested in the progress of the fine arts can satisfy themselves that it is a work of no ordinary merit by going to see it at Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's, in Bond-street. The artist, M. Vechte, is a foreigner, and, though it would be invidious to compare or contrast his work with that of native artists, it may be allowable to say, that what he has produced may be usefully studied by Englishmen. The vase has the purity of the Greek school and the elaborate execution of the times of Cellini. It is altogether a very superior piece of workmanship.—Times, Sept. 23.

ASSURANCE OFFICES.

An unseemly strife is raging in the newspapers between the old and the new Assurance Offices—unseemly, because it is not decently conducted. Attacks upon the new offices come with an ill grace from the paid servants of the old offices. It looks too much like the mere abuse of rivals, and the tone of the assailants betrays too plainly a personal motive to carry much weight with the public. To be serviceable, such a discussion should have taken the shape of a calm, disinterested inquiry, apart from personalities, how far the public welfare is likely to be advantaged or endangered by the multitude of new offices that have sprung into being during the last three or four years. The subject is one of immense importance to the community, and it is right that attention should be given to it by the press; but it is not right to leave the conduct of the controversy to those who have a direct personal and pecuniary interest in the result, and who cannot, therefore, be expected to deal with the question impartially.

Standing aloof from the conflict, let us endeavour to contemplate the subject of contention, as Lawyers should, with an eye to practical results. Is the existing law defective? If so, how can it be amended?

Stripped of the accompaniments of interested malevolence, there remains enough to justify serious alarm, and to call for legislative interference. It is undoubtedly true that a vast number of new Assurance offices have been commenced [illegible] unjustifiable surprises, many of them without capital, without responsible shareholders, with directors wholly unknown to the public, or, if known, only discreditably; with officers who are in fact only the projectors of the society, and by whom and for whom the whole scheme has been concocted. The schemes themselves have nothing really new in them; they are but the old plans of assurance put forth in a different form of words. The expenses are enormous, the funds next to nothing, and the probable, nay, almost certain, result, will be the defrauding of the credulous people who trust to promising prospectuses, without making some inquiry into the characters of the promoters, and the social position of the directors.

This it is against which some legislative protection is required. The rule of caveat emptor is not applicable to the case of assurance offices. Assurance is a present payment for the purchase of something which is not to be given until a distant period, usually when the purchaser himself is dead. It does not so much affect the fortunes of the present as of future generations; the people who want protection are not the living and mature in judgment, who can protect themselves, and to whom alone the maxim of caveat emptor applies, but the unborn, the infant, the distant, the weak in mind and body. These are the parties whom an assurance affects, on whose behalf the bargain is made, and who, being unable to take care of themselves, have a right to claim the care of the Legislature.

There is another reason for subjecting Assurance Offices to some stringent supervision of the Government. They alone, of all speculations, receive everything at the present time pay it back again in futuro; hence they offer a wider margin for fraud or improvidence, greater temptation to rogues, and a more easy bait for fools, than any other form of cheating.

The only principle upon which an Assurance Office can be conducted with safety to the public and justice to the assured is sufficiently simple and intelligible. The calculations of assurance are based upon the assumption that all the premiums received are immediately invested, so as to yield interest. If this be not done, the office is unsafe; where it is done faithfully, the most entire confidence may be placed in the solvency of the Society. The expenses of establishing and conducting the business ought to be borne entirely by the subscriptions of the shareholders, in return for which they are entitled to a share of the profits. If, in any office, the expenses are paid out of premiums, and not out of the subscribed capital, there is danger to the public and injustice to the assured.

Now, all that is required for the security of the public against fraudulent or improvident Assurance Offices, is such a provision for the soundness of the scheme and the wisdom of the management, that the principle we have above described should be strictly observed.

This may be accomplished by a statute of no great difficulty or length, and we venture to suggest the following outline of such an one, which we had purposed to have brought under the notice of the Legislature.

We propose the appointment by the Board of Trade of two or more Official Auditors of Assurance Offices.

Before any such Office is established, the scheme to be submitted to the Official Auditors, together with the proposed tables of rates of premiums, the names and addresses of the shareholders, and of the first directors and officers.

That it should be the duty of the Official Auditors to cause an inquiry to be made into the bona fides of the scheme, the sufficiency of the shareholders, and the characters of the directors and officers.

That, having inquired, they should report thereupon to the Board of Trade.

That upon such report being received, and the scheme approved, the Board shall require such an amount of the capital to be paid up as may be deemed necessary for the public security, but not to exceed a sum to be specified in the Act.

That upon payment of such sum the Board of Trade shall grant a license to the office to commence business.

That the Official Auditors shall audit the accounts of all Assurance Offices, either singly or in conjunction with the Auditors of the Company, and report the same to the shareholders and to all who are assured therein, and also to the Board of Trade, who shall publish annually the collected reports of all the offices for the information of the public generally.

The expenses of the Act to be defrayed by a charge upon each office of a small per centage upon the annual receipts, and by fees, to be paid for investigating new schemes and licensing new offices.

This is, of course, but a rude outline of the plan we propose for securing the public against the dangers that threaten from fraudulent or unsafe Life Assurance Offices. It would, we believe, provide a perfect remedy against the ruin that may be anticipated if such unsound speculations as have been witnessed of late are permitted to proceed without restraint or responsibility.

But in any measure that may be proposed for this purpose it must be expressly provided that it is to be applicable, so far as the public is concerned, to all existing offices without exception. Wanting this, the law would be almost worthless. The public require to know, from an impartial authority, what is the actual condition as to responsibility of every Assurance Office, old as well as new, that they may select such as will give them the largest advantages, combined with the greatest security.

PROBABLE RESULTS OF THE RECENT LAW REFORMS.

The Lawyers are speculating upon the probable consequences of the recent Law Reforms to the fortunes of the Profession. The inquiry is as interesting as it is important.

One thing only is certain, and that is, that the profits of each particular case will be materially diminished. The abbreviation of procedure will abbreviate the Lawyer's Bill in the same proportion. Unless there be an increase in the number of cases, the total sum of the emoluments of the Profession must be subjected to an alarming reduction.

The problem to be solved, therefore, is this; will there be an increase in the sum of business, to what extent, and in what direction?

Turn, first, to the Equity Courts, for there the changes have been greatest. What are their prospects? The reductions in the costs of a suit, and consequently in the profits of the Lawyer are enormous. Will there be an equal increase in the number of suits?

We are inclined to think that such there will be. The reformed Court of Chancery, instead of being the worst, will be the best tribunal for obtaining speedy and [illegible] justice. It will certainly attract to itself a vast amount of business which hitherto has not existed, because justice was prohibited by the cost of obtaining it. Not only this, but many matters that are now, by an effort of legal ingenuity, brought under the cognizance of the Common Law Courts, will invoke the same ingenuity to bring them within the jurisdiction of the more accessible Equity Courts. Hence do we anticipate for the business of the Equity Courts an extension greater than even their most ardent reformers have calculated upon.

But will this bring to the practitioners there an equivalent for what they lose by the new forms?

We doubt if it will do so with the Bar. The merciless lopping off of consulting and employment of Counsel can scarcely be compensated by the anticipated increase in the amount of business generally. In Equity [illegible] able portion of the new business the Bar will not participate at all. Counsel in the Equity Courts will certainly be sufferers, and to a greater extent, we fear, than they have yet surmised.

It is otherwise with the Attorneys. The increase of business will bring increased emolument to them, for, unlike Counsel, they must be employed in every matter, however slight. The country Attorneys will especially profit by the change. Hitherto they have been almost excluded from the profits of Chancery practice, because the expenses were so great that they could not afford the necessary outlay and the long investment of capital. The business of Equity was, for the most part, monopolized by a few wealthy metropolitan firms. But now every country Solicitor will be enabled to undertake and conduct Equity business, and even to transact a considerable portion of it without the help of an agent. Neither in extent of outlay, nor in the time for which the investment must be made in costs and fees, will a Chancery suit henceforth be more beyond the means of the Solicitors in the provinces than was formerly an action at law. The advantages that will thus accrue to them are very great, and we have no doubt that, in a short time, when the changes in procedure begin to be understood and appreciated, the entire profits of the Attorney from Chancery Practice will not only be considerably greater than they were before, but they will be diffused through the whole Profession, instead of being gathered by a few.

It is otherwise with the Common Law Courts. There the Bar and the Attorneys will equally suffer. The changes in Procedure have almost ousted the Bar from employment; and, although the Attorneys must continue to be engaged in every suit, their profits will be considerably curtailed. The Bar is deprived of all its income, not trifling in the total, arising from the drawing and signing of pleas, the motions of course, and other lesser duties, by which juniors were assisted to support themselves while waiting for the better business. The mere Lawyer of the Bar, significantly termed "the heavy junior," will be utterly banished from the Courts: he will be a hindrance rather than a help in a cause under the new order of things.

Nor is there in this case either for the Bar or the Attorney the prospect of compensation for diminished profits in individual actions by an equivalent increase in their number. An increase there will be to some extent, particularly in actions for recovery of debts, consequent upon the cheap and speedy process that has been provided, and in which the Superior Courts will now rival the County Courts. But for the trial of disputes there will be no such attraction, and, therefore, no such increase, because the reform has stopped short at the very point where it was most needed, and has rendered its cheapened and abbreviated procedure worthless, by omitting to provide also for more frequent trial.

The conclusion, then, at which we arrive, after much consideration of the prospects of the Profession, may be summed up thus.

The Bar will lose much by the Equity Reforms, and still more by the Common Law Reforms.

The Attorneys will gain largely by the Equity Reforms; they will lose something by the Common Law Reforms.

Whether the gain by the one will be greater than the loss by the other is a problem which only experience can solve.

But we are inclined to think that, upon the whole, the Attorneys will be considerable gainers, and the Bar as great losers, by the Law Reforms that have been effected and are in progress.

LABOURS OF LORD ST. LEONARDS.

We feel much indebted to a correspondent for directing our attention to a fact which certainly should be known to the Profession and the public, for it is as highly creditable to the industry of Lord St. Leonards, as are the judgments themselves to his ability. We cannot do better than quote from our correspondent:—

On reading your interesting article on the "Statistics of the Appeal Business of the House of Lords," in your paper of the 21st of August, it appeared to me that if, instead of merely giving the total number of cases heard and decided during the last session, you had distinguished between the work done by each of the two Chancellors, "their relative exertions in the despatch of business," would have been "the more readily seen." The number of cases heard and decided by each of them respectively is,—

	Heard.		Decided.
Lord Truro	3	..	1
Lord St. Leonards.....	32	..	32
Total.....	35	..	33

Thus it is seen that Lord St. Leonards has decided every case that he has heard, not leaving one single judgment in arrear, which has not occurred (as appears by the tables you give) for upwards of a quarter of a century at the very least.

I may also remark that Lord St. Leonards gave judgment at the close of the arguments in twenty-five cases out of the thirty-two heard by him.

KERR'S NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

We are requested to state that this work has been delayed solely that it may possess that which gives the principal value to a Book of Practice—a complete and copious Index. An Index cannot be prepared until a book is printed; and to make a very full Index to a Law book is a work of much time and labour. As this was designed to be a distinguishing feature of Mr. Kerr's New Common Law Practice, it has been determined that, for the sake of a few days, so useful a part of it should not be restricted. The delay in publication has entirely arisen from this cause, and it is one which, we are confident, will be rather applauded than complained of by the Profession. The volume is expected to be ready in about ten days—in good time for any practical purpose—for the Act does not come into operation for three weeks.

Mr. Crockford will supply the printed and lithographed forms required for service of writs, and other prescribed processes, at the end of next week. Copies of writs will be printed on sheets of ruled paper for special endorsement of accounts, bills of exchange, promissory notes, &c. under the provisions for that purpose; and affidavits of service will be adapted to the new Act.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

The mode, under the old practice of taking accounts in the Master's offices, was, it is well known, open to many objections. The system of taking accounts by charge and discharge, state of facts and counter state of facts, and all this often with considerable intervals in the tedious process of a Chancery suit, is now, it is to be hoped, for ever put an end to.

By the 54th section of 15 & 16 Vict, c. 86, power is given to the Court, in any case where any account is required to be taken, to give such special directions, if any, as it may think fit with respect to the mode in which the account is to be taken or vouched, and such special directions may be given, either by the decree or order directing such account, or by any subsequent order or orders, upon its appearing to the Court that the circumstances of the case are such as to require such special directions; and particularly power is given to the Court, in cases where it thinks fit so to do, to direct that in taking the account the books of account in which the accounts required to be taken have been kept, or any of them, are to be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the parties interested to take such objections thereto as they may be advised. (Sec. 54.)

The utility of these powers being conferred on the Court is apparent, as it often happened under the old system that accounts were directed extending over a long series of years, or which had been long closed, and when, by the loss of evidence from deaths or other accidents, there was very great difficulty in vouching the accounts. By the strict practice it was necessary in all cases to prove each item in the account by independent evidence, though there might be no real dispute between the parties as to many of the items. The expense of this course of proceeding and the hardship to parties, especially after a great lapse of time, were very great. In many cases, also, where the accounts were long and complicated, it was absolutely impossible to take them judicially, if all the items were questioned and vouched.

Again, with respect to certain accounts—as, for instance, partnership and mercantile accounts, where there are books to which both parties have had access, it is but right that, primâ facie, those accounts should be deemed accurate. The 54th section of the Act does not say to whom the Court is to give such special directions as to the mode of taking accounts; but it is presumed that it means either to the chief clerks, who, under the 29th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, may, if the Judge so directs, take accounts; or to an accountant or actuary, whose assistance the Court may avail itself of under the 42nd and 43rd sections of the last-mentioned Act.

Next come some very useful clauses, enabling the Court to do, at an early stage of the cause, what, under the old system, to the great inconvenience and often loss of the parties, it was obliged to delay until the hearing.

If after a suit has been instituted in relation to any real estate, it appears to the Court that it will be necessary or expedient that the same or any part thereof should be sold for the purposes of such suit, the Court may direct the sale thereof at any time after the institution thereof, and it is to be as valid as if directed to be made by a decree or decretal order on the hearing; and any party to the suit in possession of such estate, or in receipt of the rents and profits thereof, is to be compelled to deliver up such possession or receipt to the purchaser or such other person as the Court shall direct. (Sec. 55.)

Before any estate or interest is put up for sale under a decree or order of the Court, an abstract of the title thereto, with the approbation of the Court, is to be laid before some conveyancing counsel, to be approved by the Court, for his opinion thereon, to the intent that the said Court may be the better enabled to give such directions as may be necessary respecting the conditions of sale of such estate or interest, and other matters connected with the sale thereof; and when an estate or interest is so put up for sale, a time for the delivery of the abstract of title thereto to the purchaser or his solicitor is to be specified in the said conditions of sale. (Sec. 56.)

Where any real or personal property forms the subject of any proceedings in the Court, and it is satisfied that the same will be more than sufficient to answer all the claims thereon which ought to be provided for in such suit, power is given to the said Court at any time after the commencement of such proceedings, to allow to the parties interested therein, or any one or more of them, the whole or part of the annual income of such real property, or a part of such personal property, or a part or the whole of the income thereof, up to such time as the said Court shall direct, and for that purpose to make such orders as may appear to the said Court necessary or expedient. (Sec. 57.)

A great improvement is next effected in the practice of the Court in granting injunctions. According to the old practice, where a party requiring discovery was a defendant to an action-at-law, and sought, by means of what was called the common injunction, to stay or control the proceedings in the action, until the plaintiff at law (defendant in equity) had fully answered the bill, the common injunction was obtained of course, in case a full answer was not given within a short time after the suit commenced. The abuses occasioned by means of the common injunction are thus graphically stated by the Chancery Commissioners. "Bills," they observe, "are continually filed, ostensibly for discovery, the real and known object being no other than to gain delay by means of an injunction. In such suits, the plaintiff's object is not to obtain a full answer, but to entrap the defendant into put- ting in an answer technically insufficient; and the statements in the bill not being on oath, the case alleged as a foundation for the inquiries may be, and frequently is, wholly fictitious. The practice of the Court, which in this branch more than any other is full of technicality, is too often made an engine of more oppression and vexation, involving the parties in litigation in points wholly beside the merits of the case." (Ch. Comm. Rep. 23.)

Again, there are cases where the Court interposes, to restrain actions at law upon the merits, that is to say, where there are certain circumstances in the case not cognisable in a Court of Law, which render it unjust that the action should go on. In these cases, as a general rule, the Court of Chancery exercised this jurisdiction only by decree or decretal order, and not by interlocutory order, unless it could be shewn from the answer of the plaintiff in the action, without other materials, that the action ought to be stayed. Now, the plaintiff at law might often be an executor or assignee, and ignorant of the circumstances of the case, or his answer might be untrue; and it not unfrequently happened, that after the plaintiff in the action had been allowed to recover judgment and issue execution, the Court of Chancery, at the hearing of the cause, determined, upon the evidence, that the action ought never to have been brought, and ordered the plaintiff at law to repay the amount recovered by him, with the costs of the action.

By the Act, it is provided that the practice of the Court with respect to injunctions for the stay of proceedings at law, so far as the nature of the case will admit, is to be assimilated to the practice with respect to special injunctions generally, and such injunctions may be granted upon interlocutory applications supported by affidavit, in like manner as other special injunctions are granted by the said Court. (Sec. 58.)

By the new orders, "no injunction for stay of proceedings at law is to be granted, of course for default of appearance or answer to the bill." (Order 45.)

In order to put an end to the question, which often arose when the plaintiff applied for a special injunction or a receiver or the like, or when the defendant moved to dissolve a special injunction, as to how far the plaintiff might read affidavits in opposition to the defendant's answer, the rules of the Court, in which cases sometimes admitted, and sometimes excluded such affidavits, and were, to use the language of the Chancery Commissioners, "arbitrary and not clearly settled," it is enacted by the 59th section, that upon application by motion or petition to the Court in any suit depending therein for an injunction or a receiver, or to dissolve an injunction, or discharge an order appointing a receiver, the answer of the defendant for the purpose of evidence on such motion or petition, is to be regarded merely as an affidavit of the defendant, and affidavits may be received and read in opposition thereto. (Sec. 59.)

Power is next given to the Court in case any of the directions contained in the Act with respect to the practice and course of proceeding in the court by mistake of parties fails to be followed in any suit or proceeding therein upon payment of such costs as such Court may direct, to make order, giving effect to and rectifying such proceedings as may be justified by the merits of the case. (Sec. 60.)

Under the old system, it often happened at the hearing of the cause, that what is termed a question of law arose, generally some question turning on the construction of an Act of Parliament, or of a will or deed, as to which it was considered, that either party, if he desired it, was entitled to the opinion of a Court of Law, and a special case was thereupon in general directed for the opinion of a Court of Law, before which the whole matter was discussed. This, however, proved ultimately the source of great expense, for, although in former times, Equity Judges considered themselves bound by such opinion, it became by degrees to be the practice, that if the opinion was not satisfactory to the Equity Judge, to send the case to another court, and sometimes even to a third. And instances have occurred in which, after obtaining opinions from more than one Court of Law, the Court of Chancery has declined to adopt any of them, and has at last decided upon its own view of the case. However convenient such a practice may have been to Equity Judges, it certainly was often most expensive to the suitor, and even assuming that an Equity Judge is not competent to deal with such questions, still they may by a recent enactment obtain the assistance of the Judges of the Courts of Common Law, when they find it necessary. Those considerations induced a majority of the Houses of Parliament to insist upon the insertion in the Act of the following section, in pursuance of the recommendation of the Chancery Commissioners, viz.—"It shall not be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, in any cause or matter, to direct a case to be stated for the opinion of any Court of Common Law, but the said Court of Chancery shall have full power to determine any questions of law which, in the judgment of the said Court of Chancery, shall be necessary to be decided previously to the decision of the equitable question at issue between the parties." (Sec. 61.)

The next section of the Act will also in many cases be productive of considerable saving in the expenses of suits. It enacts that "in cases where, according to the present practice, the Court declines to grant equitable relief until the legal title or right of the party or parties seeking such relief shall have been established in a proceeding at law, the said Court may itself determine such title or right without requiring the parties to proceed at law to establish the same." (Sec. 62.)

Next, as to General Rules and Orders, the Lord Chancellor with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellors, or any three of them, may, and they are required from time to time to make general rules and orders for carrying the purposes of the Act into effect, and for regulating the times, and form, and mode of procedure, and generally the practice of the said court, in respect of the matters to which the Act relates, and for regulating the fees and allowances to all officers of the court and solicitors thereof, in respect to such matters, and, so far as may be found expedient, for altering the course of proceeding therein-before prescribed in respect to the matters to which the Act relates, or any of them; and such rules and orders may from time to time be rescinded or altered by the like authority; and all such rules and orders are to take effect as General Orders of the said Court. (Sec. 63.)

All General Rules and Orders of the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, are, immediately after the making and issuing thereof, to be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting within five days after the next meeting thereof; and it is provided that if either of the Houses of Parliament, by any resolution passed within thirty-six days after such Rules or Orders have been laid before them, resolve that the whole or any part of such Rules or Orders ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole, or such parts thereof as are so included in such resolution, are, from and after such resolution, to cease to be binding. (Sec. 64.)

The 65th section, after reciting that the present examiners of the Court have been heretofore appointed for the purpose only of taking the depositions of witnesses in private, and upon written interrogatories prepared by counsel; and that the public examination of witnesses orally, under the provisions of the Act, will materially alter the nature of the duties, and increase the responsibility of the said examiners: it is, therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, and he is thereby empowered to order and direct a sum to be paid to each of the said examiners out of the fund entitled "The Suitors' Fee Fund," from and after the 1st of November, 1852, such a sum as shall, together with the sums now payable, make up the annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds; and it is provided, that if either of the present examiners should feel himself unable, or should decline to continue his services in the same office, upon the conditions provided under the Act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to order to be paid to such examiner retiring an annuity of an amount not exceeding three-fourths of the salary which he has hitherto received. (Sec. 65.)

Then comes the interpretation clause, by which in the construction of the Act, the words "bill of complaint" is to mean also and include information; the word "affidavit" is to mean also and include affirmation; the expression "Lord Chancellor" is to mean and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being; and the expression, "General order of the Lord Chancellor," is to mean general order of the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid. (Sec. 66. See Order 48.)

The Act is to commence and take effect from and after the first day of November next, and power is given to the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, to make and issue any such general rules or orders as aforesaid, at any time after the passing of the Act, so as the same be not made to take effect before the time appointed for the commencement of the Act. (Sec. 67. See Order 47.)

It may here be mentioned, that the 46th of the new Orders prescribes that "the power of the Court to enlarge or abridge the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding in any cause or matter, upon such, if any, terms as the justice of the case requires, is unaffected by such Orders."

NEW STATUTES.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

Cap. LVIII.

An Act to continue certain Turnpike Acts in Great Britain. (June 30, 1852.)

Cap. LIX.

An Act to continue the Poor Law Board. (June 30, 1852.)

Poor Law Board further continued.—Whereas by the late Act of the eleventh year of her Majesty, chapter one hundred and nine, provisions were made for the constitution and appointment of commissioners for administering the law for the relief of the poor in England, secretaries, inspectors, and other officers, which provisions will expire at the end of the session of Parliament held next after the twenty-third day of July in the present year, and it is expedient that such provisions should be continued for a limited time: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the commissioner appointed by her Majesty the Queen, or to be appointed by her Majesty, her heirs and successors, under the authority of the said Act, together with every person by the said Act constituted by virtue of his office such commissioner, and every secretary, inspector, and other officer and person appointed or to be appointed by the commissioners under the provisions of the recited Act, shall be empowered, unless he shall previously resign or be removed, to hold his office, and exercise the powers thereof, until the twenty-third day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and until the expiration of the said period it shall be lawful for her Majesty, her heirs and successors, from time to time, at pleasure, to remove the commissioner or commissioners for the time being appointed by her Majesty, or to be appointed by her Majesty, her heirs and successors, and upon every vacancy in the office of the commissioner or commissioners so appointed, or to be appointed by her Majesty, her heirs and successors, either by removal, death, resignation, or otherwise, to appoint, as in the said Act is described, some other fit person to the said office.

Cap. LX.

An Act to continue an Act of the 12th year of her present Majesty, for amending the Laws relating to Savings Banks in Ireland. (June 30, 1852.)

Cap. LXI.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to Summary Proceedings for Penalties and Forfeitures under the Acts relating to the Excise. (June 30, 1852).

Whereas under and by virtue of an Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter fifty-three, and of other Acts in that behalf, an information for the recovery of any penalty imposed by any Act of Parliament relating to the revenue of excise, and incurred for or by reason of any offence committed against any such Act, or for the condemnation of any goods, commodities, or chattels seized as forfeited under or by virtue of any such Act, may be exhibited before, and be heard, adjudged, and determined by any three or more of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue where the offence shall have been committed, or the person or persons committing the same shall be found, or where the goods, commodities or chattels shall have been seized as aforesaid within the limits of the chief office of inland revenue in London, and where the offence shall have been committed, or the person or persons committing the same shall be found, or the goods, commodities, or chattels shall have been seized as aforesaid in any part of the United Kingdom out of the said limits, such information may be exhibited before any one or more, and heard, adjudged, and determined by any two or more of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county, shire, division, city, town, or place wherein the offence shall have been committed, or the person or persons committing the same shall be found, or the goods, commodities, or chattels shall have been seized as aforesaid. And whereas it is expedient that her Majesty's justices of the peace shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in relation to any such offence, person, matter, or thing as aforesaid respectively committed, found, or seized within the limits of the chief office of Inland Revenue: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Informations for penalties or forfeitures under the excise laws within the limits of the chief office may be heard and determined either by Commissioners of Inland Revenue or justices of the peace.—For the recovery of any penalty imposed by any Act or Acts relating to the revenue of excise, and incurred for or by reason of any offence committed against any such Act or Acts, or for the condemnation of any goods, commodities, or chattels seized as forfeited under or by virtue of any such Act or Acts, where the offence shall have been committed, or the person or persons committing the same shall be found, or where the goods, commodities, or chattels shall have been seized as aforesaid within the limits of the chief office of Inland Revenue in London, an information thereupon may be exhibited, heard, adjudged, and determined either before any three or more of the said Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or before any metropolitan police magistrate sitting at any metropolitan police court; and such commissioners and magistrate respectively shall and they are hereby required, upon any such information having been so exhibited as aforesaid, to proceed to hear and determine the same, and give judgment thereon, and to award and grant a warrant or warrants for the due execution and carrying into effect of such judgment, in like manner as Commissioners of Inland Revenue and justices of the peace respectively are now by law required, directed, or authorised to do on any information exhibited before or heard or determined by them respectively under or by virtue of any Act or Acts in force relating to the revenue of excise.

2. Commissioners may hear and determine informations at chief office or elsewhere within its limits.—It shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of Inland Revenue to hear and determine any such information as aforesaid either at the chief office of Inland Revenue, or at any other place within the limits of the said chief office, as the said commissioners may in that behalf appoint.

3. Officers of Inland Revenue, or persons employed by the Commissioners or Solicitor, may conduct proceedings before justices.—It shall be lawful and competent to and for any officer of Inland Revenue, or any person employed or authorised by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue or the Solicitor of Inland Revenue in that behalf, to prosecute, conduct, or defend any complaint, information, or other proceeding to be heard or determined by or before any justice or justices of the peace in any part of the United Kingdom relating to any duty, matter, or thing under the care or management of the said commissioners, whether such officer or person shall be admitted and enrolled as an attorney, solicitor, advocate, or writer to the signet in any Court of Law or Equity or not, anything in any Act to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

CAP. LXII.

An Act to alter and amend certain Acts relating to the Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues of the Crown. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXIII.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Valuation of rateable Property in Ireland. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXIV.

An Act to continue and amend the Metropolitan Sewers Act. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXV.

An Act to continue and amend an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of the Reign of her present Majesty, to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to Friendly Societies. (June 30, 1852.)

13 & 14 Vict. c. 115.—Whereas the Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, will expire at the end of the present session of Parliament, and it is expedient that the same should be amended and further continued: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Acts relating to friendly societies passed previously to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, to continue in force as to such societies.—All and every the Act and Acts of Parliament passed previous to the passing of the Act of the tenth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter fifty-six, relating to friendly societies, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, be deemed and taken to continue and be in force, and to have continued and been in force from the time of the passing of the said last-mentioned Act, as regards each and every society established under any of the said previous Acts, or to which the same may be applicable, to such and the same extent and in the like manner as before and at the time of the passing of the said Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, except so far as any of the provisions of the said Act respectively affect or are applicable to such societies; but each and every society established under any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to friendly societies passed previous to the passing of the said Act of the fourteenth year of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, may come under the provisions of that Act, by having their rules certified in conformity thereto, and thereupon the provisions of the Act or Acts under which such society has been established shall cease as to such society, except as to any offences committed, or penalties or liabilities incurred, or bond or security given, or proceedings taken, under such Acts.

2. Payment of salaries and expenses of registrars.—The commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may allow the registrars of Friendly Societies in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively to retain out of the fees to be received by them respectively under the said Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, such sum as will defray the salary due to them respectively, and also such sum as will defray the expenses from time to time allowed by the said commissioners for office rent, salaries of clerks, stationery, computation of tables, and for such other expenses as may be incurred by them respectively by the authority of the said commissioners, and the balance, if any, shall be paid over to the account of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; and the said commissioners shall from time to time regulate the manner in which such fees are to be received, kept, and accounted for; and if such fees shall not in any year be sufficient to defray such salary and expenses, the balance shall be paid out of the said Consolidated Fund; and the deficiency of the fees to defray the salaries and expenses of the office of Registrar of Friendly Societies in England since the passing of the said Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, shall be paid out of the said Consolidated Fund.

3. Trustees of friendly societies to furnish accounts to the Commissioners of the National Debt.—The trustees of every friendly society established under any Act or Acts of Parliament relating to friendly societies which shall have deposited or which shall deposit any portion of its funds with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, shall furnish such accounts and returns relating thereto as shall from time to time be required by the said commissioners; and it shall not be lawful for the said trustees to pay any portion of its funds to the said commissioners until they shall have satisfied the said commissioners, in such manner and by such returns and accounts as the said commissioners shall require, that they are duly authorised by law to make such payment to the said commissioners.

4. Recited Act further continued.—The said Act of the fourteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and fifteen, shall be further continued to the first day of October in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and to the end of the then next session of Parliament.

CAP. LXVII.

An Act to continue the powers of applying for a Sale of Lands under the Act for facilitating the Sale and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXVIII.

An Act for the application of certain money accrued from Fines and Forfeitures in Ireland in aid of certain Distressed Unions and Electoral Divisions in that Country. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXIX.

An Act to confirm certain Provisional Orders of the General Board of Health. (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas the General Board of Health have, in pursuance of the Public Health Act, 1848, made, published, and deposited, according to the provisions of that Act, certain provisional orders mentioned in the schedule to this Act annexed, and it is expedient that the said orders should be confirmed: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same,

1. Confirming provisional orders of the General Board of Health.—That the provisional orders of the General Board of Health referred to in the schedule annexed shall, from and after the passing of this Act, so far as the same are authorised by the said Public Health Act, be absolute, and be as binding and of the like force and effect as if the provisions of the same had been expressly enacted in this Act.

2. Woolwich Dockyard, &c. exempted from operation of Act.—Nothing herein contained or referred to shall sanction or authorise any interference with the watching, paving, and lighting, or internal regulations for the time being of her Majesty's dockyard, or of any barracks, fortifications, military or other premises, under the control or authority of the officers of her Majesty's Ordnance in or near the parish of Woolwich; and, notwithstanding anything herein contained or referred to, it shall not be lawful for the Local Board of the said parish, or any person whomsoever, to enter into and upon any land which is now or which may at any time hereafter be vested in the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of the said United Kingdom, or in the Master General or principal officers of her Majesty's Ordnance for the time being, or to make, construct, or set up any sewer, drain, or any work, article, or thing of any description on, in, under, over, or through any such land or the foreshore in front of any such land, or which may affect the same land or foreshore, without the previous consent of the said Lord High Admiral, or of the said Commissioners, or the said Master General or principal officers of her Majesty's Ordnance, signified in writing under the hand of the Secretary of the Admiralty or of the Secretary of the Board of Ordnance, as the case may be, and then according to such plan, and in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions, and under such restrictions as may be signified in writing; and if any such sewer, drain, work, article, or thing be made, constructed, or set up, or be commenced to be made, constructed, or set up contrary hereto, it shall be lawful for the Lord High Admiral or the said Commissioners, or the said Master General or principal officers of her Majesty's Ordnance, as the case may be, if he or they think fit, to fill up, remove, and abate the same, and restore the site thereof to its former state and condition at the cost of the said Local Board.

3. First election for parish of Walsoken.—The first election of the six persons to be elected for and in respect of the parish of Walsoken, as members of the Local Board of Health for the district of Wisbech and Walsoken, for the purposes of main sewerage only, which comprises the said parish of Walsoken, shall take place on the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

4. First election and nomination of local board for Woolwich.—The first election of the eighteen persons to be elected to form a part of the Local Board of Health for the district of Woolwich, for the purposes of the said Public Health Act, shall take place on the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two; and that the nomination of the three persons to be nominated by the superintendent of her Majesty's dockyard, the commanding royal engineer, the storekeeper of her Majesty's ordnance, and the officer in command for the time being of the Royal Artillery in the parish of Woolwich aforesaid, to form the other members of the Local Board of Health within and for the said district for the purposes of the said Public Health Act, shall take place on the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

5. Water containing sewage, &c. not to be discharged into the Avon without being filtered.—Nothing in the said Public Health Act, or in the provisional order contained in the schedule to this Bill applying the said Act to the district of Leamington, shall be taken to give power to the Local Board of Health of the said district, or to any other parties now or any future periods, to discharge into the river Avon, or into the river Leam, contiguous thereto, any sewage or water containing sewage, unless such sewage or water shall, before its discharge into the said river or rivers, be filtered so as to be free from noxious and offensive matter, and shall be first certified to be free from such matter by the General Board of Health, under their hands and official seal, after examination and report thereon by one of their superintending inspectors; and that if the said Board of Health shall at any time hereafter cease to exist, it shall be competent for parties aggrieved by such discharge to cause the same to be inspected, and the nuisance to be abated, by the order of any two justices of the peace at petty sessions assembled in the division of the county of Warwick in which the town of Leamington is situated.

6. First election of Local Board for Leamington.—The first election of the fifteen persons to be elected to form and constitute the Local Board of Health for the district of Leamington in the county of Warwick, for the purposes of the said Public Health Act, shall take place on the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two; and the first election of the one person to be elected for and in respect of the main sewerage district described in the schedule annexed to the provisional order of the General Board of Health applying the Public Health Act 1848, to the aforesaid district of Leamington, and to form with the aforesaid Local Board of Health the Leamington Main Sewerage Local Board, for the purposes of the above-recited Act, shall also take place on the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

7. Chairman at first election for Leamington.—At the first election of the Local Board of Health for the district of Leamington, as constituted by the order in the schedule to this Act, in case William Carpenter, esq. from illness or other sufficient cause, shall be unable to exercise or discharge the powers or duties vested in or imposed upon him by the Public Health Act and the said order in respect of the said first election, Mr. John Bowen, of Leamington, ironmonger, shall exercise and perform such of the said duties as remain to be exercised or performed instead of John Henry Thomas, named in the said order; and the notices of qualification in the said order mentioned shall, in default of the said William Carpenter, be given to the said John Bowen at his house in Leamington, instead of the said John Henry Thomas.

8. Act incorporated with Public Health Act.—This Act shall be deemed to be incorporated with the Public Health Act, and shall be as if this Act and the Public Health Act were one Act.

9. Short title of Act.—In citing this Act in any other Act of Parliament, or in any proceeding, instrument, or document whatsoever, it shall be sufficient to use the words and figures, "The Public Health Supplemental Act, 1852 (No. 2)."

CAP. LXX.

An Act for authorising the Occupation of the House of Correction recently erected by and for the City of London, at Holloway, in the County of Middlesex. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXXI.

An Act to amend an Act of the Ninth and Tenth Years of her present Majesty for the Embankment of a Portion of the River Thames. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXXII.

An Act to grant a Representative Constitution to the Colony of New Zealand. (June 30, 1852.)

CAP. LXXIII.

An Act to make Provision for a permanent Establishment of Officers to perform the Duties at Nisi Prius, in the Superior Courts of Common Law, and for the Payment of such Officers and of the Judges' Clerks by Salaries, and to abolish certain Offices in those Courts. (June 30, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas the officers in the Superior Courts of Common Law who perform the duties at Nisi Prius hold their offices and appointments during pleasure, and such officers and the clerks at the judges' chambers are remunerated by fees received by them from the suitors, and it is expedient to provide a permanent establishment of such officers, and that they and the said clerks be paid by salaries, and that the fees now payable by the suitors be diminished: Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Marshal and clerk at Nisi Prius in the Court of Queen's Bench and marshals in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer abolished, and their duties to be performed by the associate respectively.—From and after the twenty-fourth day of October after the passing of this Act the offices of marshal and clerk at Nisi Prius in the Court of Queen's Bench, and marshal in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, shall be and are hereby abolished; and all acts, duties, and services now and heretofore done, performed, and rendered by such marshals and clerk at Nisi Prius respectively shall be done, performed, and rendered by the associates in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, who shall also continue to perform all acts, duties, and services now done, performed, and rendered by them in respect of the several offices now held by them respectively; and such acts, duties, and services, when so done, performed, and rendered by the said associates, or their successors, or any of them, shall be good and valid in law to all intents and purposes; and all lawful powers and authorities now and heretofore vested in or exercised by the marshal and clerk at Nisi Prius in the Court of Queen's Bench, and the marshals in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, by virtue or in right of their respective offices, shall be vested in and exercised by the said associates in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer respectively.

2. Records, &c. to be transferred to associates.—All the records, books, papers, and documents, of and concerning the duties and business of the several offices of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, so abolished as aforesaid, shall, on or before the twenty-fourth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, be delivered by the several offices of the said Courts respectively now having the custody of the same, into the custody and possession of the associates in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer respectively, to be by them kept and preserved; and searches may be made, and copies or extracts of and from the said records, books, papers, and documents shall and may be had and taken, at such times and in such manner as hath been the accustomed practice in the several offices hereby abolished; and the officers, whose offices are hereby abolished, shall and they are hereby required, on or before the said twenty-fourth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty two, to pay over to the associates of the said Courts respectively all and every sum and sums of money, if any, which shall have been paid into and shall be in their hands by virtue of their said respective offices, and to render an accurate account thereof to the said associates of the said Courts respectively.

3. The Chief Justices or the Chief Baron of the said Courts respectively to appoint future associates.—When and so often as any vacancy shall occur in any of the said offices of associate in either of the said Courts respectively, by death, resignation, or otherwise, it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the Court in which such vacancy shall occur, to nominate and appoint some fit and proper person to fill such vacant office.

4. Clerks, not exceeding two, to be appointed by the associates, subject to approval of the Chief Justices or Chief Baron of the said courts respectively.—The associates in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, and their successors, shall and may, in and for the discharge of the duties of their respective offices, have not exceeding two clerks, as the Lord Chief Justice or the Lord Chief Baron of the court for the time being to which such associates respectively belong shall determine to be necessary and proper; and all such clerks shall and may be appointed by the associates of the said courts respectively for the time being, with the sanction and approval of the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the court to which such associate shall belong; and such clerks as are appointed shall hold their offices during pleasure.

5. Offices to be provided for the associates in the offices of the courts, or their vicinity.—Convenient offices shall be provided by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the transaction of the business of the office of associate in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, in the offices of the said respective courts, or their immediate vicinity; and the places for such offices shall be fixed by the Lord Chief Justice, or Lord Chief Baron of the said courts respectively, as soon as possible after the passing of this Act, and may be changed by them from time to time as occasion may require.

6. In case of sickness or other reasonable cause, the duties of the associates may be performed by deputy.—If the said associates, or any or either of them, shall, from sickness or other unavoidable cause, have occasion to be absent from the business of their or his office for a longer period than two months at any one time, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron for the time being of the court to which such officer shall belong to give leave of absence by his order in writing to such officer, and, if necessary, to appoint a deputy in his place during such time as shall be expressed in such order; and the name of such deputy, and also the cause and time of such absence, shall be stated in such order; and such deputy may, if occasion require it, be changed by the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron; and every deputy so appointed shall be paid by the principal for whom he shall act such remuneration for his services as the said Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron shall direct in such order, not being in any case less than one third of the amount fixed and settled by this Act as the salary of such principal officer.

7. Power to Treasury to fix salaries of judges' marshals.—A fixed sum, to be settled for the several circuits respectively by the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by and with the sanction of the said Lord Chief Justices and Lord Chief Baron, shall be hereafter paid by way of salary to each of the judges' marshals on each Spring and Summer Circuit, and to the marshal of the senior judge on the winter circuit, and on a special commission, for his services thereon; such sum to be paid to the marshal upon notice in writing being given by the judge by whom such marshal is appointed, of the name and address of the person whom he has appointed to be his marshal, and of the circuit which such judge has chosen, or the commission to which he has been appointed, to the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, who shall, upon the receipt of such notice, pay the sum so fixed on as aforesaid for such circuit or commission to the person therein mentioned as having been appointed to be marshal.

8. Clerks to be appointed by the judges.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chief Justices and Lord Chief Baron each to appoint three clerks, one of whom is to act as crier on the circuit, and in London and Middlesex, and for the other justices and barons each to appoint two clerks, one of whom is to act as crier on the circuit; and such clerks shall perform all the duties heretofore performed by the judges' clerks; and shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the judges by whom they are appointed, or if continued by their successors during the pleasure of such successors.

9. Present officers reappointed to hold their offices during good behaviour.—And whereas it is expedient that the several officers of the said Superior Courts, set forth and described in Schedule (A) to this Act annexed, who now hold their offices and appointments during pleasure, should be reappointed, and should hold such offices and appointments during good behaviour: be it enacted, that the persons now holding the offices and appointments in the said Schedule (A) as such officers, shall be and the same are hereby appointed and declared to be such officers in the said Superior Courts, and they and their successors shall respectively hold such offices and appointments during good behaviour.

10. Treasury to cause table of fees to be prepared, and submitted to judges for approval.—And whereas it is expedient that a new table or tables of fees proper to be taken in the said Superior Courts, and their several offices, and at the judges' chambers, and by the clerks of assize acting as associates on the circuits, should be prepared with reference to the various changes and alterations which have been or may be made in the process, practice, and proceedings of those Courts, and to the diminution of expense, where practicable, to the suitors: be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby required, forthwith to prepare or cause to be prepared a table or tables of fees, specifying what fees are proper to be demanded and taken in the said courts and offices, at the judges' chambers, and on the circuits, and what fees should be abolished; and such table or tables shall be laid for approval before the judges of the said courts; and the said judges, or any six or more of them, of whom the Lord Chief Justices and Lord Chief Baron shall be three, are hereby empowered and required, as soon as conveniently may be, to revise and settle the said table or tables of fees so prepared as aforesaid, and from time to time to add to, or reduce, alter, or amend the same, as they may deem necessary and proper, and the said table or tables of fees so revised and corrected as aforesaid from time to time to allow and sanction, by affixing their signatures respectively thereto, and to establish the same in and for the said courts; and the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury are required so soon and as often as each table or tables of fees have been sanctioned and allowed by the judges, to cause the same to be inserted and published in the London Gazette; and from and after such publication no other fees than those sanctioned and allowed as aforesaid shall on any pretence whatever be demanded or taken by any officer or clerk of the said courts in respect of any duty or service to which such table or tables of fees may relate; provided that until the publication of such table or tables of fees under the authority aforesaid, the fees now lawfully taken by the said officers and clerks shall and may continue to be taken.

11. Officers and clerks not to act as barristers, attorneys, or agents.—No person holding the office of associate in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, or the appointment of judges' clerk, or of clerk in any of the offices of the Superior Courts, shall, either directly or indirectly, act as a barrister, attorney, or solicitor, or as agent of any attorney or solicitor, in any Court of Law or Equity in the United Kingdom, either separately or in partnership with any other, during such time as he shall hold such office of associate, or act as such clerk; provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall operate to prevent any attorney or solicitor, or agent of any attorney or solicitor, now practising in any Court of Law or Equity, and now holding any office or appointment mentioned in this Act, from continuing to practise as such attorney, solicitor, or agent, notwithstanding this Act.

12. Treasury to fix salaries of officers and clerks—Power to raise salaries.—It shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorised and required, by and with the sanction of the Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron, to fix and appoint an annual sum by way of salary to the several officers and clerks whose offices and appointments are respectively set forth and described in the schedule (B) to this Act annexed, which salaries they shall be entitled to receive in lieu of all fees and emoluments now received by such officers and clerks respectively; and the said commissioners, with such sanction as aforesaid, shall have power, on each vacancy in any such office or appointment, to revise the salary attached thereto, and to fix another salary in lieu thereof, having regard to the nature, duties, and responsibility of such office or appointment; and such salaries, together with the necessary expenses of the respective offices, shall be payable and paid by equal quarterly payments on the thirty-first day of March, the thirtieth day of June, the thirtieth day of September, and the thirty-first day of December in every year, together with a proportional part of such annual sum for the time which at the decease of the person entitled thereto shall have elapsed since the last payment thereof; provided always, that if any of the officers or clerks appointed or to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall be entitled to and in the receipt of compensation allowance awarded to them under any Act or Acts of Parliament regulating or relating to their respective offices or appointments, which shall exceed the amount of salary fixed and determined as aforesaid, such officers and clerks respectively shall be entitled to and shall receive the full amount of such compensation allowance by way of salary so long as they shall respectively hold their offices or situations; and in cases wherein such compensation allowance shall be less than the amount of salary so fixed and determined as aforesaid, the same shall merge and be considered as part of and included in the said salary.

13. Salaries, how charged.—The salaries and compensation allowances by way of salary hereinbefore granted to the several officers and clerks of the said courts respectively, and also the salaries and compensation allowances by way of salary, if any, which shall and may be granted to the several officers and clerks under the provisions of this and any other Act or Acts of Parliament regulating or relating to the same, together with the necessary and unavoidable expenses of the said offices respectively, shall be paid and payable out of and be charged and chargeable upon the fees received by the said officers and clerks in the said courts respectively; and the surplus of such fees arising in each of the said courts, after the payment of the said salaries and expenses, shall be paid into the receipt of the Exchequer to the credit of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, at such times and in such manner as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being shall think proper to direct; and in the event of the fees so received by the said officers and clerks respectively of any of the said courts being at any time insufficient to defray the said salaries and compensations, if any, and other necessary expenses, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorised and required, to direct the amount of such deficiency to be charged upon and paid out of the said Consolidated Fund.

14. Officers to render accounts of fees received to the Treasury.—The said officers and clerks, mentioned and described in schedule (C) to this Act annexed, shall respectively cause all fees received by them, and all disbursements made thereout for salaries and other necessary expenses, to be duly and regularly entered in one or more books, to be kept for that purpose in their offices, distinguishing the fees received under their several heads, and also the particulars and amount of every disbursement; and shall quarterly, within one month after the thirty-first day of March, the thirtieth day of June, the thirtieth day of September, and the thirty-first day of December in every year, render a true and faithful account in writing to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being of all such fees and disbursements, in such form of account, and with such particulars of receipt or otherwise, and accompanied by such vouchers, as the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time think proper to require and direct; and if upon examination of any such account it shall appear to the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury that any fees have not been duly accounted for, or that any unreasonable or improper charge or deduction has been made in such account, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury finally to settle and adjust the same in such way as they may think reasonable and proper, and the said officers and clerks of the said courts by whom such account shall have been rendered shall and they are hereby required to alter and amend the said account accordingly: provided always, that the officers and clerks of the said courts respectively shall submit their books of account to the inspection of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, or any person or persons whom they may employ for that purpose, whenever the said officers and clerks shall be required so to do.

15. Allowance to officers on their retirement from office—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24.—Every person appointed or to be appointed under the provisions of this Act as an officer of the said courts respectively, who shall hereafter resign his office or situation with the sanction and under the authority of the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the Court to which he shall belong, in consequence of his being incapable, from infirmity of mind or body, to discharge the duties thereof, shall be entitled to receive such superannuation allowance as the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper to direct; and in ascertaining and awarding the amount of such superannuation allowance the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall take into consideration the whole period during which any such person shall have been permanently employed in any office or situation in either of the said courts, or in any other public office or situation, prior to the passing of this Act, and shall proceed according to the principles laid down by an Act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his said late Majesty, intituled "An Act to alter, amend, and consolidate the Laws for regulating the Pensions, Compensations, and Allowances to be made to Persons in respect of their having held civil Offices in his Majesty's Service;" and all such sums and allowances which shall be so awarded and granted under the authority aforesaid shall be paid and payable and be charged and chargeable in the same way as is herein-before provided in respect of the salaries of the officers of the said courts respectively, and the necessary expenses of the said offices.

16. Ushers and subordinate officers, and their deputies, to render accounts of fees to Treasury.—And whereas the ushers, courtkeepers, messengers, assistants, and other subordinate officers of the said Superior Courts, and attendants on the judges (other than the judges' clerks herein-before mentioned) are entitled to receive fees from the suitors in the said court, and it is expedient that the said suitors should be relieved from the payment of such fees, and that adequate salaries should be provided for such officers, assistants, and attendants: be it enacted, that all persons holding any subordinate offices or appointments in any of the said Superior Courts, as ushers, courtkeepers, messengers, assistants, and the like, or as attendants on the judges (other than the judges' clerks herein-before mentioned), and their deputies, shall respectively, on or before the twenty-fourth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, render a true account in writing to the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury of all fees and emoluments received or claimed to be received by them, or on their behalf, and also of the annual value of all such fees and emoluments received by them, or on their behalf, and also of the annual salary, allowances, or profits allowed to or received by them respectively, whether as principals or deputies, and also of the nature and amount of disbursements, if any, in respect of any of such offices or appointments, for the space of five years next preceding the passing of this Act; and the accounts so rendered shall be in such form, and with such particulars of receipt or otherwise, and accompanied by such vouchers, as the said Lords Commissioners shall from time to time think proper to require and direct.

17. Fees of such subordinate officers may be abolished.—It shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby empowered, by and with the consent of the said Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron, to abolish all or any of the fees set forth in such accounts, and a list or lists, specifying the nature or description of the fees so to be abolished, shall thereupon be published by and under the authority of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury in the London Gazette; provided that until such publication all fees that now are or may be legally received in respect of such subordinate offices or appointments, shall and may continue to be received as heretofore.

18. The number of subordinate officers to be fixed by Treasury, with the sanction of the Chief Justices and Chief Baron.—It shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby empowered and required, by and with the sanction of the Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron, as soon as conveniently may be, to ascertain and fix the number of ushers, courtkeepers, messengers, and other subordinate officers, and assistants to the said Superior Courts, and of attendants on the judges (other than the judges' clerks hereinbefore mentioned), which shall be sufficient for the due performance of the duties required to be rendered in respect of such subordinate offices and appointments, and for the necessary attendance on the judges; and a list or lists of the offices and appointments, when so fixed and ascertained, shall thereupon be published by and under the authority of the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury in the London Gazette, and from and after such publication all such of the said offices and appointments as are not contained in such list or lists shall be, and the same are hereby declared to be abolished.

19. Subordinate officers to be appointed by the Chief Justice and Chief Baron respectively.—It shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chief Justices and the Lord Chief Baron respectively for the several courts to appoint fit and proper persons to perform the duties of the said several subordinate offices and appointments, when such offices and appointments shall have been fixed and ascertained in the manner hereinbefore provided: provided always, that the persons who now perform the duties of such subordinate offices and appointments shall be reappointed to such offices and appointments, if they shall be found willing and competent to discharge the duties thereof, in preference to any person who shall not have performed such duties prior to the passing of this Act; and when and so often as any vacancy shall occur by death, resignation, or otherwise, in any such office or appointment, it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the Court, in which such vacancy shall occur, to nominate and appoint some fit and proper person to fill such vacancy; and all persons to be appointed to such offices or appointments shall hold their respective offices during the pleasure of the Court to which they shall respectively belong.

20. Power to increase or reduce the number of such subordinate officers.—If at any time after the passing of this Act it shall be found that the establishment of such subordinate officers, assistants, or attendants in any of the said Superior Courts is either excessive or insufficient for the due performance of the duties required to be rendered by such officers, assistants, or attendants, it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the Court, in which any alteration with respect to such establishment may be deemed necessary, to notify the same in writing to the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, stating therein the circumstances which may have caused any increase or diminution of such establishment to be necessary; and thereupon the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may, and they are hereby authorized and required, from time to time by their warrant to increase or reduce such establishment, as the case may require; and, by and with the sanction of the said Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the Court in which such alteration is deemed necessary, to make such provision for the carrying into effect such alteration, both with respect to regulating the salaries and otherwise, as may be thought proper.

21. Salaries of subordinate officers to be fixed by Treasury, with sanction of the Chief Justices and Chief Baron, and to be paid out of Consolidated Fund.—It shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorised and required, by and with the sanction of the Lord Chief Justices and Lord Chief Baron, to fix and appoint an annual sum to be paid by way of salary to each and every of such subordinate officers, assistants, and attendants, who shall be re-appointed or appointed under the provisions of this Act; and such salaries, together with the necessary expenses (if any) of such offices and appointments, shall be payable and paid by equal quarterly payments on the thirty-first day of March, the thirtieth day of June, the thirtieth day of September, and the thirty-first day of December in every year, together with a proportional part of such annual sum for the time which at the decease of the person entitled thereto shall have elapsed since the last payment thereof; and such salaries and expenses shall be paid out of and charged and chargeable upon the said Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britian and Ireland: provided always, that the officers, assistants, and attendants, the value of whose offices or amount of whose salaries or official incomes have been already fixed and ascertained under and by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament regulating or relating to their said offices or salaries, shall be entitled during their tenure of office respectively to receive the amount of salary or official income now received by them, if such amount exceed the salary to be fixed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid under this Act; and in case such amount shall be less than the salary so fixed by the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, the same shall merge and be considered as part of and included in the said salary.

22. Compensation to hereditary chief proclamator and hereditary chief usher.—And whereas the hereditary chief proclamator in the Court of Common Pleas, and the hereditary chief usher in the Court of Exchequer, in right of their respective offices, are entitled to appoint certain officers in the said Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, who by themselves or their deputies perform the duties of their respective offices; and it is expedient that the said offices of hereditary chief proclamator and hereditary chief usher should be abolished; and that a fit and proper compensation should be awarded to George Henry Walker Heneage, esquire (being the person who now holds these offices), upon the abolition thereof; be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby authorised to pay to the said George Henry Walker Heneage, esquire, during his life, and after his death to such person or persons as would have been entitled to hold such offices, or either of them, upon satisfactory proof of his, her, or their being so entitled, such annual sum as the commissioners may find to be a fair and reasonable compensation for the loss of the said offices; and in estimating such compensation, the average annual amount of profit arising from the said offices respectively for the thirty years next preceding the passing of this Act shall be taken into consideration; and such annual sum shall be paid out of and charged and chargeable upon the said Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland.

23. Compensation to officers appointed by hereditary chief proclamator or hereditary chief usher, and to subordinate officers.—Every person holding any office or appointment in the said Courts of Common Pleas or Exchequer under any grant, deed, or other appointment from the said hereditary chief proclamator, or hereditary chief usher, and every other subordinate officer, assistant, or attendant, whose office shall be abolished under the provisions of this Act, and who shall not be re-appointed to any office in any of the said Superior Courts, shall be entitled to receive such a sum in gross, or such an annual sum, as the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may fix and appoint, as a fair and reasonable compensation for the loss of any such office or appointment; and such sums by way of compensation shall be paid out of and charged and chargeable upon the said Consolidated Fund of Great Britain and Ireland; and the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury are hereby authorised and required to fix the amount of such sums to be paid by way of compensation, and to pay the same to the said persons whose offices shall have been abolished under this Act.

24. Not to affect existing messengers of Exchequer.—That nothing herein contained shall affect the rights of the existing four patent messengers of the Court of Exchequer, but there shall be paid to each of the present messengers of the said court, during their respective lives, the amount of the annual salaries or allowances to which they are now respectively entitled.

25. Appointments to be made without pecuniary consideration.—All appointments of officers and clerks to be made by virtue of this Act shall be so made without any pecuniary or other consideration whatsoever, directly or indirectly, to be paid or received for the same; and all such officers and clerks shall execute their duties in person, and shall give their attendance in court or elsewhere, and shall conduct the business of their several departments or offices at such places and hours, whether in Term time or Vacation, and in every respect in such manner as the Lord Chief Justices or the Lord Chief Baron, and the other justices and barons of the said Courts respectively shall from time to time order and direct.

26. Officers and clerks not to receive gratuities on pain of dismissal.—If any officer of the said Courts, or any clerk appointed or to be appointed under or by virtue of this Act, or any person whatever employed in the offices of the said Courts, shall, for anything done or pretended to be done relating to his office or employment, or under colour of doing anything relating to his office or employment, or for forbearing to do any act properly appertaining to his said office, demand, take, receive, or accept, or allow any person whatsoever to take for him, or on his account, or for or on account of or in trust for him or any other person named by him, any gratuity, perquisite, or reward, or anything of value, other than the salary or remuneration allowed or to be allowed to every such officer, clerk, or person aforesaid, he shall forfeit a sum of fifty pounds, to be recovered by action of debt at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, and upon judgment being recovered therein he shall be incapable of any longer holding his office or employment.

27. No compensation to be allowed for loss of right of appointment.—In the event of any reduction being hereafter made in the number of the officers or clerks created or authorised by this Act, the Lord Chief Justices, Lord Chief Baron, Justices, Barons, and Associates of the said Courts respectively for the time being, shall not be entitled to compensation for the loss of any right of appointment vested in them, or any of them, by virtue of this Act.

28. Certain fees on circuit abolished.—And whereas upon the circuits of the judges of assize and gaol delivery, a fee of six shillings and eightpence is now paid on every cause to the marshals of the judges of assize for the use of the judge: be it enacted, that the said fee and all other payments upon the circuits to or to the use of the said judges, shall be and they are hereby abolished.

29. Account to be laid before Parliament.—The said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall cause to be laid before Parliament, within fourteen days of its first meeting in every year, an account, made up to the thirty-first day of December previous, both with respect to the said offices, and with respect to all other offices in the Superior Courts of Law, of all charges on the Consolidated Fund, by way of compensation or otherwise, and of the gross and net receipts of fees in each of the said offices, and of all charges and disbursements deducted therefrom, and of all amounts fixed by way of remuneration for any of the holders of the said offices respectively, and of any salaries fixed under the powers of this Act, and of all salaries charged on the said fees during the year then last elapsed, and after the first such account shall have been presented, then during the two years last elapsed, with a statement of the increase or decrease of any of the said items of account in the second of such years as compared with the first.

30. Duties to be performed in person.—Where it shall be made to appear to the said commissioners that any of the hereinbefore mentioned officers omits to perform the duties of his office in person, the said commissioners, unless it shall be shewn to their satisfaction that such omission arises from temporary and unavoidable causes, and they shall in writing approve of such omission for a period not exceeding at any one time six months, shall, as the case may be, require the whole of the fees due to or received by such officer for his own use during the time of such omission to be accounted for and paid over as aforesaid, or shall cease to allow or pay any salary otherwise due to such officer during the time of such omission.

31. Fees of marshal's men and judge's bailiff abolished.—The fees heretofore received on the circuit by the marshal's man and the judge's bailiff respectively, shall be and are hereby abolished: and no fee, gratuity, or reward whatsoever shall be demanded or accepted by any one exercising or claiming to exercise either of the said offices, or by any servant or other person attending the circuit in any subordinate office or employment.

32. As to performance of duties of hereditary chief usher and messenger of the Court of Exchequer.—And whereas, by reason of abolishing the office of hereditary chief usher of the Court of Exchequer, and the offices of the said Court appointed by that officer, it becomes necessary to make provision for the duties hitherto performed by the said hereditary chief usher and persons, styled "Messengers of the Court of Exchequer," holding offices or places in the patronage of and appointed by the said hereditary chief usher: the duties hitherto performed by the said hereditary chief usher and messengers of the Court of Exchequer, so far as regards the process issued and issuing from the office of her Majesty's remembrancer in the Court of Exchequer, and of the treasurer of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, on the seal day next after each and every term, shall, from and after the abolition of the said offices of messengers of the Court of Exchequer, be discharged by her said Majesty's remembrancer, and his officers under his direction, and the officers of the said treasurer of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and shall be in all respects as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes as if performed by the said hereditary chief usher and messengers of the Court of Exchequer as heretofore, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding; and that it shall not be necessary in future for the process hereinbefore referred to to be sealed before or in the presence of the cursitor baron of the said Court of Exchequer on the said seal days as heretofore, but the same may be issued from the office of her said Majesty's remembrancer, and the office of the treasurer of the governors of the bounty of Queen Anne, and be respectively sealed in the office of her said Majesty's remembrancer, who has the custody or keeping of the great seal of the Exchequer.

Summary.

THE approach of the Quarter Sessions reminds us that nothing has yet been done to carry in operation the Expenses of Prosecutions Act, which was pressed upon the Legislature with so much urgency in the Session of 1851. The purpose of that Act is to empower the SECRETARY OF STATE to regulate the costs of prosecutions at Quarter Sessions. Sir GEORGE GREY, under whose auspices it was carried, suffered it to sleep for a whole twelvemonth, alleging want of leisure as the cause. Mr. WALPOLE's excuse at first was the valid one that he was new to office, and other matters of more urgency demanded his attention. But the recess has given him an opportunity to look into the subject, and the public and the Profession have a right to expect that a statute passed two sessions ago should not be suffered to remain longer in abeyance. The Judges, and, we believe, the Government, are of opinion that prosecutions at Quarter Sessions are not always properly conducted; they object to the indecent spectacle of a chairman conducting prosecutions, and playing the double part of Judge and Counsel; they think that criminal justice should not thus be brought into contempt; and they are of opinion that a Magistrate ought not to attempt to do what the Judges have declared that they will not and cannot do. The Expenses of Prosecutions Act was expressly intended to meet this as well as some other defects in the administration of criminal justice at Quarter Sessions, and therefore the Home Secretary should be called upon to enforce its provisions without further delay.

MILITIA ACT.

A CORRESPONDENT asks in your last paper whether attorneys are exempt from serving in the militia?

It appears to me that they are not entitled to any such exemption. The 32nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, enacts "that all the provisions of the said Act (i. e. 42 Geo. 3, c. 90) and of any Acts amending the same not hereby repealed, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, and so far as the same are not inconsistent herewith, extend and be applicable to the militia to be raised under this Act, and to all purposes thereof."

It follows, therefore, that as the exempting clause in the 42 Geo. 3, c. 90, namely, the 33rd section, does not include attorneys, neither are they excepted by any of the subsequent Acts, nor by the 21st section of the last Act, they are liable to serve either in person or by substitute in the militia. W. H. F.

Chichester, 23th Sept. 1852.

THE WELCH MILITIA.—In some districts of the principality the volunteering for the militia is proceeding rapidly, and the requisite number of men will speedily be procured; whereas in other parts men enrol themselves so slowly that recourse must be had to the ballot. In Montgomeryshire a large body of active and able-bodied young men have volunteered, and it is said that there will be a greater number of applicants than is required for the present year to form the Montgomeryshire militia. The quota for Carmarthen have nearly all been procured, there being an abundance of applications. In the various divisions of the county, the volunteering has proceeded most satisfactorily. In Pembrokeshire, on the contrary, the enlisting is very tardy, and the requisite number, it is expected, will not be procured by voluntary enrolment. This will also be the case with the enlistment for the counties of Flint and Glamorgan.

THE MILITIA.—The cost of the militia now raising, for the year ending the 31st of March, 1853, is estimated at 386,715*l.* In the present year the number to be raised is 50,000, and 100,000*l.* is put down as "bounty and recruiting charges payable within the year, taken at the rate of 2*l.* per man, payable partly on enrolment, and partly at the termination of the training and exercise, or by monthly allowance."

Out of nearly 100 volunteers required from Woolwich alone, the authorities will not be able to raise a dozen, on account of its being a military garrison. —Kentish Mercury.

DECREASE IN PAUPERISM.—From a return to the House of Commons printed, it appears that in outdoor and indoor relief there was a decrease of 222,937 persons at the Lady-day quarter of 1851, compared with the Lady-day quarter of 1850. In England, at the Lady-day quarter of 1850, there were 289,960 indoor paupers relieved, and 1,519,348 outdoor; while in the corresponding period of 1851 the numbers were—indoor 276,395, and outdoor 1,313,934. In Wales, in the first period, there were 8,087 indoor, and 100,290 outdoor; and in the second period 8,088 indoor, and 96,331 outdoor. In England and Wales the number in the receipt of indoor relief at Lady-day quarter of 1850 was 298,047, and at the like period of 1851, 284,483, being a decrease of 13,564, while in outdoor relief the number was 1,619,628 in the first, and 1,410,265 in the second period, being a decrease of 209,373, and a total in the classes of the year of 222,397.—Sun.

THE LANCASHIRE MAGISTRACY.—From a list of the county magistrates, just published, we find that 479 gentlemen are qualified as justices of the peace for this county—viz. 32 in the hundred of Amounderness, 62 in Lonsdale, 83 in Blackburn, 21 in Leyland, 121 in West Derby, and 160 in Salford. The list comprises the names of three earls, one eldest son of an earl, two younger sons of an earl, one baron, one younger son of a baron, one right honourable, nine baronets, six knights, 23 members of Parliament, and 28 clergymen.—Liverpool Mercury.

Six men are to be selected from each division of the Metropolitan Police to form a police force for Australia. The pay will be 7*s.* 6*d.* a day, with passage and all expenses paid: each volunteer will have to engage to serve five years, or incur a penalty of 30*l.*

No cases are so interesting to so great a number of our readers as those which relate to the Law of Vendor and Purchaser, and therefore it is that we make it a rule to pay such particular attention to them. Of this class was Ayles v. Cox, 20 Law T. Rep. 4. There one of the conditions of sale was, that "if any mistake or error be made or discovered in the description of the premises, or any other whatever shall appear in the foregoing particulars, such mistake or error shall not annul the sale, but a compensation or equivalent shall be given or taken, as the case may be, such compensation or equivalent to be settled by the Master, in case the parties differ." One of the lots was described as being "copyhold," but it turned out to be partly freehold. Was this an error of description, for which only compensation could be claimed? The Court held that it was not; that the vendor had "sold a different thing from that which, by the conditions of sale, he purported to sell," &c.; and that, therefore, a good title could not be made. "It may be said it is better, but it is not what the purchaser bargained for, and he has a right to have copyhold if he wishes."

A somewhat curious case, under a will bequeathing charity, is that of Ex parte The Incumbent, &c. of Brompton, 20 Law T. Rep. 5. Money was given by will for the benefit of the poor of the town of K. There was no market-town of K. but a place called the town of K. was situate in the parish of K. and in an adjoining parish, but without bounds to distinguish them. The trustees were ordered to apportion the charity. It was also decided that, under the 22nd sec. of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 70, the Court had the power of appointionment.

The construction of Wills continues to occupy a considerable portion of the reports from the Courts of Equity. Three were contained in last week's number. Of these the facts are usually too complicated to be described in a summary, and therefore, unless they lay down or illustrate some general principle of law which ought to be borne in mind by the Lawyer, we do not introduce them to particular notice here. One of the most frequently recurring questions is whether an interest given by a will is vested or not. This point arose in Goodman v. Drury, 20 Law T. Rep. 6. A. by will charged lands with an annuity of 15*l.* to B. and after her death with payment of 100*l.* to each of the three children of B. and which sum he bequeathed to each of them accordingly, and he directed it to be paid within six months after the decease of B. or to such of them as should be then living. One of the children died in B.'s lifetime. Was it a vested interest? Vice-Chancellor PARKER held it not to be so. He said that, "when there was a gift of personal estate to a legatee, the postponement of the payment to a future period did not prevent the legacy from vesting. This, however, was not the case where there was a gift of money charged on real estate. Whatever might be the terms of a gift of money charged on land, if the payment should be postponed, the legacy would not vest until the time of payment." This concise statement of the rule should be committed to memory by the reader.

An important statute of the last session for extending the provisions of the Trustee Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55 (20 Law T. 5), was last week published in extenso. It empowers the Court of Chancery to vest the estate in purchasers by order (after a decree or order for sale), in lieu of a conveyance by the party to the suit; as also on the refusal or neglect of a trustee to convey or release, for the transfer or receipt of dividends of stock standing in the name of an infant trustee. Where any person neglects or refuses to transfer stock, or receive dividends, or sue for, or recover, any chose in action, for twenty-eight days after order made, the Court is empowered by order to vest the right in such person as it may appoint, and so where there is such neglect or refusal by an executor. The Bank of England and all companies having stock, are directed to comply with such orders of the Court, and are indemnified for obedience to them. Another section empowers the Court to appoint new trustees where any trustee is convicted of felony, and where there is no existing trustee, and a general power is given to the LORD CHANCELLOR to make orders for the appointment of trustees, without an application to the Court, in all cases in which he has jurisdiction to order a conveyance or transfer of land or stock, or to make a vesting order. This Act is to be construed as part of the Trustee Act of 1850, and all orders made under that or this Act, for the transfer or vesting of property, are to be chargeable with the same stamp duty as deeds of conveyance.

MORTGAGE DEBENTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having perused your article on this subject in the LAW TIMES of the 18th instant, also other articles in previous numbers of the LAW TIMES which I have not now before me, I take the liberty of enclosing you a hasty sketch of a "scheme" which, I venture to think, would facilitate the completion of your views and wishes; also a short form of the "heading of a charge," or mortgage.

If your views could be established, I am convinced the landowners would be greatly benefited, and I fear not for the Profession.

It will afford me much pleasure if my suggestions should render you any assistance, but if you do not entertain them pray commit them to the flames, and you will not offend.

Sir, your very obedient servant

March, Sept. 23. J. H. J. WOODWARD.

SCHEME.

A. To establish a local registration of titles.

B. To appoint public valuers in each county.

C. An abstract of title certified by counsel to be registered.

D. The estate to be valued by two valuers.

E. The certificate of valuation to be registered.
The title-deeds to be deposited with the registrar before any charges are made.

F. Complying with the above requisites, the owner of an estate to be at liberty to issue charges or mortgages to the amount of two-thirds the value of the estate.
The charges to be signed by the owner of the estate, and witnessed by a solicitor.
The charges not to be issued until registered.
The charges to be numbered, and to take priority according to their date or registration.
The charges to be of any amount the owner of the estate may think proper, but the whole of the charges not to exceed two-thirds the value of the estate.
The charges to be transferable by a short form of indorsement.

G. The indorsers to be liable, or not, as they may think proper, to state in the certificate of indorsement.
Each transfer to be immediately registered, and to have no effect until registered.
The registration of all documents to be certified by the registrar, and a seal of the office to be attached.

H. The indorsee of a charge to be entitled to a power of sale, in case of default, in payment of principal or interest, at the times fixed by the charge.

NOTES.

A. The registration to be voluntary. All persons would be glad to avail themselves of it who wished to raise money.

B. If public valuers were appointed, and there might be many in each county, the parties investing their capital would, in all probability, be satisfied of their respectability and integrity.

C. The abstract and title deeds could be referred to by the parties advancing the money, and if the title were certified to be a good title by a gentleman of standing, the estate would be of greater value in the market, and consequently the charges more easily negotiable.

D. The valuers would also give additional value to the security according to their standing. They might be paid by fees of 3*l.* 3*s.* a-day, according to the time required in making the valuation.

E. The certificate of valuation ought to be registered for the perusal of the party investing his money, and to enable him to make inquiries as to the respectability and competency of the valuers, &c.

F. The charges are limited to two-thirds of the value of the estate, as it is assumed beyond that amount they would not be negotiable in the market: of course the owner would be at liberty to issue more if parties would advance the money; but these further charges should be different to the others, so that the public might easily detect them.

G. In the indorsement the words "not liable," or "liable," can be inserted, which would be sufficient.

H. The condition upon which each holder of a charge should be allowed to exercise the power of sale requires further consideration; also many other matters connected with the scheme.

HEADING OF A CHARGE.

A. Estate in the parish of Cromer, in the county of Norfolk, consisting of 300 acres of land, the property of A. B. of Cromer aforesaid, esquire.

B. First charge £2,000 0 0
Title certified by A. B. esq. barrister-at-law.
Valuation made by C. D. of Cromer aforesaid, land valuer; and E. F. of the same place, land valuer.
Valuation £3,000 0 0
Two-thirds of valuation 2,000 0 0

C. Here insert the form of the charge setting forth a true description of the estate. The term of years for which the money is borrowed, and whether subject to be called in by notice or not, &c. and the rate of interest.

NOTES.

A. The heading of the charge, if made in this form, would shew at a third sight view the situation of the estate, the tenure of it, the barrister who certified the title, the valuation and the name of the valuer, and the amount for which the charges would be really valuable.

B. A second charge should state above the amount for which such charge is made, the amount of the first charge in the following form:—

and so on in all future charges, so that the holder of any charge might know the amount of all charges that take priority over the one he holds. By this means he would also know whether two-thirds of the valuation were raised.

C. The form of the charge might, I think, be very short and simple, and the interest might be paid and received at the office of registration.

"NEW WILLS ACT."

I do not see the difficulty pointed out by "J. M. T." I think if he will read the 3rd section of the Act of 15 Vict. c. 24, he will find that the word "will" shall, in the construction of this Act, be interpreted in like manner as the same is directed to be interpreted under the provisions in this behalf contained in the Act of 1 Vict. The 1st section of 1 Vict. c. 26, enacts, "That every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male." J. W. S.

Answers to Queries.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

The case to which "A Subscriber" alludes, in your paper of the 25th inst. relating to the construction of conditions of sale, is, I presume, Gabriel v. Smith, 17 Law T. Rep. 61. W. H. F.

Chichester, Sept. 27, 1852.

COSTS OF CONVEYANCE.

Do not remember any reported case such as referred to in "A Subscriber's" query, in your last number; but in a case occurring in my own practice, the words were, that "the purchaser should bear the expense of all deeds of covenant," &c. Such a deed was required from a stranger, which I (acting for the purchaser) prepared and forwarded to the vendor's solicitors, who got the draft perused and the engrossment executed, but required me to pay the charges of the covenanter's solicitor. I demurred to this, contending that the condition, being similar in form to that which says, "the purchaser shall be at the expense of his own conveyance," only threw upon him the cost of preparing it, leaving to the vendor the cost of getting it perused and executed. The point was left to counsel, who advised that the purchaser was bound to pay the charges of the covenanter's solicitor, he being a stranger; but that if the vendor had been himself the covenanting party, he must have paid his own solicitor's charges.

In the case, however, quoted by your correspondent, I think no question can arise, as the words of the condition merely say that the deed shall be prepared at the purchaser's expense; and as the vendor has not guarded against the costs of perusal and execution, they, of course, fall upon him.

COUNTY COURTS.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

V. CASES RESPECTING QUESTIONS OF SET-OFF.

The principle of set-off not having been, like the other questions which have engaged our attention in the present series, created or originated by any enactment in the County Courts Act, but having subsisted long anterior to the establishment of these tribunals,—although it is one which is very frequently raised in the litigation of questions in these courts,—demands a brief inquiry into its nature before we proceed at once to consider the cases which have been adjudicated upon it. The defence of set-off does not even exist at Common Law. It is founded on the statute 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 28, made perpetual by the statute 8 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 4, by which it is enacted that "where there are mutual debts between the plaintiff and the defendant, and if either party sue or be sued as executor or administrator, where there are mutual debts between the testator or intestate and either party, one debt may be set against the other; and such matter may be given in evidence upon the general issue, or pleaded in bar, as the nature of the case shall require, so as at the time of pleading the general issue, where any such debt of the plaintiff, his testator, or intestate, is intended to be insisted on in evidence, notice shall be given of the particular sum or debt so intended to be insisted on, and upon what account it became due, or otherwise such matter shall not be allowed in evidence under such issue."

(a) By Charles Hamley, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

It is provided by sec. 5 of the 8 Geo. 2, that by virtue of the preceding clause, mutual debts may be set off against each other, as before mentioned, although such debts be of a different nature; but that in cases where either of the debts accrues by reason of a penalty contained in any bond or specialty, the same shall be pleaded, and the plea shall state how much is justly due on either side, and the plaintiff shall have judgment of the just balance only.

A set-off has been defined to mean a cross debt, for which an action might be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff; and it is very different from a mere right to a reduction of his demand or claim to defeat it, on account of some matter connected therewith. (Chitt. cont. 841). Thus the defendant may shew, without the aid of the statute of set-off, that the sum sought to be recovered was named in satisfaction of a claim which he had on the plaintiff. (Dale v. Sollett, 4 Burr. 2133.) But if A. agree to do work for a certain sum, and afterwards B. purchase some of the materials for A. which are worked up by A. the money expended by B. on that account must be set off, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. It is also necessary to plead a set-off, although the plaintiff has in an account given credit for the goods sold by the defendant to the plaintiff, such account not being final or settled, and no balance being struck. (Fothergill v. Jones, 1 C. & P. 133.) So if it be agreed between a master and servant that the latter shall pay out of his wages for all goods lost by his negligence, the value of goods thus lost may, in an action for wages, be deducted therefrom by virtue of the agreement. (Le Loir v. Bristow, 4 Campb. 134.) So in an action to recover money for dyeing goods, the defendant may, at Common Law, prove as a defence, that there is a custom of the trade that the amount of damage done to goods dyed may be deducted from the price of the dyeing. (Bamford v. Harris, 1 Stk. R. 343.) And although there can be no set off in replevin, even in the instance of an advowry for rent (Salsford v. Fletcher, 4 T. R. 512, per Lord Kenyon, C.J.); yet as the landlord's just claim is only to the balance of rent issuing from the premises, after his ground-rent and land-tax imposed upon him, in respect of the premises, or any annuity, &c. he may have charged thereon are satisfied, the tenant has a Common Law right to plead in bar that he has satisfied such prior claims for the landlord. (Salsford v. Fletcher, 4 T. R. 511; Taylor v. Samira, 6 Taunt. 624.)

We may here also observe, that it is not compulsory on the defendant to avail himself of his right of set-off. He may satisfy the plaintiff of the whole of his debt, and then resort to an action for the money due from the plaintiff. (Laing v. Chatham, 1 Camp. 252.) But if the evidence of the debt claimed to be due from the plaintiff to the defendant be doubtful, the fact of the defendant having omitted to set it off when he had an opportunity, might induce the jury to find against the demand. (Chitt. Cont. 843.) If the defendant's set-off exceeds the plaintiff's demand, an action lies for the surplus. (Hennell v. Fairbarn, 3 Esp. R. 104.) A plaintiff who arrests for the whole of his side of an account, without giving credit for an acknowledged or clear debt due to the defendant, may be treated as having acted maliciously, and without probable cause. (Austin v. Debram, 3 B. & C. 139.)

It is to be observed, however, that the statute does not apply except in the case of mutual debts; that is, to claims in the nature of a debt reduced or reducible to a certain or specific pecuniary amount, and recoverable in an action ex contractu, as assumpsit, debt, or covenant. (Morley v. Inglis, 5 Scott, 314.) Nor is a set-off available in an action for not accepting a bill of exchange for the price of goods, if the suit was commenced before the expiration of the period the bill was to run. (Hutchinson v. Reed, 3 Camp. 329.) But in case of bankruptcy, a defendant may set off a debt due to him from the bankrupt against a claim by the assignees against the defendant, for not accepting a bill of exchange in part payment of goods sold by the bankrupt to the defendant. (Gibson v. Bell, 1 Bing. N.C. 743.)

The general principle in all these cases is that the demand sought to be set off must be of a liquidated nature; and in general the defendant must address the same evidence in support of a set-off, as he would be bound to produce if he was suing for the recovery of the debt claimed to be due to him.

Having now considered the principle which regulates the law of set-off, and a few of the leading cases bearing on this subject, we will proceed to review those particular decisions on this point which have arisen out of questions that have been tried before the County Courts.

In the following case, the main point raised with regard to the question of set-off was, whether the reduction of a debt to less than 20*l.* by set-off, had the effect of bringing the case within the jurisdiction of the County Court. The plaintiff brought his action in a Superior Court against the defendant for, and proved a debt of, more than 20*l.* There were cross accounts between the parties, which had not been balanced. The defendant pleaded and proved a set-off, which reduced the plaintiff's claim below 20*l.* and the verdict passed accordingly. A rule nisi having been obtained under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 129, for leave to enter a suggestion upon the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, on the ground that he ought to have sued in a County Court, it was held, that the case did not come within the Act. Woodhams v. Newman, 1 Cox & Mac. 231: Wilde, C.J. observed in this case, while delivering his judgment, that it was clear that before a verdict in the Superior Court can have the effect of depriving the plaintiff of his costs, the action must have been one for which a plaint might have been entered in the County Court. Now, was that the case here? Was this such an action as should have been brought in the County Court? In construing this Act we must not confine our attention to one clause, but look at all the clauses in the Act that bear upon the matter we have to decide. The 58th section is considered material, and as assisting us in the construction of the 129th section. The 58th section enacts, "that all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is no more than 20*l.* whether a balance of account or otherwise, may be holden in the County Court without writ." Now, it is said that this is a case in which a plaint might have been levied in the County Court, because, it is contended, a debt which is reduced by a set-off to a sum within 20*l.* is within the meaning of the words "balance of account, or otherwise," in the 58th section. Looking at the whole Act, I think those words were meant to apply to cases where the parties had themselves balanced the account, or where there had been payment on account; but, whatever may be the meaning of those words, the present does not appear to me a case in which a plaint could have been entered in the County Court. The policy of the Act was to give jurisdiction in these courts for the decision of small disputes without a jury, otherwise we can hardly see any reason for the limitation of the jurisdiction of these courts. Here a large sum is in dispute. Here was a set-off of 80*l.* leaving a balance of less than 20*l.* This might involve questions of considerable nicety. The case might have turned upon some one item which might be more than 20*l.* or it might depend on items in the set-off to a large amount. In looking for the proper mode of construing the Act, we must, therefore, consider the inconveniences to which any particular construction might lead, and give the Legislature credit for having anticipated that inconvenience, and legislated with regard to it. What was the plaintiff's demand? It exceeded 20*l.*; therefore, if the plaintiff had sued in the County Court, and established his case, that Court must have adjudicated upon a sum exceeding 20*l.*; then it would have had to turn to the defendant's case to see how that account was to be rendered, and there again it would have to decide on a demand above 20*l.*; after which it would strike a balance between the accounts, and award its judgment thereupon. It would be, in fact, trying two cases, each of which was above 20*l.* and therefore beyond its jurisdiction.

Since the trial of this case, it has been decided by the Court of C. P. that where the plaintiff's debt is reduced below 20*l.* by set-off, the court at the trial will grant a certificate to empower the plaintiff to recover costs. (Osmond v. Bone, 1 Cox & Mac. 427.)

An action was brought in the County Court for the balance due upon some bills of exchange, the full amount of which would exceed 20*l.* At the trial, the defendant contended that the judge had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the plaintiff had no right, under the circumstances, to treat his claim as a balance; the judge, however, thought that he had. Upon a rule for a prohibition, it was held that as the question of jurisdiction involved the whole merits of the case, it being, in fact, whether there was a balance or not; and as the judge clearly had power to enter into the facts which raised that question, and as the affidavits were conflicting, the Court of Queen's Bench would not interfere with the judgment of the judge of the County Court. The Court of Queen's Bench also expressed its determination that it will not review the decision of a judge of the County Court, even upon a question of jurisdiction, where it is possible that the judge may have come to a right conclusion. (Joseph v. Henry, 1 Cox & Mac. 366.)

The plaintiff sued out two plaints in a County Court. The particulars of the first exceeded 20*l.* for work, and labour, and goods, sold and delivered, and purported to give credit for a set-off, shewing a balance under 20*l.* The particulars of the second plaint were items for money lent, and interest, not exceeding in the whole 20*l.* Some of the items in the two plaints were contemporaneous, but there were no items in any other way connected. Both plaints were heard, and the plaintiff recovered certain amounts in respect thereof. The affidavits in support of a motion for writs of prohibition, on the grounds that the first plaint had been reduced below 20*l.* by a set-off, and that the two plaints constituted but one entire cause of action, shewed that these objections were raised at the hearing, and that there had never been any account stated in which it had been agreed that the set-off should be allowed; but did not shew that the plaintiff, at the hearing of the first plaint, proved more than 20*l.* to be due, or that there had not been at the hearing an arrangement between the parties to allow the set-off. It was held that the affidavits were defective upon these grounds; that the judge might inquire if the defendant had consented to the reduction of the claim, and that such consent need not appear on the particulars of demand. It was held, also, that the particulars of the two plaints did not form one cause of action, within 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 63, and that this was not a case of splitting demands. (Kimpton v. Willey, 1 Cox & Mac. 350.)

The audit clerk of a railway company, under an agreement for 140*l.* a year, determinable by three months' notice, or payment of three months' salary, was improperly dismissed without notice; and being sued by the company for moneys in his hands belonging to them, claimed to set off the three months' salary, to be paid under the agreement, for an improper dismissal without notice. It was held that he was entitled to set it off. (The East Anglian Railway Company v. Lythgoe, 1 Cox & Mac. 380.)

Where the plaintiff's account exceeded the limits of the County Court jurisdiction, and he sought to bring it within by showing an agreement that cross accounts were to be set off between him and the defendant's testator (the defendant being sued as executor), and the Judge of the County Court proceeded on that view of the case, and found for the plaintiff, but there was no evidence of any binding agreement to that effect, the Court of C. P. granted a prohibition to restrain all further proceedings in the County Court. (Wilson v. Franklin, Executor, 1 Cox & Mac. 497.)

We shall next proceed to review the cases which have been recently determined on the subject of "splitting demands."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your zeal in the cause of law reform will not, I am persuaded, restrain you from the insertion of a reasonable complaint. By the County Court Extension Act the barrister and attorney are so far placed on equal terms, that the former can claim neither pre-audience nor exclusive audience, but not a word is said about precedency in other respects. Since the Act has come into operation, a Bar has, in several places, been in regular attendance at the County Courts, but these courts are so constructed that there is seldom to be found any seats reserved for counsel, and very often no seats at all, the whole being frequently, and the most eligible being always, appropriated by the attorneys.

Of course I desire no introduction of personal precedency according to the heraldic tables, for this would simply involve the gross absurdity in many instances of placing the barrister above the judge, many members of the Bar being baronets, knights, or the sons of peers, and as such taking precedence in private life before any of the County Court judges, both personally and officially. But there is in all professions and in all official departments some principle of precedency established for the due maintaining of decency and order. Thus I need hardly tell you that if a minister of state wishes to see another officer inferior in the service he "sends for" him. The premier would "send for" the colonial secretary, and the colonial secretary would "send for" the commander-in-chief. In general, seniority is the title to precedency, as among the Bar; and I believe that there is not a court in the kingdom, except the County Courts, in which seats are not reserved exclusively for the Bar, as an arrangement tending both to decorum and convenience, there being no doubt that the barrister is entitled to precedency of the officers of the court.

This is not a mere matter of professional vanity, or I, at all events, should not complain of the omission.

By the late Act, the Attorney can appear in no case in which he is not "acting generally in the action;" which has been rightly construed to mean acting on a retainer directly from the client himself. In such cases the Attorney is already familiar with the facts before he comes into Court; but the counsel frequently never hears of the matter till his brief is delivered to him in Court, perhaps only a few minutes before the cause is called on. Last week, four briefs, in as many causes, were delivered to me at the sitting of the Court; one of these briefs extended to twenty-six sheets. Even the ablest counsel requires that his personal convenience should be reasonably consulted, when he is thus called upon, at ten minutes' notice, to construct a case entirely new to him. I trust, therefore, that our judges will at once direct that in all cases sufficient accommodation shall be reserved for the Bar, giving them in this respect the precedency to which they still continue to be undoubtedly entitled.

Having regard to the importance which these Courts are daily acquiring, the places in which they are held ought to be specially constructed for them. A few days since, I was in Court, with three other barristers; we not only could find no seats for a considerable time, but we were obliged to apologise to the judge for appearing unrobed, because, though our wigs and gowns were on the table, no apartment could be found in which to robe ourselves.

While addressing you on such a topic, I may observe that the prohibition of the Extension Act is not carried out as it should be. I have never yet heard of a single instance in which a counsel has violated the etiquette of his profession in accepting instructions immediately from the client; but I have been three times present when attorneys have received papers and fees from other attorneys in open Court; on one of these occasions only did I see a fee pass; but in all the instructions were openly given; and in the personal remarks into which one of the attorneys was unluckily betrayed, he publicly charged his opponent,—and very truly, too,—with being the advocate for another attorney, in violation of the Act: he was reprimanded by the Court for his intemperate remarks, but no investigation was made into the charge. I think our judges should order a universal practice of interrogating both the attorney and the client, in limine, as to the party whom the former had retained; if the practice were thus compulsory and invariable it would not be invidious in any given case.

One word more. In several Courts the attorneys have assumed the gown and bands. If they think it decorous and respectful to appear in their professional costume, it is right to do so. I believe it is always the rule with the proctors in our Ecclesiastical Courts; but then they should adopt their proper robe, as officers of the Court. The official dress of the attorney or solicitor is a close, stuff gown, with short sleeves of a peculiar form. I rather think that the old name of this sleeve is "manchet." It is as absurd in the attorney to put on the counsel's gown, or any partial imitation of it, as it would be for an undergraduate to appear in hall or chapel in the gown of a master of arts, or for a serjeant-major to substitute epaulets for the cheveron. The bands are no part of the attorney's professional dress. But if the robes are assumed for the purpose of misleading the gaping suitors by whom the courts are filled, as to the position of the attorney, then it becomes nearly allied to the offence of obtaining money under false pretences, and is unquestionably a fraud upon the Bar.

"Live and let live" is a homely proverb, and a very just one; it is very difficult for either branch of the Profession to gain a decent livelihood by it in these times, but let us, at least, have a fair chance.

A BARRISTER.

ASSISTANT CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am glad, amongst others, that your attention has at length been drawn to the heavy grievance which, from the establishment of the County Courts, has been sustained by the Assistant Clerks, who nearly do all the work, and in some instances have very serious responsibilities. In short, I contend that they are the prime movers and workers of the whole system, and are wretchedly paid. Unless some change for their advantage takes place, depend upon it that many of them will be compelled to resign. Now that the jurisdiction of the Courts has been extended, and is sure to be still more so, Assistant Clerks must be Attorneys, and of ability and experience too.

I would suggest, therefore, that the learned judges who are to frame a scale of costs in other respects, should be empowered to regulate the salaries of Assistant Clerks. One hardship to an Assistant Clerk is, that his partner (if he has one) is totally excluded from all practice in the courts.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ANOTHER ASSISTANT CLERK.

27th Sept. 1852.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.—On Saturday last Mr. Tyrell, the judge of the Exeter County Court, announced his determination with respect to an application made by Mr. Ring, on behalf of the Bar, for exclusive audience in cases of insolvency. He stated that he should confine himself to the point of the law—whether he ought or could grant to the Bar the exclusive audience which had been asked for. It had been urged very strongly that this Court sat, in cases of insolvency, not as a County Court, but as an offshoot from the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors; and that although as the County Court, it was bound by certain rules, it was not bound by the same rules when it was dealing with insolvent cases, because it dealt with such cases only by virtue of a delegated authority. Now it was quite true that when an insolvent prisoner applied for his discharge, he was obliged to present his petition, in the first instance, to the Insolvent Debtors' Court in London; and that the petition, after being duly lodged in that court, came down to the County Court for the purpose of being heard and disposed of. But it did not come down by virtue of any delegated jurisdiction. The commissioners above could not delegate their jurisdiction, for they did not possess it. They had no more to do with the case, in point of exercising any discretion over it, than any stranger. It must be sent by the Act of Parliament to the County Court sitting in the place where the party had resided for the last six months. If, within that time, he had resided in two different places, then indeed the commissioners could exercise a discretion, but only to the extent of determining to which of the two places it should go. They did not delegate any authority of their own. He then looked carefully through the statutes, and considered that the jurisdiction in insolvency was given to this Court as a County Court, and not an offshoot from the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. But, even assuming that it were otherwise, in that case the practice of the Court would come under the operation of a rule which had been framed under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, and had thus become part and parcel of the law of the land. By that rule (the 91st) it was declared that "the provisions of the statute, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 91, as to the persons who shall be allowed to appear for any party, in any proceeding in the County Courts, shall apply to all proceedings in insolvency, or for protection." Therefore, in whatever character he was sitting—whether as a County Court, or as an offshoot from the Insolvent Debtors' Court—if that rule was still in operation he was bound to follow it, and to reject the present application. If, however, that rule had been repealed by a statute subsequently passed, then he was bound by the provisions of that subsequent statute, which empowered him to hear, if he pleased, a barrister retained by or on behalf of any party, but which gave no right whatever, of exclusive, or even of pre-audience. He was quite clear, therefore, that whatever view he took of his own position, in reference to those cases, the application made by Mr. Ring was one which he had no power to grant.—Devonshire Chronicle.

UNAUTHORISED LEGAL FORMS.—At the Redditch County Court, on Saturday last, before Mr. Benjamin Parham, Judge, a defendant in one of the causes heard produced a printed notice which had been sent to him by the plaintiff respecting the debt claimed. This document, which was surmounted by the royal arms, purported to be "the only legal notice under the County Courts Act," an extract from which was quoted in proof of its validity. Mr. J. Powell, solicitor, of this town, who was engaged in the case, called the attention of his Honour to this form, and also to the words of the County Courts Act, the 25th section of which provided that every person who should serve any forged process, or deliver to any person any paper, falsely purporting to be any summons or other process of the Court, or who should act, or profess to act, under a false colour or pretence of such process, should be guilty of felony. His Honour, therefore, intimated to the plaintiff in the case that he had assuredly committed an offence in using such a paper as that before him, but as he had probably erred in ignorance, he would accept his promise not to offend in a similar way in future. The judge also sent for Mr. Lewis, the printer of the notice in question, and, having made him aware of the provisions of the Act, cautioned him against issuing such publications, to which Mr. Lewis expressed his readiness to attend.—Birmingham Journal.

THE LAWYER.

LETTERS FOR PAYMENT OF DEBT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am inclined to doubt your law in the LAW TIMES of 25th instant, p. 4, "if the debt is paid without more, you can only ask the costs of the letter; you cannot compel them, if refused."

See 1 Jurist, 740; Morrison v. Simmons, 1 Burn & Ad. 559; 1 Dowl. Prac. Cas. 525.

I apprehend that if a client chooses to authorise his attorney to insist upon payment for one letter before action, a tender of the debt without the charge for letter would be held insufficient.

It is quite true that there is not a mutuality between the attorney and the debtor so as to warrant the attorney compelling payment for a letter; but I submit that a creditor is entitled to have his debt paid so far free of cost. That he has incurred it, and unless the amount is tendered with the debt he may go on, get a verdict or judgment on the plea of tender (which, in such a case, would not be made out), and have the cost of letter allowed on taxation.

I do not say that I would advise such a course, but I think it might be safely presumed.

Thus—The debt being.....	£30	0	0
Cost of letter incurred under sanction of the cases cited		3	6
Has really become a debt due to plaintiff	£30	3	6

How can a tender of the 30*l.* answer that?

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A. T. STEAVENSON.

Darlington, 27th September, 1852.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—As already stated, on the first day of Michaelmas Term, two of the Masters in Chancery (James W. Farrer and W. Brougham, esqrs.) will be released from their duties, and the Lord Chancellor is empowered to release the remaining Masters. There is a clause in the same Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 80), which is not generally known, by virtue of which parties may be required to wind up proceedings before the Masters. It states that, in order as expeditiously as may be to wind up all the causes, matters, and things, which may from time to time be depending before or have been referred to the Masters, it shall be lawful for every Master at any time to summon, as he shall deem fit, all or any of the parties to any cause, &c. so depending, or their solicitors, and thereupon to proceed and give such directions and make such order as he may think necessary for the purpose of settling and winding up the same; but any such order shall be subject to be discharged or varied by the Court, upon application made for that purpose, and the Master shall be at liberty to proceed, for the purposes aforesaid, in the absence of any of the parties or solicitors neglecting or refusing to attend the summons.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

THE case of M'Calmont v. Rankin, 20 Law T. Rep. 1, should be read by all who are concerned with mercantile law, if only as being one of the ablest judgments of the most learned Lawyer of our time. A. a firm in Liverpool, by letter agreed with the English agent of B. a colonial firm, to accept the agency of that firm, and to make advances, in consideration of all consignments being made to them. The A. firm accordingly made advances, and were advised by the B. firm of its intention to consign a ship and its cargo to them, to the credit of the consignors, and they forwarded a power of attorney to the A. firm to sell the ship on its arrival. Thereupon, relying on the promised consignment, A. firm made a further advance to the English agents of B. The B. firm, however, got into difficulties, and before the ship sailed, assigned it, with the cargo and freight, to another firm, who duly registered it in their own names, and they afterwards assigned it to a third firm, who duly registered it in the name of one of its partners. The master appointed by A. was changed by his assignee, and the new master was retained by the third firm, by whom the ship and cargo were consigned to their own agents at Liverpool, with a power of attorney to sell the ship, and the usual invoices, bills of lading, &c. addressed to their agents. On the arrival of the ship in England, it was claimed by the A. firm. Were they entitled to it by virtue of the promise and the power of attorney, or had it passed legally to the then holders. Lord ST. LEONARD'S held that the A. firm had no claim to it. For the reasons why, the reader is referred to the judgment, which, like all those which we have preserved of the present Lord Chancellor, is given verbatim. It is our purpose thus to place in the hands of the Profession a complete collection of the judgments of Lord ST. LEONARD'S. They will be equally valuable for present reading and for future reference, and being verbatim reports, they may be always relied upon for citation as authorities.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ASSURANCE OFFICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The attention of the public has been for some time past very much drawn to the position of Life Assurance Companies, and now we are enlightened on the subject by pamphlets from the actuaries of two Scotch offices (Mr. Thomson and Christie). The object of these gentlemen appears to be simply to throw dirt on all new offices, and to extol and recommend the old ones.

For this purpose a certain number of new offices, good and bad, are mixed up together in a table, the object of which is to shew what every person of common sense knew before the two above-mentioned gentlemen wrote on the subject, viz, that the expenses of the first five years of an Insurance company amount to a great deal of money, and sometimes exceed the portion of capital paid up.

If these gentlemen would favour us with their views, and form data as to the old companies, the world in general would be much more obliged to them, for it has at present nothing to go by, as their accounts are not forthcoming.

The remedy for the present state of things is obvious. Let all Insurance Companies be put on the same footing; let all their accounts be filed at proper periods, under the pain of a large penalty in the event of default; and let there be a government inspector, having the power to compel all insolvent companies to close their establishments.

It is owing to the competition of new companies that those leviathan establishments, the Sun, Globe, Pelican, &c. now give the assured a portion of their profits.

When we know that one old company allowed one of their junior clerks to embezzle upwards of 60,000*l.* and that another gave 16,000*l.* to their actuary, in order to get rid of him, there would appear to be as good reasons for looking after the old companies as the new ones.

It always has a suspicious appearance when old companies change their names. Why did the Freemasons transform itself into the Albert, the Dissenters into the General, and the Licensed Victuallers into the Monarch?

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ANTI-HUMBUG.

P.S. What Scotch Insurance Office was it that lost 20,000*l.* or thereabout, by its connection with a Joint-Stock Bank in the North, at Newcastle, I believe? Of course neither Mr. Christie nor Mr. Thomson were in the mess, though they know all about it. It was an old office.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The outrageous fees charged for power to swear affidavits in Chancery in the country deter many solicitors, on their admission, from becoming masters extraordinary.

In these days of diminished incomes to the Profession, and particularly now that a stir is being made on the subject of masters extraordinary, is it not a fitting opportunity for requiring that the profitable privilege of swearing affidavits should now be granted at something less than the "current price?" I am, Sir, yours, &c.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Practical Statutes of the Session of 1852. By WM. PATERSON, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Crockford.

THE huge tome that every succeeding year adds to the statutes of the realm has been long a standing jest with the public and a nuisance to the Lawyers. Fourteen or fifteen hundred folio pages closely printed are a formidable arrival at the office, whether contemplated with a view to reading or reference. But the truth is that a considerable portion of this pile of print consists of new laws, with which the English Lawyer has no concern. About one-third of the whole is usually devoted to Ireland, Scotland, and the colonies, and the constantly-repeated Mutiny Acts, and some Supply Acts make up another third; so that, upon the average, about one-third only of the annual volume of statutes is of any interest or value to the practitioner. Yet was he obliged to buy the whole, and what was still worse, to carry this ponderous load in his bag whenever he wanted a reference in a court or elsewhere. If, as often happened, he had occasion to refer to several volumes, a waggon would be necessary to convey the burden.

It was the experience of this great inconvenience that suggested the publication of a series of the Practical Statutes of each session; that is to say, all the statutes that the English Lawyer can ever require to use, omitting the Irish, Scotch, Colonial, and Supply statutes. By this arrangement the bulk has been so reduced that all the real legislation of the session affecting the Lawyer is contained in a small volume that can be carried in the pocket. Instead of a huge quarto, a duodecimo admits of easy conveyance to court or elsewhere of any number of volumes to which the practitioner may have occasion to refer. To make the work still more useful, the editor adds explanatory notes and introductions to each statute, and a much more copious index is provided than that found in the bulky editions of the statutes at large. Every statute is printed verbatim.

Of this series three volumes have now appeared, and they have been received with growing favour by the Profession, as their practical utility and convenience have been tried and proved. The new volume for the last Session is remarkable for being the largest in size, and in its contents the most important of them. The Session in which nothing was expected to be done, has really done more than any within our memory. This volume comprises, among others which in any ordinary year would have been deemed great measures, the Common Law Procedure Act, the Equity Reform Acts, the Copyhold Enfranchisement Act, the Passengers Act, the Patent Law Amendment Act, the County Courts Improvement Act, and the Trustees Act. These have been copiously annotated by the Editor, and he has introduced the new rules in his notes to the Chancery Reform Act. The convenience and advantage of this compact edition of the Practical Statutes will be apparent from this, that the entire cost of the volume containing all the above, and about thirty others, is less than that of one of the editions of the Common Law Procedure Act alone!

This series will be made still more valuable by the design now in progress of publishing, in like shape, the Practical Statutes of previous years, omitting from them all the repealed statutes and parts of statutes, and adding, in notes, all the decisions of the Courts upon their construction. This will, in fact, supply the whole law in its best and most compact form. Thus, the volume for 1849, now in the press, contains the New Bankruptcy Act and the Second Winding-up Act. On both of these there have been a vast number of decisions by the Courts. All of these will be collected in notes, so that the Lawyer will be enabled to refer from the words of the statute to the notes at the foot of the page, and see in a moment what construction the Courts have put upon the section he is reading. The value of this will be at once recognised by every Practitioner. This gives him the whole law as it has been framed by the Legislature and expounded by the Judges, and that is what he wants, but what he has not hitherto possessed.

The Patent Law Amendment Act, and Patent Law generally as affected by that Statute. By PETER BURKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Benning.

THE Act of last session certainly effected considerable improvements in the Law of Patents; but we cannot help sharing to some extent the doubts of those who question the policy of a patent law under any form. Inventions, so called, are rarely such in reality. Ninety-nine patents in a hundred are for improvements on some former invention; and the practical effect is to prohibit other persons from improving. However, the prejudice runs the other way, and so long as patent is permitted, the law that regulates it should be simple, efficient, and inexpensive. Notoriously it has not been so hitherto, and it remains to be seen whether the Act of last session will make it so. Mr. BURKE'S edition of it is got up with his usual care. He describes briefly the law as it now is, dividing his subject into—1. The patent, and the form of its duration. 2. The subject of the patent. 3. The patentee. 4. Matters relating to the patent. 5. Legal proceedings relative to patents. 6. Analysis of the new Act. We can recommend it as a compact and useful edition of the statute.

The Code of Practice of the High Court of Chancery, &c. By THOMAS KENNEDY, Solicitor. Vol. II. London: Butterworth.

THIS volume has issued from the press most unseasonably. It consists for the most part of a collection of the orders from 4th March, 1846, all or most of which will be wholly invalidated by the new practice. Appended to these are the new Chancery Reform Acts; but they also are useless without the orders which are not yet issued. We cannot conceive the purpose of this work at this time. The first volume was a good collection of the then practice of Chancery; but the greater portion of this one is obsolete before it appears. Even in its best form, it is not a treatise on practice, but merely a gathering together chronologically of orders and statutes. Why did not Mr. Kennedy wait for the new orders, and then publish a treatise on the new practice? That would have been useful: this is useless, or worse—it will perplex.

Chancery Cases and Dicta. By C. PURTON COOPER, Esq. Q.C. Nos. 1 to 4. Butterworths. An interesting collection of dicta of great Equity Judges, collected from the reports, each one of which states some principle of law or rule of practice, to which Mr. COOPER has sometimes appended illustrative remarks of his own. These extracts vary in length from three lines to a page. We presume that it is a gathering from his common-place book—a sort of "elegant extracts" or "beauties" of the reports—some are from manuscript notes. When completed, it will be one of the curiosities of legal literature. It shews the editor to be a diligent reader.

Mr. KAIN has published a fourth edition of his popular System of Solicitor's Book-keeping, its general acceptance proving that experience confirms its utility.——Dr. LEECH has issued a second edition of his Suggestions on the Law of Lunacy and Lunatic Asylums; and Mr. WARD, of Maidenhead, has produced a second edition, with improvements, of his Treatise on Investments, of which we had occasion to report so favourably on its first appearance, when we prophesied for it the success it has since found.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

FEES OF PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL. — The public in general are aware that an Act of Parliament was passed during the late session for the removal of Smithfield Cattle Market, but few persons would imagine the amount of the legal expenses incurred in obtaining that Bill. Among the items in the civil contingencies which were voted in June last, there appears the following costs and expenses on account of the Smithfield market:—Removal Bill, 3,612*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* Mr. Hume, a few days afterwards moved for a return of the "particulars" of this charge, and, in consequence, a copy of the attorney's bill "of costs, charges, and expenses for soliciting the Smithfield Market Removal Bill," has been presented for the edification of the public. It appears from this document that three counsel were engaged to conduct the Bill through its several stages, viz.:—Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, Mr. Edwin James, and Mr. T. F. Ellis, each of whom in the first instance received a retaining fee of 6*l.* 5s. 6d. Next comes fee to Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, with papers, 83*l.* 3s. 6d.; ditto, Mr. E. James, 44*l.* 12s.; ditto, Mr. Ellis, 44*l.* 12s. Next follows Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, for eight consultations, six guineas each; ditto, Mr. James; ditto, Mr. Ellis. Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, eight attendances before committees of the House of Commons, ten guineas each; ditto, ditto, to Messrs. James and Ellis. When the Bill got into the Lords these learned gentlemen each received a fresh retainer with a fee of six guineas each. Then comes Mr. Serjeant Wrangham, with papers, 88*l.* 14s.; Mr. E. James, 66*l.* 13s.; Mr. Ellis, 44*l.* 12s. Then there are eight more consultations, with a fee of six guineas to each counsel, and seven attendances before a committee of the House of Lords, for which the learned gentlemen are paid a further fee of ten guineas each, making altogether 1,273*l.* to be divided among the above three gentlemen. The attorney's share of the spoil was in proportion; the attendances charged are innumerable, and the charge varied according to the rank of the party attending. The attorney's bill, exclusive of fees paid to counsel, amounted to 1,819*l.* of which 25*l.* was disallowed on taxation. Among the charges under the head of fees paid to officers of parliament, appears:—House of Lords, fees, 33*l.* 4s. which was disallowed, and a note appended, stating that "no such fee was paid or payable." Whatever might be the necessity for the removal of Smithfield-market, most people will think that it might have been effected at far less expense.

AMENDMENTS IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.—A benefit is conferred by the Common Law Procedure Act by the 222nd section, by which the Courts and Judges thereof may order amendments of all defects and errors in any stage of the proceedings in civil causes, with or without costs, at their discretion.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY.—It is provided by the 142nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, that in future the bankruptcy or insolvency of either the plaintiff or defendant shall not abate an action in the Common Law Courts.

ENTERING APPEARANCES.—By the new Common Law Act, entering "appearances," according to the statutes of 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, and 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, is abolished.

NEW WRITS.—The new writs to be used under the Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), which will take effect on the 24th of October next, have been issued. They are very simple in form and language, and in accordance with the schedule annexed to the statute.

WRITS OF SUBPŒNA AND SUMMONS.—Among the proceedings about to be abolished in the Court of Chancery are the writs of subpœna and summons upon a claim.

CONCISENESS.—It is directed by the new Chancery Act that bills of complaints are to be "concise" after the commencement of the Act, and to be divided into numbered paragraphs, but not to contain interrogatories.

FEES.—There is a provision by which the Lord Chancellor is empowered by any order or orders to be made by him to vary, reduce, or abololish all or any of the fees payable in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and to substitute one or more fees in lieu thereof, and to direct that all or any of such fees from a day to be named in such order or orders, and thenceforth, be collected by means of stamps, to be provided and used in the manner prescribed by the Act.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATION.—On Saturday last a meeting was held at the Lion Hotel, Shrewsbury, for the purpose of extending the operations of this association. Mr. Wm. Shaen, M.A. the secretary of the association, attended. We observed in the room the following solicitors connected with the vicinity:—Messrs. Jackson, Craig, Palin, Brougliall, E. Hughes, Thos. Griffiths (of Bishop's Castle), Gordon, and Newill. Mr. Shaen addressed the meeting, explaining the advantage of obtaining a widely special organisation of the Profession so as to obtain more speedily those various measures of legal reform which were of so much importance and so much desired by the Profession, instancingespecially the repeal of the certificate duty, and the modification of the agency clause in the County Courts, by which an attorney, as the law stands, must either attend in person or else instruct a barrister. Mr. Shaen was listened to with great attention, and several solicitors came forward and enrolled themselves as members of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association.

Mr. Hugh Cavendish Coleman, of Lincoln's-inn-fields, has been remanded by the Lord Mayor, on a charge of having "unlawfully, falsely, wilfully, and solemnly declared in writing, before William W. Fenn, notary public, that he had never, sold, mortgaged, or otherwise incumbered a certain property referred to in the said declaration, or his separate interest therein, the same being a material particular in the said declaration." The property in question was an income arising from houses and other sources, valued at 450*l.* yearly, to which Mr. Coleman will be entitled at his mother's death. It is alleged that he had incumbered the property before he made the declaration; on which false declaration he has raised 400*l.* and 300*l.* respectively. The case has not been fully gone into yet; but sufficient was stated to prevent the Lord Mayor's admitting the accused to bail.

To Readers and Correspondents.

A correspondent inquires whether railways do not come within the Observance of Sunday Act (3 Ch. 1, c. 2)? We think not. Certainly it would be impossible to enforce it. The Act itself has virtually fallen into disuse.

"F. E." (Derby).—It was an oversight, in the absence of the Editor.

"Y. E." (Torquay).—We know of no book that treats the subject in the practical manner desired by our correspondent, and with the impending changes, it would not pay to publish one.

"S. B."—The question has been already answered.

"X. W."—We fear that our correspondent has no remedy. The sending was a voluntary act on his part, and the receiver is not bound to take care of it.

Advertisements from the Country should be accompanied with an order upon the Agent in Town, or a Post-office order (payable at 180, Strand) for the amount.

Advertisements ordered for the first page are charged one-half more. If not so ordered, they will take the chance of position.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1852.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

ABSCONDING DEBTORS.

Just now "the diggins" offer an irresistible temptation to people in debt to run away from creditors at home and seek fortune abroad. We beg to remind our readers that there is a very summary method of preventing the escape of such light-heeled debtors, which was provided by a recent statute called "The Absconding Debtors Arrest Act."

If any client applies to you to know what he can do to prevent the flight of a customer who has not paid his bill, you may tell him that there is an easy remedy. He has but to make an affidavit of the debt, and apply to a County Court Judge or a Commissioner of Bankruptcy, who is empowered to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the absconding debtor, and thereupon he will be taken into custody, and to obtain his release must either pay the debt or give sufficient bail for its payment, or for a bona fide purpose to contest it, and to pay if defeated.

All the practice under this useful Act, with the forms of the necessary affidavits, &c. will be found in a little volume published by Mr. Knox (a), and to that the reader is referred for the details. Our object here is only to remind the Profession, at this moment, when it is so much wanted, that such a ready process exists. At all the ports of emigration we understand that it is daily enforced, and that by means of it an immense amount of debts has been recovered.

(a) The Absconding Debtors Arrest Act. By J. Malcolm Knox, Esq. Barrister-at-law. Crockford. Price 1s.

DEFENDANTS ABROAD.

The Common Law Procedure Act has wrought a great improvement by enabling proceedings to be taken against defendants resident abroad. Hitherto they have escaped, because process could not be served upon them. After the 24th of this month, they will cease to enjoy that impunity. The clause is as follows:—

"In case any defendant, being a British subject, is residing out of the jurisdiction of the said Superior Courts, in any place except Scotland or Ireland, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff to issue a writ of summons in the form contained in the schedule (A), which writ shall bear the indorsement contained in the said form, purporting that such writ is for service out of the jurisdiction of the said Superior Courts, and the time for appearance by the defendant to such writ shall be regulated by the distance from England of the place where the defendant is residing; and it shall be lawful for the Court or judge upon being satisfied by affidavit that there is a cause of action, &c. &c. and that the writ was personally served upon the defendant, or that reasonable efforts were made to effect personal service upon the defendant, and that it came to his knowledge, and either that the defendant wilfully neglects to appear to such writ, or that he is living out of the jurisdiction of the said Courts, in order to defeat and delay his creditors, to direct from time to time that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to proceed in the action in such manner and subject to such conditions as to such Court or judge shall seem fit."

This does not permit the plaintiff to take the person of the defendant, but it will enable him to proceed to judgment and execution, and take all the property which the defendant may have in England.

Now it is notorious that thousands of persons are living abroad, drawing incomes from property in England, and setting their creditors at defiance, protected in their dishonesty by the absurdity of the old law which limited process to our own shores.

That obstacle to justice is now happily swept away, and the practitioner should remember that he can proceed against a defendant abroad as effectually as against a defendant at home.

RESULTS OF THE RECENT REFORMS.

There is one contingency in favour of the Common Law Bar, to which we made no reference last week, but which certainly offers some prospect of a little business as a partial compensation for that which they have lost. Evidence is to be taken in the Equity Courts vivâ voce. Now the examination of witnesses is an art only acquired by much experience, and in that the Equity Bar is entirely wanting. They have not learned it by personal practice, and they have not even sat in courts where it is conducted, so as to catch from others something of the peculiar tact that it demands. It is, therefore, probable that sagacious Solicitors will take skilful and practised men from the Common Law Bar to examine witnesses for them in the Equity Courts. Such a man would have an infinite advantage over an unpractised opponent of the Equity Bar, who has not learned the art of handling a witness so as to elicit what he wants, and exclude what is undesirable. Henceforth a suit in equity, like an action at law, will mainly depend upon the evidence of the witnesses, and it will be of primary importance that the examination should be conducted by the ablest men, and in such a matter experience is ability, and experience can only be procured at the Common Law Bar, where the business of Counsel is, and his daily duty is to deal with witnesses and evidence, unless a wondrous skill is attained, which would certainly become the more apparent if pitted against an unpractised adversary, even though he were the most subtle lawyer in the Courts of Equity.

Should this course be adopted by the Solicitors, the Common Law Bar will share something of the advantages that the great Reforms in Equity Procedure will bring to the Profession in those more fortunate courts.

THE ATTACK ON THE ATTORNEYS.

The war against the Attorneys so unwisely begun, is as unwisely continued. The spirit of hostility is spreading and taking a bolder tone. An extraordinary instance of it has just been brought under our notice.

Readers will doubtless remember a remarkable prospectus of a projected Law Society at Birmingham, stated to be under the auspices of two Barristers, who proposed to give cheap law to the subscribers without the assistance of an Attorney.

At first we were inclined to think it a joke. We gave place to the document without a commentary, expecting to be enabled to publish an instant and indignant repudiation of it by the two gentlemen to whose names it gave so strange a notoriety. But they were silent, and we were reluctantly compelled to believe that it was no jest, but a painful reality.

We have since learned that the subject came under the consideration of the Bar mess of the Midland Circuit, and that one of the gentlemen, Mr. Grace, solemnly repudiated all knowledge of the document, and declared that his name had been placed there without his concurrence, upon which assurance he was acquitted by his peers. But Mr. Kennedy, the other name in the prospectus, answered not.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Grace did not instantly do here what he did with his Circuit, and thus at once relieve himself from the odium of being an assenting party to such a use being made of his name. He ought to have done so, for the document had been circulated largely in Birmingham, and he was bound, in justice to himself, to take the earliest opportunity publicly to declare it a forgery, and to do this where it would be seen by those whom it mainly concerned—the Profession of which he is a member, and which was itself compromised by the proceeding to which he was alleged to be a party. However, he has satisfied his Circuit that he was altogether ignorant of the society and innocent of any connection with it or its prospectus, and to that fact we are very glad to give publicity, although we should have much preferred to have done so some weeks ago when the document was first reprinted here.

As to Mr. Kennedy, there is unhappily no mistake. He not only admits the fact, he boasts of it. It seems that the society is a genuine one—that it has been got up by him; that his purpose in doing so is to supply its members with his own law, at a cheap rate, and, if he can, to annihilate the Attorneys. He makes no secret of it. The proofs are before us and the world. He has called a public meeting of the society; he has addressed to them a long speech in support of the position which he has taken up; that speech is printed in a pamphlet, and widely circulated, and a copy of it is now before us, challenging criticism.

He opens with an avowal of his object in the formation of the Cheap Law Society, of which he is to be the cheap adviser. He professes patriotic motives, of course, although the practical effect is to make business for himself by offering to do it cheaper than other Lawyers. He says,—

I seek to do for law what Cobden has done for corn—to make it cheap and reasonable. By law I do not mean litigation; the less of that the better. I mean legal advice, instruction, assistance. The County Courts have brought the administration of justice to the poor man's door; but you want more than that. You want to have within your reach a class of honourable advocates and faithful interpreters of the law. In plain English, you want a Bar; but a Bar accessible and useful to the people.

According to Mr. KENNEDY, the Attorneys are worse than useless:—

It is better that the client should have direct access to the Barrister for advice. It is better you should go to the fountain-head than be obliged to drink from the muddy stream.

In support of his argument he chooses to assume that an Attorney can know nothing of law or practice—a proof how little he knows the Attorneys:—

Just so, in the brief prepared by the Attorney to obtain Counsel's opinion, many little circumstances may be omitted upon which the question only turns. The Attorney has not thought of asking the necessary questions of his client. The Counsel, who is more far-seeing, would have asked those questions. Hence it is that the opinions of the most able Barristers are so often expressed with doubt, caution, and reserve, because they have not sifted the facts themselves, and they know how a slight variation of facts changes the complexion of a case; and many a cause is lost, as I have found in my own experience, for want of an early and direct communication with Counsel.

Some Counsel may be "more far-seeing" than some Attorneys; but we venture to assert that there would be more "far-seeing" men among any ten of the Attorneys in a provincial town than among the same number of those juniors who are likely to compose the Local Bars under the new order of things. But Mr. KENNEDY is not content with charging the Attorneys with being less "far-seeing" than local Barristers; he proceeds to offer them this insult:—

If the attorney were only the barrister's clerk, as under a good system he should be, there would be no harm in his introducing the case to his master: but a person who requires an additional fee, and has power to intercept the case without letting it reach the barrister, answers very little useful purpose that I can see.

Mr. KENNEDY seems to form a fair estimate of his own worth, for he deems his advice not worth a guinea, or at least he shews so great an anxiety to lower his price that it may be presumed he finds some difficulty in obtaining a guinea for it. He is all for free trade and competition in law:—

There is an idea that it is degrading to a barrister to take less than a guinea fee. False pride again! And (what is more to the purpose) sheer nonsense! and the sooner people get such rubbish out of their heads, the better! The price of every commodity adjusts itself. Leave counsel's fees to find their natural level, and find it they will. To fix anything of the kind at an artificial standard, is contrary to every maxim of political economy and common sense. A rule that counsel should never receive less than a guinea, is about as wise as a rule that no man shall sell a pound of sugar for less than eighteen pence.

He then makes a mighty discovery. The guinea fee was not an invention of the Barrister, but a clever contrivance of the Attorney, to conceal his own charges:—

The only persons who benefit by this assumed standard are the attorneys. The man who looks charily at a guinea before he parts with it is less alarmed at the prospect of paying six-and-eightpence, and knocks at the attorney's door with a happy assurance, which is not abated until he makes certain discoveries: viz. that three sums of six-and-eightpence make a pound; and that a bill of costs for instructions, attendances, letters, perusals, &c. make a sum-total exceeding the outlay which he originally intended.

Perhaps there is more truth in a portion of the following remarks than the speaker was conscious of:—

Guinea-fee rules indeed! What are we barristers that we should arrogate to ourselves, or that others should arrogate for us, a fixed minimum remuneration? Our opinion may be worth fifty guineas, or not more than five shillings, according to circumstances. When Milton sold his "Paradise Lost" for fifteen pounds, why did not the indignant world remonstrate, and cry out—"Here is a poem worth all the mines of Peru given away for a paltry sum to a bookseller!" What is a Counsel's opinion that we should make so much fuss about it? We barristers are gentlemen and scholars—as a class, we are above the attorneys; we have better education, higher thoughts, greater capabilities—would that we had more opportunities for their development!—but we must not think too much of ourselves for all that. The world was not made to coin artificial guineas for us.

Indeed Mr. KENNEDY does appear to know himself. He avows the cause of his detestation of guinea-fees—they bring nothing to him. Half-a-guinea or five-shilling fees might yield him something, but with guinea-fees he has no chance of employment—to use his own words, "each (ought to) get what his labour is worth." We are not jesting. It is his own confession:—

One thing is certain. Guinea-rules will never bring real guineas into my pocket. And on the other hand, half guinea-rules will not compel me to accept half a guinea, if my services are worth more. While the sign-painter is getting his five shillings, Landseer is making his five hundred pounds. Each gets what is labour is worth.

At this point we part with Mr. KENNEDY'S pamphlet for a few days. But we shall return to it, for there is much curious matter yet to be gleaned from it.

Besides, Mr. KENNEDY only says what many feel, and does what many are desirous of doing.

COUNTY COURTS.

IT will be seen that Mr. TYRELL, the very able Judge of the Exeter Court, has decided, after time taken to consider, that Counsel are not entitled to exclusive audience in Insolvency, thus differing from most of his colleagues, who considered themselves bound by the decisions of the Insolvent Court, or rather that they were called upon to adopt the rules of practice recognised in the Court above. But Mr. TYRELL bases his judgment upon a different view of the relationship of the Insolvent Court and the County Courts sitting in insolvency. He holds that the County Courts are not merely an extension of the Insolvent Court with its judges acting under a delegated jurisdiction, but he is of opinion that the County Courts are vested by the statute with an original jurisdiction in insolvency. If so, it was clear that the provisions of the County Courts Acts would regulate the Court in its insolvency jurisdiction, and by those provisions Counsel were expressly forbidden to have exclusive audience. Again, the 91st rule of the County Courts, framed under the County Courts Act, directed that the regulations as to parties appearing should apply to insolvency. The rule is, however, virtually repealed by the subsequent statutes regulating advocacy; but then the repealing statute itself declared that Counsel should not have exclusive audience. There can be no doubt that Mr. TYRELL is right.

The use of sham County Court notices is a favourable dodge with sham Lawyers, Accountants, and Debt Collectors. One of these cases was brought under the notice of the Redditch Court last week, and the parties were threatened with punishment under the provisions of sec. 25. It would be well if our readers would remember that such a power exists and wield it against every culprit. They would thus soon rout out the vermin who infest the County Courts.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

WE believe that Mr. KERR'S New Practice will be published on Saturday next.

It will be followed by a volume which will be no less useful—a complete collection of all the forms that will be required at Common Law under the altered practice, including every form of writ, of pleading, affidavits, &c. &c. giving in a small compass that which has hitherto occupied a huge tome in CHITTY'S Practice. This will be prepared by Mr. FISHER, Barrister-at-Law and Special Pleader.

Together these works will form a complete Common Law Practice as it is to be.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

HAVING already examined the Master in Chancery Abolition Act, and the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity Act, we now come to "The Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, which received the royal assent on the 1st July, 1852, a measure of great practical importance—not only on account of the reforms which it effects itself, but also on account of others of still greater magnitude, of which it is in all probability the forerunner.

The principal objects of the Act are stated in the preamble, which recites, that whereas several of the officers of the Court of Chancery have from time to time received, and do now receive, for their own use, various fees and emoluments for business done and transacted by them in or by virtue of their respective offices; and that it is expedient that such officers should not henceforth retain such fees and emoluments for their own use, but that they should receive adequate salaries for the performance of their respective duties; and that it is expedient that for the relief of the suitors of the said court further provision should be made with respect to the fees now payable by them, and that increased facilities should be afforded for the despatch of the business of the Court, and that certain offices connected with the Court should be abolished.

It enacts that, after the 28th October, 1852, no officer of the Court of Chancery, or of any of the Judges thereof, is to be entitled to receive and retain for his own use, any fee or reward whatsoever, and all of them now entitled to receive and retain any fees or other payments for their own use, which by virtue of the Act they will cease so to receive, and whose salaries are not fixed by the Act, are, while they continue to hold their respective offices, to receive in lieu of all fees or other payments whatsoever now received by or paid or payable to them, for their own use, such salary as, having regard to the emoluments heretofore received by them, and to the nature and tenure of such offices, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think just, and upon the present holders of such offices respectively ceasing to hold the same, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury are to fix the salaries to be thereafter received in respect thereof with reference to the nature and duties of such offices respectively. (Sec. 1.)

All officers, however, of the Court of Chancery, and of the Judges thereof, heretofore entitled to receive any fees or emoluments for their own use, and their successors in their respective offices and their several and respective clerks or agents, are to continue to receive and take the same until the Lord Chancellor shall by order otherwise direct, and all such fees and emoluments are to be accounted for and paid by them monthly into the Suitors' Fee Fund Account: the amount to be verified by the affidavit. (Sec. 2.)

And after the 28th October, 1852, if any officer or Judge shall, for anything done or pretended to be done relating to his office, wilfully take or allow any person to take for him, or on account of any person by him named, any fee, gift, gratuity, or emolument, or anything of value, other than his salary and what is allowed or directed to be taken by him under the Act, or any order to be made under the Act, the person so offending, when duly convicted, is to forfeit and pay the sum of 500*l.* and is to be removed from any office in the court, and is to be rendered incapable of holding any office therein, or otherwise serving her Majesty, her heirs, or successors (sec. 3), and may be prosecuted either by information, by the Attorney-General, by criminal information, or by indictment. (Sec. 4.)

As before remarked, these are most important provisions. When the officers of the court are paid by salaries instead of fees they have no interest either in multiplying the number of steps to be taken in a suit, or in prolonging its duration, not for the purpose of the benefit of the suitor, but for the purpose of increasing their own emoluments. Neither, again, have such officers any longer an inducement for doing what for many a long year they most effectually did, and what the officers of the Ecclesiastical Courts are now contriving to do, viz. to throw every obstacle in their power in the way of those whose object it has been to relieve the suitor from ruinous delays and expenses, and the Court, from the opprobrium which, notwithstanding the enlightened principles of its jurisprudence, it has, by its confused and barbarous mode of procedure, but too richly deserved. Formerly (not to mention those in higher places), the Masters and their clerks were paid by fees. Hence the origin of the procedure in the Masters' offices, which was, to use the words of the Chancery Commissioners, "obviously calculated to cause unnecessary delay and expense;" and, they add, "the system had its origin at the time when Masters and their clerks were paid by fees. Every warrant, every copy, every report, indeed every proceeding carried its fee, small, perhaps in individual amount, but the multiplication of which pressed heavily on the suitor and yielded large emoluments to the officers." (Ch. Comm. Rep. 30.)

Next comes a provision by which it is to be hoped that one source of very great expense in Chancery proceedings will eventually be much diminished. By the 5th section, after 28th October, 1852, the several allowances for copying provided for and directed to be paid to the clerk of reports, the clerks of entries, the assistant clerk of affidavits, the clerks of the examiners, and the copying or writing clerks of the Masters, by any Act or Acts of Parliament, is to cease; and power is given to the Lord Chancellor, by order to regulate the making and delivering copies of the pleadings and other proceedings and documents, and the manner in which such copies are to be paid for, and the amount of charge for the same, and by whom the amount to be so charged is to be received. (Sec. 5.)

A very important power is next conferred upon the Chancellor, by order or orders to vary, reduce, or abolish all or any of the fees payable in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and to substitute one or more fee or fees in lieu thereof, and to direct that all or any of such fees shall be collected by means of stamps. (Sec. 6.) And, after the day named in such order or orders, unless and until he shall otherwise direct, none of the fees mentioned therein are to be received in money, but by a stamp, denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable; and where any fee shall be payable in respect of any document, such stamp, at the expense of the party liable to pay the fee, and in such manner and under such regulations as shall by any order or orders be directed, is to be stamped or affixed on the vellum, parchment, or paper on which the proceeding in respect whereof such fee is payable is written, printed, and ingrossed, or which may be otherwise used in reference to such proceeding. (Sec. 7.)

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue are from time to time, upon the receipt of any order of the Lord Chancellor, to give the necessary directions for carrying the same into effect, and to provide everything for that purpose, and are to do, or cause to be done, everything that is necessary for the receipt and collection of the money to be paid for such stamps; and the said commissioners are to cause separate and distinct accounts to be kept of all sums of money received or collected by them under the provisions of any such order or orders, and of all costs, charges, and expenses incurred by them, or by their direction, in carrying the same into effect; and power is given to the said commissioners to pay and to deduct and retain out of such moneys all such costs, charges, and expenses, and also to deduct all sums of money repaid on allowances for spoiled stamps; and, after such deduction, they are from time to time, and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct, pay the moneys so to be received and collected into the Bank of England, to the credit of the Accountant-General, to be placed to the account there, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account." (Sec. 8.)

Power is then given to the Lord Chancellor to direct any of the officers of the Court of Chancery, whose duties may be diminished in consequence of the substitution of stamps for money payments, or otherwise, under the Act, to act under the directions of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in the sale and distribution of stamps; but if it appear to the Lord Chancellor, that it is not convenient that they should act as aforesaid in the sale and distribution of stamps, the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may appoint persons for such sale and distribution, and may allow them such discount or poundage as they may think fit. (Sec. 9.)

Power is given to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to make regulations for the allowance of such stamps as may have been spoiled or rendered useless, or unfit for the purpose intended, or for which the owner may have no immediate use, or which, through mistake or inadvertence may have been improperly or unnecessarily used, and such allowance is to be made either by giving other stamps in lieu of the stamps so allowed, or by repaying the amount or value to the owner or holder thereof, after deducting the discount or poundage (if any) allowed on the sale of stamps of the like kind. (Sec. 10.)

The provisions contained in the several Acts for the time being in force relating to stamps under the care or management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, are, so far as the same are applicable and consistent with the provisions of the Act, in all cases not thereby expressly provided for, to be of full force and effect with respect to the stamps to be provided under or by virtue of the Act, and to the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same stamps are to be impressed or affixed, and be applied and put in execution for collecting and securing the sums of money denoted thereby, and for preventing, detecting, and punishing all frauds, forgeries, and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such provisions had been therein repeated and specially enacted with reference to the said last-mentioned stamps and sums of money respectively. (Sec. 11.)

No document which by any order made as aforesaid shall be required to have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, is to be received or filed, or be used in relation to any proceeding in the Court of Chancery, or be of any validity for any purpose whatsoever, unless or until the same shall have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, in the manner directed by such order: but it is provided that if at any time it shall appear that any such document which ought to have had a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, has, through mistake or inadvertence, been received or filed or used without having such stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, the Lord Chancellor may order that such stamp shall be impressed thereon or affixed thereto, and thereupon every proceeding in reference thereto shall be as valid and effectual as if such stamp had been impressed thereon or affixed thereto in the first instance. (Sec. 12.) Officers guilty of fraud or wilful neglect in relation to stamps are liable to be dismissed by the Lord Chancellor. (Sec. 13.)

It is to be hoped that both with regard to the allowance for copying pleadings, and with regard to fees, which will now be paid into "The Suitors' Fee Fund," the LORD CHANCELLOR will exercise the powers entrusted to him, by diminishing as much as possible these great burthens upon the suitor. An illustration of the sums swallowed up by the fee fund is given in the very able evidence of Mr. LAKE before the Chancery Commissioners (Appendix, A, 175-181), where a bill of costs in a hostile administration suit is analysed,—a fair specimen of the result, in the shape of costs, of such a suit under the old system. The total of the bill of the plaintiff, as carried in for taxation between party and party, up to the order for sale, was 2,864*l.* Of that 307*l.* were for stationer's charges (an item which will be greatly diminished under the new mode of procedure); 518*l.* payments into the fee-fund, or near one-fifth of the whole; 645*l.* for fees to Counsel; and 1,362*l.* to the Solicitor. These items show, notwithstanding much has been done, that much remains yet to be done, to diminish the extravagant sums paid into the fee-fund.

It is, doubtless, a great improvement to collect the fees by stamps in preference to their being received by various officers in cash; the amount of what is received will now be accurately known, and the mode of collection is both more convenient and economical.

A question, however, of great importance with reference to this subject still remains to be decided, viz. whether it is right, or how far it is right, that the suitors of the Court should, in fact, be taxed, in order to pay for the administration of justice? This Act seems to go in the direction towards what is the correct principle on which such fees should alone be levied, viz. all the expenses of maintaining the Court and its officers should be paid by the country at large, but those expenses of a suit which are incurred in the management of property in the hands of the Court should, in the same manner as if it were in the hands of private trustees, be borne by the property itself, or those interested in it.

PAYMENT INTO COURT.

Does the payment of money into court in the County Court admit the cause of action, so as to preclude the defendants from adducing evidence which would be an answer to the plaintiff's entire claim for damage? It has been lately held that it does; but though at first sight this may seem the correct view, on a review of the cases and of the origin of the practice, the propriety of this holding may well be questioned. The case was as follows:—In the Leicester Court, in September last, an action was brought by a drover against the Midland Counties Railway Company, for injury done to sheep through their non-delivery at Leicester in due course, both for deterioration in value and for loss of market. The damage was laid at 7*l.* 10*s.* and the company paid 5*l.* into court. At the trial, upon proof by the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, the defendants met the amount of damage by counter evidence, and finally proposed to put in evidence the ticket signed by the plaintiff at the time which, according to a class of cases of which the Great Northern Railway, appellant, v. Morville, respondent (21 L.J. 119, Q.B.) is the last, formed the contract between the parties, and by its terms covered all claims of the kind sought to be established; but the learned judge (JOHN HILDYARD, Esq.) held, that the ticket was not admissible in evidence, and directed the jury, that as the payment into court admitted the causes of action, the only question for them was the amount of damages; and a verdict was subsequently given for the plaintiff for the whole amount.

Now, with all deference to the learned judge, it may well be doubted whether this direction would not be held wrong in the Superior Courts; and in order to determine whether this doubt be well founded, let us examine into the origin of the practice, and, after referring to the most recent decisions, see if there exists any difference in principle between the practice of those Courts and that of the County Court in this respect.

Payment of money into court was first introduced in the Superior Courts in the reign of CHARLES II. when KELYNGE was Chief Justice, to obviate the difficulties arising on the proof of the plea of tender, and as a consequence, "in an action for general damages upon a contract, or for a tort or trespass, as tender could not be pleaded, so the defendant was not allowed to bring money into court." (Tidd's Practice, 8th edit. vol. 2, p. 670.)

But this practice was extended to all personal actions, with some few exceptions, by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, and the rules of Court consequent thereon.

Under the old practice before this statute, it was doubted, says TIDD (p. 675), whether plaintiff could be nonsuited after bringing money into court; but there seems to be little reason for such doubt. When money is brought into court, unless the defendant will accept it with costs in discharge of suit, it is considered as paid before action brought, and struck out of the declaration, and the action proceeds for the residue of the demand, in like manner as if it had originally been commenced for that only.

In one of the most recent cases of this kind (Story v. Finnis and Others, 6 Ex. 123), which was an action on the case for pound-breach and rescue, the defendants pleaded payment into court of a certain sum, alleging that the plaintiff had no damages ultrà;—replication, damages ultrà; and it was held that the plea did not admit that the pound was the plaintiff's, or that the defendants had been guilty of rescue; and in discharging the rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, POLLOCK, C.B. said,—"It has long been held that the payment of money into court on a general indebitatus count, admits no more than that a cause of action exists, with damage to the extent of the amount paid in; and we think that the same principle applies to the case of wrong." And the authority of this case was fully recognised in a still later case in the Common Pleas (Schreger v. Carden, 21 Law T. Rep. 135, C. P.), which was an action against the sheriff for damage done to a cup, taken under a distress by his officer; and the plea of payment of money into court was held not to dispense with the necessity of proof of taking the particular cup, and the plaintiff was nonsuited on a motion to set this nonsuit aside. JERVIS, C. J. drew a distinction between admitting a cause and the cause of action, and the rule was refused.

On the authority of these cases, it would seem that the payment of money into court in cases of tort in the Superior Courts, puts the parties in precisely the same position as in actions of assumpsit, where the declaration contains only the common counts; and then, upon the authority of the passage before cited from Tidd, p. 675, the action proceeds for the residue of the demand (that is, in this class of actions, for damages ultrà), in like manner as if it had originally commenced for that only.

It should be mentioned, that this payment of money into court is an anomalous proceeding in pleading, since it is a departure from the rule that all pleadings must be either a traverse, or in confession or avoidance of some substantive allegation in the declaration; and it should be borne in mind, that when the money is once paid in, it is gone for ever from the defendant, and must in all events be paid to the plaintiff; and it would seem to be exactly as though the defendant gave as a gift so much to the plaintiff to put an end to further dispute, and said, "I only do this for the sake of peace; if you will go on, you must; but if you do, you must prove your case in all respects as though no such payment had been made, and I shall avail myself of every ground of defence that I might have had to your whole claim." It is true, that there does not seem to be any precise authority for this last position; but it is submitted with some confidence, that it is not the less laid upon principle, from analogy to the cases referred to; for if the payment into court does not dispense with full proof of the plaintiff's demand, how can it reasonably deprive the defendant of any just ground of defence? The County Courts are, it is submitted, in precisely the same position as the Superior Courts as to this practice, and should be bound by their authority. By the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 82, it is enacted, that it should be lawful for the defendants in any action brought under this Act within such time as shall be directed by the rules made for regulating the practice of the Court, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall consider a full satisfaction for the demand of the plaintiff, together with costs, &c. This enactment extends to all actions, whether on contract or tort; and as no special rules are made in respect to the practice, it would seem that the practice of the Superior Courts should be followed, as far as practicable, in this respect.

Attention has now been called to the cases and several enactments on this subject; and with great deference it is again submitted, that the payment of money into court in this case ought not to deprive the defendants of any right they might have had to object to the plaintiff's cause of action; but the action should have been tried as res integra between the parties. It cannot, we think, be denied, that this is an important point, because, if the learned Judge is right, the attention of parties litigant should be called to the state of the law, that they may not be taken by surprise, as in all probability the solicitor of the defendants was on this occasion.

THE ATTORNEY; (a)
HIS EDUCATION, PRACTICE, AND DUTIES.

CHAPTER XXVI.

BRINGING AN ACTION.

Your client has called, perhaps, to instruct you to bring an action for some wrong done to him, or to recover some right to which he believes himself entitled. He has a grievance, or imagines that he has one, and he desires your assistance to procure for him redress or revenge. Now commences the most difficult and trying portion of your duty.

Your first care will be to listen with patient attention to his story: to express no opinion upon it until it is concluded, but only to procure such explanations of obscure passages as may be necessary for your thorough comprehension of it. In the first instance, it will be better not to take any note in writing, but merely to receive his version of it, as it will certainly be given to you, coloured by the hopes, fears, or passions of the narrator, and for all of which you must make ample allowance when you come to advise him upon the course most proper to be pursued under the circumstances detailed. You may be sure that you have heard only a part of the whole; that one side only has been exhibited to you; that whatever is favourable to your client's claim has been exaggerated, whatever is opposed to it has been ignored. It is very rarely indeed that the Lawyer learns the very truth from those who come to consult him. Not merely are men prone to deceive themselves in whatever concerns their interests or their passions, but they are too much given to purposely deceiving their legal advisers, as if they thought that, were the truth known, the Attorney's zeal would be abated, or as if they hoped that he would reproduce to the Court the case as it had been given to him by themselves. Although it is usually of the utmost importance that the truth, and the whole truth, of a case should be laid before the legal adviser, how rarely is anything in the shape of an admission or a confession to be obtained from the client; with what persistency will he adhere to his false account of it, even when assured that the result depends upon his concealing or misrepresenting nothing. One of the earliest lessons learned by the young practitioner is the little reliance that can be placed upon the statements of his clients in any matter that much affects their interests or their passions.

Bearing this in mind, you will hear patiently all he has to say, neither flattering his feelings by any expression of approval, nor ruffling them by dissent. You will very quietly, by a few judicious questions, elicit such other facts as he may have kept out of sight. When you have obtained as much information as you are likely to procure, do not pronounce an opinion at once, unless the case is an extremely clear one, but tell him that, if he will call again on the following day, you will carefully consider it in the meanwhile and then advise him upon it.

We recommend you thus to defer your opinion for two reasons. In the first place, it is due to yourself that you should not hastily advise on a matter which might require some research and must deserve deliberate consideration. Secondly, it gives to your client also time to cool and to reflect with something like calmness; it compels him to "sleep upon it," and we all know the proverbial value of that preliminary to action. He will probably come to you on the following morning much more placably inclined than when he quitted you, and more willing to receive your opinion with respect, even if it should be adverse to his wishes.

In the meanwhile a serious, a difficult, and a most delicate duty is imposed upon you. It is unfortunately the fact that a client does not like to be advised contrary to his own desires. If you tell him that your conscientious opinion is adverse to his claim, instead of giving you the credit that is your due for having advised him contrary to your own interest, he is too apt to accuse you of cowardice, or incapacity, or indifference, and not improbably he will quit you for another of less scrupulous honesty, who will flatter his passions with promises of success, and conceal from him the dangers of defeat, and the costs even of a victory. Nevertheless, painful though the choice may be to you just struggling into practice, and to whom a client and an action are of incalculable worth, your duty is perfectly plain, and you must adhere to it with stern resolve not to be tempted from its straight path. You are bound to advise your client for his own substantial benefit. You have no right to consult his desires in opposition to his true interests. Whatever the consequences, you are bound to tell him the very truth, and advise him according to your honest judgment of what will be best for him, even as if you were advising in your own matter. If, after having so acted, he should leave you for another, the reflection of duty done must be your consolation, and trust then in the truth of the motto, that honesty is the best policy in the long run, however for a time it may appear to be the less profitable path.

For considering the case with a view to advising upon it, you should take a note of it, as soon as possible after your client has left you, and then review it with two objects kept steadily before your mind. First, you must endeavour to gather from the statement, as made by your client, and afterwards extended and corrected by your inquiries, and calling in the aid of your common sense and knowledge of the world to try his assertions by the rules of probability, what are the true circumstances of the case. Of course you cannot hope, on such ex parte statements, to arrive at the actual truth; but you may so far exclude what is obviously misstated as to obtain a general knowledge of the grounds of the dispute and the probable position of the various parties. Above all, be extremely careful to take both sides into your consideration, for, in all disputes, there are two sides—and consider what your answer to it would be if you were advising the defendant instead of the plaintiff, and what sort of a defence you would then set up. Thus you will learn what answer is likely to be made to your action, if you commence it.

Having in this manner ascertained, as correctly as you can, the facts on which you are advising, you must next see what is the law applicable to them, so as to be sure that you have law as well as facts upon your side. In this be careful not to trust to your memory. Go to your books. Even if the subject be one with which you believe yourself to be perfectly familiar, refer to your text-book and to your reports, to be sure that the law is as you suppose, and that no shades of difference have been introduced by any recent cases. Nothing is so unsafe and treacherous as memory of law. Principles, indeed, are remembered easily enough; but it rarely happens that the facts of any case are so entirely within the four corners of a principle that it is not necessary to see whether some of them do not come within the exceptions, or so vary the case under consideration, as to take it out of the rule. Always, then, refresh your memory by reference to the best book in your library that treats of the subject; and if any parts of Wise and Evans's Law Digest (which gives all the cases, wherever reported, that appear during the half-year, arranged alphabetically, and, therefore, is an indispensable manual for practitioners) have appeared since the publication of the text-book, turn to the title of the subject in each part of the Digest, and see what cases have been decided upon it, and if any of them affect that on which you are advising.

Set down your opinion in writing, not for the use of your client, but for your own convenience afterwards, adding a list of the cases with their references which you have found to bear upon it.

Your client will come at the appointed hour, to receive your opinion. Delay may have made him more placable, but you are not likely to find him quite open to reason. You will yet require some tact in dealing with him.

If your opinion is favourable to his complaint; if you have come to the conclusion that really he has been wronged; that he has a good case; that the right and the law are both upon his side, and that his claim is capable of proof, you have an easy task; you will fall in with his mood; you will flatter his wishes, and he will hold your wisdom in the highest esteem.

But if you have arrived at a contrary opinion; if your conclusion is that he has no case: that the facts are not with him; that the law is against him; that he has not been wronged; that he has omitted to look at both sides; that satisfactory evidence cannot be obtained; that there is but small chance of ultimate success,—you have a more difficult, but not a more doubtful, duty. You must tell him honestly and plainly that such is your opinion.

But you are not bound to do this abruptly. Your duty is to consult his interest, and you would not do that by so offending him that he should leave your office and go to another Attorney, less scrupulously honest than yourself, by whom his passions will be fanned until he plunges himself into a lawsuit from which he only escapes with ruin. It is your business to save him from himself, if you can. You may, therefore, open your communication with wholesome hints as to the costliness of a lawsuit—its uncertainties even when the case is most clear, and its anxieties always. A plain, businesslike statement of the probable costs will often cool down the most angry litigant in a manner wonderful to behold. You may say that "you will be very happy to conduct it; you will do for him all that can be done; you will retain the best counsel; there shall be no delay; the costs will be about so much if he succeeds, so much more if he fails, but this, of course, is a matter entirely for his own consideration. You have only to advise him on the legal part of the business, but you thought it right that he should know what the probable expenses would be before proceedings were commenced." If such remarks as these are put with caution, they will rarely fail of the desired effect with all clients, save those who do not intend to pay you if they lose. Having thus cooled the ardour of the would-be litigant, you may proceed to lay before him the doubts and difficulties of the case, unfolding your own opinion of it, with explanations of the reasons upon which it was founded, and closing with a candid statement of your advice that he should abandon, or compromise, or arbitrate, or make any settlement rather than hazard a lawsuit, but at the same time expressing your willingness to proceed if, after your frank explanation of the hazard and the cost, he should still persist in his resolve to make the attack.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

(June 30, 1852.)

Cap. LXXV.

An Act to Suspend the Making of Lists and the Ballot, and Enrolments for the Militia of the United Kingdom. (June 30, 1852.)

Cap. LXXVI.

This is the Common Law Procedure Act, and has been already given in full at pp. 130, 143, 152.

Cap. LXXVII.

An Act to abolish the Office of Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts, and to regulate the Office of Chief Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy. (June 30, 1852.)

Whereas it is expedient that the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts should be abolished, and that certain regulations should be made with respect to the office of the Chief Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same:

1. Office of secretary of bankrupts abolished.—From and after the commencement of this Act the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts shall be abolished.

2. Appointment of the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy.—From and after the commencement of this Act John Campbell, esquire, one of the registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy, shall be the chief registrar of the said court, and he and his successors in office shall perform all the duties that have hitherto been performed by the Lord Chancellor's secretary in bankruptcy.

3. Vacancies in office of chief registrar to be filled up from the registrars.—On the resignation, removal, or death of the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the time being, the vacancy thereby occasioned shall be filled up by such one of the registrars of the said Court for the time being as the Lord Chancellor shall in that behalf direct.

4. Declaration of insolvency to be filed in office of chief registrar.—From and after the commencement of this Act all declarations of insolvency and minutes of resolutions required to be filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts by any Acts or Act of Parliament now in force, shall be filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts under the provisions of such Acts or Act.

5. Certificates of unclaimed dividends to be filed in office of chief registrar.—The certificates by the one hundred and ninety-second section of "The Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849," directed to be filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, shall, from and after the commencement of this Act, be filed in the office of the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy.

6. Certified copy of declaration of insolvency to be evidence.—A copy of a declaration of insolvency or of such minute of resolution filed in the office of such chief registrar under this Act, purporting to be certified by such chief registrar or any of his clerks as a true copy, shall be received as evidence of such declaration or minute of resolution respectively having been filed.

7. Retiring allowance to Mr. Robert Brown.—And whereas Robert Brown, one of the clerks in the office of such chief registrar, is now of the age of seventy-nine years, and has been in such office since the establishment of a Court of Bankruptcy in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one, and in consequence of his age he is now desirous of retiring from his office: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the commencement of this Act the said Robert Brown shall cease to hold his said office, and there shall thenceforth be paid to him during his life the annual sum of two hundred pounds, which annual sum shall be charged upon the moneys and securities standing to the credit of the account intituled "The Chief Registrar's Account," and shall be payable and paid at such times as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order or orders from time to time direct, together with a proportionate part thereof for the time which shall have elapsed from the last payment thereof to the day of the death of the said Robert Brown.

8. Appointment of chief clerk in the office of the chief registrar.—From and after the commencement of this Act, Edward William Smith, heretofore the chief clerk in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, shall be the chief clerk in the office of the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall continue to receive his present salary of five hundred pounds per annum so long as he shall hold such office of chief clerk; and on his resignation, removal, or death, and on the resignation, removal, or death of any of his successors, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint a fit and proper person to supply such vacancy; and every such future chief clerk shall receive the net yearly salary of three hundred pounds, which shall be charged upon the moneys and securities standing to the credit of the account intituled "The Chief Registrar's Account," and shall be payable and paid at such times and in like manner as the salaries of the registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy are now paid.

9. All acts done since death of late chief registrar made valid.—All acts, matters, and things which, since the death of the late chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, have been done and performed in the office of the chief registrar of the said court, or which, though actually done and performed by some other officer or person, ought to have been done and performed by the chief registrar, shall be as valid and effectual as if there had been a chief registrar of the said court, and as if such acts, matters, and things had been done and performed by him or under his authority.

10. Present registrar to continue.—The registrar now in attendance upon the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal sitting in bankruptcy shall continue to attend their lordships on the hearing of such appeals; and all appeals to the said Lords Justices, and all affidavits and documents to be used on the hearing of any such appeal, shall be entered in the office of such registrar.

11. Office of clerk of inrolments abolished, and duties transferred to office of chief registrar.—From and after the commencement of this Act, the office of clerk of inrolments in the Court of Bankruptcy shall be abolished; and the duties of the said office, and the clerk at present employed therein, and all records, proceedings, books, papers, and documents in the office of the said clerk of inrolments shall be transferred to the office of the chief registrar in Basinghall-street, such records, proceedings, books, papers, and documents to be there kept as Records of the Court, all persons being at liberty to search for any of the matters so kept of record.

12. Compensation to clerk of inrolments.—The present clerk of inrolments in the Court of Bankruptcy shall be entitled to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury within six months after the passing of this Act; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, in such manner as they shall think fit, to inquire what was the nature of the said office, and what was the tenure thereof, and what were the lawful salary and emoluments in respect of which such compensation should be allowed; and the said commissioners shall award such compensation, if any, as they shall think just, and such compensation shall be charged upon the moneys and securities standing to the credit of the account entitled "The Chief Registrar's Account," and shall be payable and paid at such times as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order or orders from time to time direct.

13. Interpretation of terms.—In the construction of this Act the expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, and the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being.

14. Commencement of Act.—This Act shall commence from and after the first day of June one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

Cap. LXXVIII.

An Act to enable the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to complete Improvements in Pimlico and in the Neighbourhood of Buckingham Palace. (June 30, 1852.)

Cap. LXXIX.

An Act to amend and further extend the Acts for the Inclosure, Exchange, and Improvement of Land. (June 30, 1852.)

We give only a summary of this statute.

1. No lands to be inclosed without the previous authority of Parliament.
2. Outfall drains.—Drains, &c. may be made in lands out of the parish in which the lands to be inclosed are situate.
3. Remedy in case of nonpayment of expenses.

33. Penalty where stock found on regulated pastures.
34. Short title.
35. This Act to be deemed part of recited Acts.

Cap. LXXX.

An Act to abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the more speedy and efficient Despatch of Business in the said Court. (June 30, 1852).

We give this statute entire.

Whereas proceedings before the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery are attended with great delay and expense, and it is expedient that the business now disposed of in the office of such Masters should be transacted by and under the more immediate direction and control of the judges of the said Court: be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in the present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Office of Masters in Ordinary in Chancery abolished.—The office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery shall be and the same is hereby abolished, but reserving and subject to the execution by the present Masters in Ordinary of the said Court, as such, of the duties hereinafter provided for; and until they are released under this Act they shall, for the performance of such duties, continue to have all the powers conferred upon them by any Act of Parliament or otherwise vested in them.

2. Vacancies in office of Masters not to be filled up.—No vacancy which has already occurred or may hereafter occur in the office of Master in Ordinary of the said Court shall be filled up, nor shall any future Accountant-General be made or become one of the Masters in Ordinary.

3. Two of the Masters in Ordinary released from their duties on first day of Michaelmas Term, 1852, &c.—Proviso as to certain matters depending before the said Masters.—On the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, James William Farrer, esq. and William Brougham, esquire, two of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, shall be released from their duties as such Masters; and as often thereafter as, in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, from the state of business in the said court, any other Master or Masters can be spared, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to release any such Master or Masters at such time or times as to him shall seem meet: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend to release, or to authorise the Lord Chancellor to release, any of the Masters from attendance upon the House of Lords without the order of the House: provided also, that if, from the nature of any particular matter or matters depending before either of the said Masters hereinbefore respectively named, it shall in the opinion of the Lord Chancellor be desirable that such matter or matters should be worked out by or before the same Master before whom the same shall be depending, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct such Master to continue the prosecution of such matter or matters, and such Master shall prosecute the same accordingly, in the same manner and with the same powers in every respect as if he had not been released from his duties under this Act.

4. Option to Masters to retire according to seniority, &c.—Power to Lord Chancellor to release remaining Masters.—Every Master to be released by the Lord Chancellor shall have the option to retire tendered to him according to his seniority in office; and if any such Master shall, for one calendar month after such option tendered to him, neglect or decline to avail himself thereof, then the Lord Chancellor may tender the like option to the next in succession in seniority in office, and so toties quoties; but when the Lord Chancellor shall be of opinion that the services of none of the Masters are any longer necessary for the due execution of the business of the said court, it shall be lawful for him to release every remaining Master.

5. Masters' salaries and compensation allowance continued by way of retiring pensions, &c.—Each one of the Masters to be so released on the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall nevertheless continue entitled to receive during his life, by way of retiring pension, the full amount of his salary as such Master, including the amount of the compensation allowance payable to him as such Master; and every Master who may be so released subsequently to the same first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall also continue entitled to receive by way of retiring pension the full amount of his salary as such Master.

6. Retiring pensions, &c. to be paid in the same manner as present salaries.—The salaries or retiring pensions and compensation allowances payable to the Masters so to be released shall continue or be payable out of the same funds, on the days, and in the same manner in all respects, as their present salaries and compensation allowances respectively.

7. Power to Masters to summon parties, &c. and to settle and wind up proceedings before them.—In order as expeditiously as may be to wind up all the causes, matters, and things which may from time to time be depending before or have been referred to the Masters in ordinary of the said Court, it shall be lawful for every Master, at any time after the passing of this Act, to summon as he shall deem fit all or any of the parties to any cause, matter, or thing so depending, or their solicitors, and thereupon to proceed with such cause, matter, or thing, and give such directions and make such order as he may think necessary for the purpose of settling and winding up the same; but any such order shall be subject to be discharged or varied by the Court upon application made for that purpose; and the Master shall be at liberty to proceed for the purposes aforesaid in the absence of any of the parties or solicitors neglecting or refusing to attend the summons.

8. Power to Court, upon Master's report or certificate, to make order for prosecution or final disposal of any suit, &c. and for payment of costs, &c.—In case the Master shall be unable, by reason of the conduct of parties, or otherwise, to finally dispose of any cause, matter, or thing, he shall be at liberty to dispose of any part thereof within his power, and to report or certify on the whole of the case; and upon such report or certificate the Court shall make such order as it shall think proper on all or any of the parties, for the further prosecution of the suit or matter, or for the final disposal thereof, and for the payment of the costs thereof, including any of the costs which may have been incurred by reason of the conduct of the parties.

9. On neglect of parties to bring Master's report before the Court, solicitor to Suitors' Fee-fund to do so, and his costs provided for.—In the event of the parties in any cause, matter, or thing, or their solicitors, refusing or neglecting, within a time to be fixed by the Master, to bring the Master's report or certificate before the Court, the same may, by direction of the Master, be brought before the Court by the solicitor for the time being to the Suitors' Fund: and the Court is hereby empowered to order payment of the costs and expenses of the solicitor to the Suitors' Fund out of such of the funds in the cause, matter, or thing, or by such parties, as to the Court shall seem just; and in case payment thereof cannot be obtained by any of the means aforesaid, the same, by the direction of the Court, may be paid out of the Suitors' Fund.

10. No fresh references to Masters, except in cases already before them, and in matters under Winding-up Acts, 1848 and 1849*—Until all the Masters are released from their duties, those remaining shall prosecute all the business depending—Power now vested in Masters reserved to them for such purposes.*—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, no reference shall be made to any of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, except in cases in which, from some previous reference made in the cause or matter, or in some other cause or matter connected therewith, the Court may think it expedient to make such reference, and except in matters arising under the Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Acts 1848 and 1849: provided always, that until all the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court shall have been removed by resignation, death, or otherwise, or have been released from their duties under this Act, such of the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court as shall for the time being remain in office, and shall not be released from their duties under this Act, shall prosecute all the business which, on the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall be depending before the Masters, and also all the references which before the said first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall have been made under decrees or orders of the Court, or which on or after the same first day of Michaelmas Term shall be made in relation to such excepted matters as aforesaid; and the same, if necessary, shall be distributed amongst such remaining Masters in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall direct; and the powers and authorities now vested in them are hereby reserved to them for the purpose of executing and performing all the duties, matters, and things which may be still referred to them, or which they may be lawfully called upon to perform.

11. Power to Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors to sit at chambers for the despatch of business, &c.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors for the time being, and they are hereby required to sit at chambers for the despatch of such part of the business of the said court as can, without detriment to the public advantage arising from the discussion of questions in open court, be heard in chambers, according to the directions hereinafter in that behalf specified or referred to; and the times at and during which they respectively shall so sit shall be from time to time fixed by them respectively.

12. Power to Lord Chancellor to provide chambers for the Masters of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors.—The chamber business of the Master of the Rolls and of every Vice-Chancellor shall be carried on in conjunction with his court business; but as no rooms are attached to the courts of the Vice-Chancellors in which such chamber business can be transacted, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to cause chambers to be provided for every of them respectively for that purpose until courts with proper rooms attached can be provided for them.

13. Judges to have same power and jurisdiction as in open court.—The Master of the Rolls and every of the Vice-Chancellors respectively when sitting in chambers shall have the same power and jurisdiction in respect of the business to be brought before them, as if they were respectively sitting in open court.

14. Orders made in chambers to be ordinarily drawn up by judges' clerks, but judges may direct them to be drawn up by registrars of the court, and may require their attendance at chambers for the purpose.—The orders made by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively when sitting in chambers shall ordinarily be drawn up there by their respective clerks, to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned, but with power to each of such judges to direct any of such orders to be drawn up by the registrar of the said court in like manner as orders made by a judge of the said court in open court are drawn up, for which purpose the registrars of the said court shall, when required, attend the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively when sitting at chambers in such order and manner as shall be found most convenient for furthering the business of the said court, and as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors, or any two of them, shall from time to time by any general order direct.

15. Orders made at chambers to have same force as orders of court, &c.—All orders of the Master of the Rolls or of any Vice-Chancellor, made by him at chambers, shall have the force and effect of orders of the Court of Chancery, and such orders may be signed and enrolled in like manner.

16. Power to judges to appoint two chief clerks to each court to assist in the business of the court.—It shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls, and every of the Vice-Chancellors for the time being respectively, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, to appoint two chief clerks, each to be respectively attached to each such judge and his successors in office, for the purpose of assisting in the general business of each court, and the causes and matters belonging thereto, and on any vacancy in such office of chief clerk to supply such vacancy.

17. Chief clerk to judges to have been chief clerks to Masters in Ordinary, or solicitors or attorneys of ten years' practice—Certain chief clerks to be chief clerks of three of the equity judges.—No person shall be appointed chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls or any Vice-Chancellor unless he shall have been chief clerk to one of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, or have been admitted on the roll of solicitors or attorneys in one of the courts at Westminster Hall, and practised as such solicitor or attorney for the period of ten years at least immediately preceding his appointment: provided always, that George Whiting and Henry Leman, the present chief clerks of the said Masters hereby released as aforesaid, and Charles Pugh, chief clerk in the office of the Master now vacant, shall on the said first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, become and they are hereby appointed chief clerks of three of the said equity judges, and their respective successors in office.

18. Power to judges to appoint junior clerks.—It shall be lawful for the judge of each court to appoint a junior clerk to each chief clerk of his court, and on any vacancy in such office to supply such vacancy.

19. Power to Lord Chancellor to remove any officer appointed under this Act engaging in other employment or accepting any fee or emolument whatever other than his salary.—If any person who shall accept any office under this Act shall engage in any other employment whatever whilst he holds such office, or shall receive any sum of money or benefit other than his salary and what may be allowed or directed to be taken by him under any Act of Parliament or order of the said Court or of the Lord Chancellor, for any act done or pretended to be done, or any attendance given or pretended to be given, either with or without the consent or direction or pretended consent or direction of the judge, in relation to or arising out of any proceeding in his office, or in any office of or connected with the Court of Chancery, or if such person, being or having been a solicitor or attorney, shall directly or indirectly receive or secure to himself any continuing benefit from any business or firm in which he may have been engaged previously to his appointment to such office, the person so offending may be removed from his office by order of the Lord Chancellor, and shall be rendered incapable of afterwards holding any office, situation, or employment in the said court.

20. Solicitors, &c. appointed to any office under this Act to be struck off the Rolls.—Every solicitor or attorney who shall be appointed to and shall accept any office under this Act shall cease to be an attorney or solicitor, and shall forthwith procure himself to be struck off the roll of solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, and off the roll of any of her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster on which his name may be.

21. Chief clerks to hold office during good beha- viour.—Every such chief clerk shall hold his office during his good behaviour, and so long as he shall personally give his attendance upon his duties, and shall conduct himself honestly and faithfully in the execution of the duties of his office, but subject to the power hereinafter contained to remove any chief clerk for any cause which the Lord Chancellor and judges removing may think sufficient.

22. And clerks during pleasure.—Every such junior clerk shall hold his office at the pleasure of the judge to whose court he shall be attached.

23. Chief and junior clerks to be under control and direction of judges.—Such chief clerks and junior clerks shall be respectively under the control of the judge to whose Court they shall respectively be attached, and shall attend at such places, during such times, and for such hours in each day, and perform such duties, as such judge shall from time to time direct.

24. Chief and junior clerks subject to same penalties, &c. as imposed, &c. under Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, as respects officers of the Court of Chancery.—Every chief clerk and every junior clerk to be appointed under this Act shall be subject and liable to such and the same prohibitions, prosecutions, penalties, and punishments, as are by an Act passed in the session holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter ninety-four, imposed and directed with respect to persons holding any office, situation, or employment in the said Court of Chancery, or under any of the judges or officers thereof, in the same manner as if the enactments therein contained relating to such officers of the said Court respectively were here repeated.

25. Power to Lord Chancellor, with concurrence of judges, to remove chief clerks.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or any two of them, by any order to remove any chief clerk to be appointed under this Act from his office, without stating any cause for such removal.

26. Business to be disposed of in chambers by the judges.—The business to be disposed of by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively while sitting at chambers shall consist of such of the following matters as the judge shall from time to time think may be more conveniently disposed of in chambers than in open Court; videlicet, applications for time to plead, answer, or demur; for leave to amend bills or claims; for enlarging publication; and also applications for the production of documents; applications relating to the conduct of suits or matters; applications as to the guardianship and maintenance of infants; matters connected with the management of property; and such other matters as each such judge may from time to time see fit, or as may from time to time be directed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor.

27. Judges may adjourn from open court to chambers, and vice versâ, the consideration of any matter.—It shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls and every of the Vice-Chancellors respectively when sitting in open court to adjourn for consideration in chambers any matter which, in the opinion of such judge, may be more conveniently disposed of in chambers, or, when sitting in chambers, to direct any matter to be heard in open court which he may think ought to be so heard.

28. Mode of proceeding before judges at chambers to be by summons as at common law.—The mode of proceeding before the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively at chambers shall be by summons, and as near as may be according to the form now adopted by the judges of the Superior Courts of common law when sitting at chambers.

29. Power to the judges to direct what matters, &c. shall be heard and investigated by themselves, and what by their chief clerks—Right to suitor to bring any point before the judge.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively shall have the sole power (subject to any rules which may be made by the Lord Chancellor with the advice and assistance of them or any two of them) to order what matters and things shall be investigated by and before their respective chief clerks, either with or without their direction, during their progress, and what matters and things shall be heard and investigated by themselves; and particularly, if the judge shall so direct, his chief clerks respectively shall take accounts, and make such inquiries as have usually been prosecuted before the chief clerks of the present Masters; and the judge shall give such aid and directions in every or any such account or inquiry as he may think proper, but subject nevertheless to the right hereinafter provided for the suitor to bring [any particular] point before the judge himself.

30. Power to chief clerks to issue advertisements and summonses, to administer oaths, &c. as the judge shall direct.—Each chief clerk shall, for the purpose of any proceedings directed by the Master of the Rolls or any Vice-Chancellor to be taken before him, have full power to issue advertisements, to summon parties and witnesses, to administer oaths, to take affidavits and acknowledgments, other than acknowledgments by married women, to receive affirmations, and, when so directed by the judge to whose court he is attached, to examine parties and witnesses, either upon interrogatories or vivâ voce, as such judge shall direct.

31. Parties, &c. not attending liable to process of contempt and to penalties for false swearing, &c.—Parties and witnesses so summoned shall be bound to attend in pursuance of any such summons, and shall be liable to process of contempt, in like manner as parties or witnesses are now liable thereto in case of disobedience to any order of the said Court, or in case of default in attendance, in pursuance of any order of the said Court, or of any writ of subpœna ad testificandum; and all persons swearing or affirming before any such chief clerk shall be liable to all such penalties, punishments, and consequences for any wilful and corrupt false swearing or affirming contained therein as if the matters sworn or affirmed had been sworn and affirmed before any person now by law authorised to administer oaths, to take affidavits, and to receive affirmations.

32. Result of proceedings before chief clerk to be embodied in form of short certificate, &c.—The directions to be given by the Master of the Rolls or any Vice-Chancellor for or touching any proceedings before his chief clerk, shall require no particular form, but the result of such proceedings shall be stated in the shape of a short certificate to the judge, and shall not be embodied in a formal report, unless in any case the judge shall see fit so to direct; and when the judge shall approve of such certificate or report he shall sign the same in testimony of his adopting the same.

33. No exceptions to lie to certificate, &c.—Parties at liberty to take opinion of judge upon any particular point.—No exceptions shall lie to any certificate or report of the chief clerk, although signed and adopted by the judge; but any party shall, either during the proceedings before such chief clerk, or within such time after such proceedings shall have been concluded, and before the certificate or report shall have been signed and adopted, as the Lord Chancellor shall by any general order direct, be at liberty to take the opinion of the judge upon any particular point or matter arising in the course of the proceedings, or upon the result of the whole proceeding when it is brought by the chief clerk to a conclusion.

34. Certificate, &c. signed and adopted by judge, binding on all parties, unless discharged or varied.—When any certificate or report of the chief clerk shall have been signed and adopted by the judge the same shall be filed in like manner as reports are now filed, and shall thenceforth be binding on all the parties to the proceeding, unless discharged or varied, either at chambers or in open court, according to the nature of the case, upon application by summons or motion within such time as shall be prescribed in that behalf by any General Order of the Lord Chancellor; and nothing herein contained shall prejudice or affect the power of the Court at any time to open any such certificate or report upon the same or the like grounds as any report of a Master of the said Court which has been absolutely confirmed may now be opened.

35. Sections 13, 14, and 15 of 3 & 4 Wm. 4. c. 94, repealed.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth sections of the Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of his Majesty King William the Fourth, chapter ninety-four, shall be repealed.

36. All powers possessed by Masters to be exercised by judges.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two all or any of the powers, authorities, and jurisdiction given to the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court by any Act or Acts then in force may be exercised by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively.

37. Power to judges to exercise the powers given by sections 7, 8, and 9 of this Act, and to dispose of any cause, &c. in open Court.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eigh hundred and fifty-two, the powers given to the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court, and to the Court, by sections seven, eight, and nine of this Act, may be exercised by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively with respect to causes, matters, and things which may be depending before them respectively in chambers; and if and when any such judge shall be of opinion that any cause, matter, or thing so depending ought to be finally disposed of, unless the parties or some of them can show good cause to the contrary, he shall direct the same to stand in his paper in open Court, giving such notice thereof, if any, as he shall deem right, and proceed to dispose thereof accordingly.

38. Power to Lord Chancellor, with advice, &c. of judges, to make rules and orders for regulating the mode of procedure at chambers, payment of fees, &c.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors, or any two of them, and they are hereby required, forthwith to make and issue general rules and orders for regulating the times and form and mode of procedure before the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively, sitting at chambers, and their respective chief clerks, and generally the practice of the said Court in respect of the matters to which this Act relates, and for regulating the fees and allowances to solicitors of the said Court in respect to such matters, and also for regulating the fees to be payable by suitors of the said court to the officers thereof in respect of the business to be conducted before the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively sitting at chambers, and their respective chief clerks; and such rules and regulations may from time to time be rescinded, altered, varied, or added to by the like authority; and all such rules and regulations as aforesaid shall take effect as general orders of the said Court: provided always, that no greater amount of fees shall be payable by the suitors of the said Court to the officers thereof, in respect of the business to be conducted before the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors respectively sitting at chambers, and their respective chief clerks, than is now levied in respect of similar or analogous business in the Masters' offices.

39. Business in Masters' offices to be conducted in the same manner as similar business is conducted by judges, &c.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the course of practice and proceeding in the offices of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, so far as the same may be inconsistent with the rules and regulations to be so as aforesaid made by the Lord Chancellor with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall be abolished; and the Masters in Ordinary of the said court shall, with reference to the proceedings before them, adopt all such rules and regulations, and shall conduct the business of their respective offices, as nearly as may be, in the manner in which similar business shall be conducted by the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively, save only that the Master, instead of communicating directly with the judge, is to report shortly the result of his inquiries to the Court.

40. Power to judges at chambers to take opinion of conveyancing counsel in certain matters—Parties may object to such opinion, which may be disposed of in chambers or open court.—From and after the first day of Michaelmas Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, it shall be lawful for the Court, or for any judge thereof, when sitting at chambers, to receive and act upon the opinion of conveyancing counsel in actual practice, to be nominated as hereinafter mentioned, in all cases in which, according to the present practice of the Court and of the Master's office, it has been usual for the Master to require or receive the opinion of conveyancing counsel for his aid and assistance in the investigation of the title to an estate, with a view to an investment of money in the purchase or on mortgage thereof, or with a view to a sale thereof, or in the settlement of a draft of a conveyance, mortgage, settlement, or other instrument, or otherwise, and in such other cases as the Lord Chancellor shall by any general order direct; but it shall be competent for any party to object to any opinion of any such counsel when he shall deem it open to objection, and thereupon the point in dispute shall be disposed of by the Court, or by the judge sitting in chambers, according to the nature of the case.

41. Power to Lord Chancellor to nominate not less than six conveyancing counsel of ten years' practice, &c.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to nominate any number of conveyancing counsel in actual practice, not less than six, who shall have practised as such for ten years at least, to be the conveyancing counsel upon whose opinion the Court, or any judge thereof, may act in any of the cases last before mentioned, and to supply vacancies in such list from time to time, and to distribute the business among such counsel in such order and manner as to the Lord Chancellor shall seem fit.

42. Power to obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, &c.—It shall be lawful for the said court, or any judge thereof, in such way as they may think fit, to obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, or other scientific persons, the better to enable such court or judge to determine any matter at issue in any cause or proceeding, and to act upon the certificate of such persons.

43. Taxing Master to regulate fees to conveyancing counsel, &c. subject to appeal.—The allowances in respect of fees to such conveyancing counsel, accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, and other scientific persons shall be regulated by the Taxing Master of the said court, subject to an appeal to the judge to whose court the cause or matter shall be attached, whose decision shall be final.

44. Salary of 1,200l. to be paid to each chief clerk, and 250l. to each junior clerk, with power to the Lord Chancellor from time to time to increase same to 1,500l. and 300l. respectively.—There shall be paid to every chief clerk of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively the net yearly salary of one thousand two hundred pounds, and to every junior clerk to be appointed under this Act the net yearly salary of two hundred and fifty pounds; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time by any order to direct that the salary of any such chief clerk as aforesaid may be increased from time to time until the same shall amount to the net yearly sum of one thousand five hundred pounds, and to direct that the salary of such junior clerk may be increased to the net yearly sum of three hundred pounds: Provided always, that no such increase shall be made to any such chief clerk until he shall have been in office for three years, nor to such junior clerk until he shall have been in office five years, nor in either case without a certificate from the judge to whose court such chief clerk or junior clerk shall be attached, that he has conducted himself in such office to the entire satisfaction of such judge: Provided also, that the salary to such chief clerk shall not be increased at any one period by any greater amount than the sum of one hundred pounds.

45. Pensions to chief and junior clerks in cases of permanent infirmity.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by any order made on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall think fit) to be paid to any person executing the office of chief clerk or junior clerk to the Master of the Rolls or any of the Vice-Chancellors, who shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same, an annuity not exceeding two third parts of the yearly salary which such person shall be entitled to at the time of presenting such petition, to be paid and payable at the same times and out of the same funds as compensations under this Act are directed to be paid.

46. On retirement of Masters, their chief clerks to be entitled to retiring pensions of same amount as salary.—It shall be lawful for every person who on the first day of Hilary Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, held the office of chief clerk to any of the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery, and who is not hereby appointed a chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls or to one of the Vice-Chancellors under the authority of this Act, upon the Master to whom he shall be such chief clerk being released from the duties as such Master under the Authority of this Act, or upon the death or resignation of any such Master previously to his being so released, to continue to be entitled to receive during his life, by way of retiring pension, the full amount of his salary as such chief clerk, such salary to be paid and payable out of such funds and in such manner as hereinafter in that behalf directed.

47. Compensation to junior clerks on retirement of Masters.—It shall be lawful for any person who on the said first day of Hilary Term, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, held the office of junior clerk to any Master in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery hereby released, or who shall be released by the Lord Chancellor under the authority of this Act, to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, at any time after the Master in whose office he shall have been employed shall have been released; and such commissioners are hereby required, within the space of six calendar months after every such claim shall be made, by examination upon oath or otherwise, which oath they and every of them are and is hereby authorised to administer, to inquire whether any, and, if any, what compensation ought to be made to such person claiming such compensation; and in all cases in which it shall appear to the said commissioners that compensation ought to be granted, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by warrant under their hands, to order and direct that such annual compensation shall be made to the persons claiming such compensations as aforesaid, or any of them, as to the said commissioners in their discretion shall seem just and reasonable; and all such compensations shall be paid and payable out of such funds and in such manner as hereafter in that behalf directed: provided always, that an account of all such compensation shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, be laid on the table of the House of Commons, if Parliament shall be then assembled, or if Parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of the Parliament then next following.

48. Salaries, &c. to be paid quarterly out of the Suitors' Fee Fund account.—Except as herein otherwise provided, all salaries under this Act shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable, under an order of the Lord Chancellor, on the third day of February, the third day of May, the third day of August, and the third day of November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct, and shall be paid to the parties entitled thereto, or their respective executors or administrators, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and other sums of money by any former Act or Acts now in force directed or authorised to be paid thereout.

49. Payment of compensations to be made quarterly out of Parliamentary securities.—Except as herein otherwise provided, all compensations under this Act shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable on the third day of February, the third day of May, the third day of August, and the third day of November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct, and shall be paid to the parties entitled thereto, or their respective executors or administrators, out of the interest and dividends of the Government or Parliamentary securities now or hereafter to be placed in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the two accounts intituled, "Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," or either of them, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor to be made from time to time for that purpose, without any draft from the Accountant-General, but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and other sums of money by any former Act or Acts now in force directed or authorised to be paid thereout.

50. On appointment of Masters or clerks to office or employment under the Crown, the retiring pension or compensation under this Act to be regulated by the salary, &c. of such office or employment.—If at any time hereafter any of the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court, or any of their chief or junior clerks, shall be appointed to and shall accept any office or employment connected with any Court of Law or Equity, or under the Crown, or in any public department under the Crown, and if the salary attached to such office or employment, or any retiring pension or allowance in respect thereof, shall equal or exceed in amount the retiring pension or compensation payable to such Master or such clerk under this Act, such last-mentioned retiring pension or compensation shall, during the continuance of such Master or such clerk in such office or employment, or so long as he shall be in the receipt of any retiring pension or allowance in respect thereof, equal to or greater than his retiring pension or compensation under this Act, cease to be payable to such Master or such clerk, as the case may be; and if the salary attached to such office, or the retiring pension or allowance in respect thereof, shall be less than the amount of such Master's retiring pension or such clerk's compensation under this Act, such retiring pension or compensation under this Act shall be reduced by the amount of such salary or of such retiring pension or allowance, as the case may be.

51. Appropriation of the Masters' offices in Southampton-buildings.—Such of the Masters' offices in Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, as shall not be assigned by the Lord Chancellor as chambers for the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively, or shall not be required for the Masters, shall be appropriated to any other purposes connected with the Court of Chancery as the Lord Chancellor may from time to time direct, or the same may be let as chambers, and the rent thereof paid to the suitors' fund; and when all the Masters have resigned, died, or have been released under this Act, the offices may be sold by order of the Lord Chancellor, and the proceeds of such sale paid to the suitors' fund, in such manner and to such particular account as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor by any order to direct that the premises so to be sold, and the fee simple and inheritance thereof, shall vest in the purchaser or purchasers of the same, his or their heirs and assigns, or as he or they shall direct; and such order shall have the effect of vesting the same accordingly, without any conveyance or other assurance from her Majesty, in whom the same are now vested by virtue of an Act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter forty-two.

52. Power to her Majesty to appoint a Vice-Chancellor as successor to Sir G. J. Turner.—And whereas by an Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, session one, chapter five, her Majesty was by section nineteen empowered to appoint, by letters patent under the great seal, two fit persons to be additional judges assistant to the Lord Chancellor in the discharge of the judicial functions of his office, each of such additional judges to be called Vice-Chancellors; and by section twenty-one it was provided, that nothing therein contained should authorise the appointment of a successor to the Vice-Chancellor secondly appointed under the authority of the said Act: and whereas by an Act passed in the session holden in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter four, her Majesty was by section one empowered to appoint, by letters patent under the great seal, a fit person to be an additional judge assistant to the Lord Chancellor, in discharge of the judicial functions of his office, in the place of the Right Honourable Sir James Wigram, knight, who was the Vice-Chancellor secondly appointed under the authority of the said Act of the fifth year of her Majesty, and who had resigned the office of Vice-Chancellor to which he had been so appointed: and whereas the Right Honourable Sir George James Turner, knight, is the Vice-Chancellor appointed under the said last-mentioned Act: and whereas by section nine of the same Act, it was provided, that nothing therein contained should authorise the appointment of a successor to the Vice-Chancellor appointed under the authority thereof; and whereas by virtue of this Act additional duties will devolve upon the judges of the said Court, and it is expedient that any vacancy which may occur in the said office of Vice-Chancellor should be supplied: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, from time to time, when and as any vacancy shall occur in the office of Vice-Chancellor now held by the said Sir George James Turner, by the death, resignation, or removal from office of the said Sir George James Turner, or his successor for the time being, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by letters patent under the great seal of the United Kingdom, to appoint a fit person, being or having been a barrister of fifteen years' standing at the least, to supply such vacancy.

53. Such Vice-Chancellor to have same power, &c. as Sir G. J. Turner has.—The Vice-Chancellor to be appointed under this Act shall have all the same powers and privileges, and the same rank, and shall be subject to the same provisions, duties, and observances, as the said Sir George James Turner shall, at or immediately before his death, resignation, or removal from office, have or be subject to under the said Act of the fourteenth and fifteenth years of her present Majesty, chapter four, and this Act, or any other Act or Acts then in force, excepting that, as between himself and the other Vice-Chancellors or Vice-Chancellor for the time being, he shall have rank and precedence next after the Vice-Chancellors or Vice-Chancellor, if any, who may be senior to him in appointment to office.

54. Officers and attendants to the Vice-Chancellor.—Such Vice-Chancellor shall have a secretary, usher, and trainbearer, to be from time to time appointed and removed by him at his pleasure; and the secretaries, registrars, and other officers appointed to attend the Lord Chancellor shall attend such Vice-Chancellor when sitting for the Lord Chancellor, and also when sitting in his separate court or in chambers, as circumstances shall require, and as the Lord Chancellor shall order and direct.

55. Salaries of Vice-Chancellor and his officers to be as at present.—The salary of such Vice-Chancellor, and the salaries of his secretary, usher, and trainbearer, shall be of the same amounts, and paid out of the same funds, and in like manner, as the salaries of the said Sir George James Turner, his secretary, usher, and trainbearer, respectively, shall be payable at or immediately before his death, resignation, or removal from office.

56. Her Majesty may grant retiring pension to Vice-Chancellor so appointed.—It shall be lawful for her Majesty by letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, to grant to any person executing the office of Vice-Chancellor in pursuance of this Act, on his resignation of or his ceasing to execute his office, an annuity of the same amount, after the same period of service, under the same circumstances, subject to the same conditions, and payable out of the same fund, as the annuity authorised to be granted to each of the Vice-Chancellors appointed under the said Act of the fifth year of her present Majesty, chapter five.

57. Lord Chancellor may appoint court-keeper.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint one or more person or persons, removable at pleasure, for the purpose of keeping order in the court of the Vice-Chancellor to be appointed under this Act; and the salary of the person or persons appointed or to be appointed, under this Act or under any Act or Acts now in force, to keep order in the court of the Vice-Chancellor to be appointed under the authority of this Act, shall be of such amount, not exceeding the yearly sum of eighty pounds, as the Lord Chancellor may think reasonable; and such salary shall be paid to each such person so to be appointed, out of the same funds, and at the same time, and in like manner as the salaries of like persons have heretofore been paid.

58. Rights and establishments of the present Masters to continue until released in pursuance of this Act.—Nothing herein contained shall in anywise prejudice or affect the title of the present

Masters in ordinary of the said court to the salaries payable to them as such Masters, unless and until they shall be respectively released under this Act, or the power of the Lord Chancellor to order a retiring allowance to any of them or any of their clerks who may be or become afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and who shall be desirous of resigning the same; and every of the present Masters in ordinary of the said court, until released under this Act, shall have the same establishment of clerks, whose salaries and compensations shall be payable out of the same funds as the salaries and compensations of their clerks are now payable; and all the expenses attending the establishment of the Master's offices shall be paid in like manner as such expenses are now paid.

59. Nothing to affect the rights, &c. of Accountant-General as a Master in Ordinary.—Nothing herein contained shall prejudice or affect the rights, duties, or privileges of the Accountant-General of the said Court of Chancery as a Master in Ordinary of the said court, or any salary or other payment payable to the said Accountant-General as such Master in Ordinary, or his right or title to any retiring allowance under any Act or Acts of Parliament now in force; nor shall the said Accountant-General be called upon or required to do or perform any duties or services as such Master in Ordinary, other than such as are now usually performed by him.

60. The retiring Lord Chancellor may deliver written judgments within six weeks after his resignation.—Whereas it has frequently happened that after cases have been fully heard by the Lord Chancellor in the Court of Chancery and are standing for judgment, the Lord Chancellor has delivered up the Great Seal without being able, by reason of other urgent public business, to deliver judgment therein, and much inconvenience and expense to the parties has been thereby occasioned:

For remedy thereof be it enacted, that in every such case it shall be lawful for the person who has so delivered up the Great Seal, within six weeks after he shall have delivered up the same, to give in to the registrar of the said court a written judgment therein, signed by him; and a decree or order, as the case may require, shall be drawn up in pursuance of such judgment; and every such decree or order shall have the same force and effect as if the judgment in pursuance whereof it is drawn up had been given in open court the day before he shall have so delivered up the Great Seal.

61. Construction of terms.—In the construction of this Act, the expression "her Majesty" shall mean the sovereign for the time being; and the expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean also and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being.

THE MAGISTRATE, AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

Some statutes of interest in this branch of the law were pubished last week.

Cap. 59 continues the Poor Law Board.

Cap. 61, to amend the laws relating to summary proceedings for penalties and forfeitures under Excise Acts, enacts that informations for penalties or forfeitures under the excise laws within the limits of the chief office may be heard either by the Board of Inland Revenue or by Justices of the Peace; that the Board might hear informations either at the chief office, or elsewhere within its limits; and that officers of the Inland Revenue, or persons employed by the Board or Solicitor, may conduct proceedings before justices.

Cap. 65 continues and amends the Friendly Societies Act, making provision for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the registrars, and requiring the trustees of friendly societies to furnish accounts to the Commissioners of the National Debt.

Cap. 79 confirms a series of provisional orders of the Board of Health, which had been adopted in eight new towns.

Either betting-offices are nowadays made scapegoats by the thievishly disposed, or they really cause an infinite deal of dishonesty. Any one brought before a magistrate for robbing his master immediately sees that betting at those offices had led him to the crime. Within a week, two solicitors' clerks have offered this same excuse for their wrong-doing. The betting of Mr. Forster, M.P. has also been convicted, at the Old Bailey, of stealing his master's plate; and in this case there was no doubt he had embezzled transactions at betting offices.

Betting Lists.—A sporting paper states that the Home Secretary, last week, gave his approval to the draft of a Bill, aiming at the suppression of betting-houses. It is remarked that the measure, as approved, is calculated to give an impetus to betting, and to create a new class of offices for its conduct on a larger scale.

Billeting of Soldiers.—Important Decision.—A case was tried at a Justice of Peace Court, held in Crieff, on the 9th ult. regarding the billeting of soldiers. The person upon whom a soldier was billeted, instead of accommodating the soldier in his own house, offered to provide him with quarters elsewhere, but the soldier refused to avail himself of it, and brought an action for billet money. The justices were unable to come to a decision, and they agreed to refer the case to the Secretary-at-War. He was accordingly communicated with, on the subject, and the question may now be considered settled whether or not a householder is bound to provide accommodation for soldiers in his own house. The following is the letter from the War-office:—"War-office, Sept. 21, 1852.—Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 10th inst. I am directed to acquaint you that the householder upon whom the soldier was billeted was not bound to receive the soldier into his own house; and that having offered to provide quarters for him elsewhere, the householder has satisfied the obligation imposed upon him by law.—I am, &c. (Signed) B. Hawes."

Friendly Societies.—In the report of the committee of the House of Commons on the operation of the laws relating to friendly societies (just issued), reference is made to investments by friendly societies into the National Debt Office. Sir Alexander Spearman, the controller, stated in his evidence, that his office has at present no means of checking or verifying any sums transmitted by any society to him for investment beyond a simple declaration tendered at the same time with the money; that the interest payable is higher than that which the Government receives; that the societies might draw out the money, and the difference between the price when sold and when invested would be so much loss to the country,—besides, the funds might go down; that sums have seldom been drawn out when once invested with the National Debt Commissioners, and it is open to surmise that the claims which ought to be met from moneys so invested have been liquidated from other means, and so the capital which bears a very high rate of interest has remained untouched, to the prejudice of the public revenue. Sir A. Spearman agrees with Mr. Tidd Pratt, the Registrar, in his suggestion that a board should be formed for the management of friendly societies. There are various recommendations with regard to the new Bill to be brought before Parliament on the subject of friendly societies.

Quakers and the Militia.—By the 33rd section of the New Militia Act, so much of the former Militia Act as empowers the deputy-lieutenants to commit a Quaker to the common gaol, if no goods or chattels belonging to such Quaker could be found sufficient to levy a distress to defray the expense of providing and hiring a substitute, is repealed.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Where a railway company agrees upon taking land which constitutes a portion of certain premises, and stipulates so to construct the railway that when finished it should not alter the present level, nor the surface, area, or present level of that which it does not occupy, the previous use of the land being for a ropery, it is bound to the literal fulfilment of the agreement, and it is not sufficient that the land is still good for its uses as a ropery. The Lord Chancellor (Truro) said, "he thought the surface ought to be restored so as to make it available for all the purposes to which the adjoining surface was available; nor could he justly adopt the construction contended for by the defendants, that because the agreement contained a stipulation for the restoration of the level for the purposes of the ropery, such agreement implied that the restoration should take place for that purpose exclusively." He added, that "in the case of a mining lease, where there were covenants on the lessee's part to restore the surface to its original condition, the obvious meaning was, that the ground should be restored for all the practical purposes and uses to which it had been applicable formerly. (Harby v. The East and West India Docks Junction Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 4.)

A winding-up case (Re The Royal Bank of Australia, 20 Law T. Rep. 11) which came before the Lord Chancellor, is also noticed here, because it contains some law that affects all companies. The directors had done something not authorised by their deed, and the question was, whether the Court would permit them to avail themselves of any advantage that might accrue from it, but to repudiate it if it should serve their purpose. Lord St. Leonards expressed himself very strongly on this subject:—"I never will maintain in any Court of Justice that directors having power by deed to manage the affairs of the company, and to exclude the shareholders from becoming acquainted with the nature of their dealings, who, behind the backs of the general body of shareholders, entitle themselves to a great proportion of the capital of the company, can be at liberty, if the company should flourish, to insist upon it as a real transaction, and if it should turn out not as they had hoped, to throw it up as a transaction not authorised by their deed. I should hold them bound by the transaction, although they might not be entitled to enforce it against the shareholders." In the same case, his Lordship also held, that when directors had made to executors representations as to the amount of a deceased director's liabilities to the company, and upon the faith of that representation the executors had distributed the assets, the company were bound by the representation so made by the directors.

WINDING UP.

The Law of Winding up must be now pretty well settled, and official managers can have little difficulty in determining whom they are to include in their lists of contributories. But still questions are sometimes raised which might surely be decided without the cost of going to the Court. Such an one was Roberts's case, 20 Law T. Rep. 9. A provisional committeeman applied for 100 shares. The managing committee had resolved to give to each only twenty-five shares. He paid 10*l.* in full for the shares so allotted. He was properly held not to be a contributory. He paid for peace, not as a shareholder. In this case, also, a question arose as to the costs incurred by the official manager, he being the appellant. It was sought to make him personally responsible. But Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, while admitting that there are cases in which the Court would do so, said that this was not one of them. "Unless where their own counsel were of a strong opinion that there is a good case, or unless the Master had suggested, or unless a number of contributories had agreed to join in the application, I should certainly make the official manager pay the costs."

But Re The Royal Bank of Australia, 20 Law T. Rep. 11, was a more difficult and doubtful case, which came before the Lord Chancellor. A director of a banking company took 100 shares, besides those required to qualify himself as director, for which he had already signed the deed. He gave a promissory note for 1,000*l.* in respect of these 100 shares, payable at four years. The shares were not allotted according to the provisions of the deed, nor did he execute the deed in respect of them; but he received the dividends on them, the payments of which were regularly entered in the company's books. The note was not paid when due. He was held to be a contributory in respect of these shares.

In the same company, R. a director, took 500 shares, and gave a note for 5,000*l.* He died, and before proving his will his executors were informed by the other directors that their testator had only twenty shares on which the whole capital had been paid. He had received no dividends. On the faith of this statement of the directors, the executors distributed his assets. He was held not to be a contributory.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Lord Truro well laid it down in Smith v. Pincombe, 20 Law T. Rep. 10, that he could not hold a family compromise to be binding

" unless there be an honest disclosure by each party to the other of all such material facts known to them relative to the rights and title of either as were calculated to influence the judgment in the adoption of the compromise, and that any advantage taken by either of the parties of the known ignorance of the other would render the same void in equity, and liable to be set aside." This should be noted in the very words in any book of Equity Law used by the reader, for it is a well-expressed deduction from a review of many cases.

In Wilson v. Eden, 20 Law T. Rep. 13, the MASTER of the ROLLS has held that a devise of all testator's messuages and lands at a particular place, and all other his real estates in certain places and elsewhere in Great Britain, would, under the Wills Act, pass the leaseholds.

A question in the Law of Landlord and Tenant was decided in M'Donnell v. Pope, 20 Law T. Rep. 13. A. let premises to B. alone, but certain acts as to payment of rent, &c. were done by B. and C. B. died and C. continued to pay rent, and A. sued the executors of B. for rent due. Was there a joint tenancy? It was held that although the joint acts of B. and C. raised an implication of a joint letting, yet the landlord having himself denied this, B.'s estate continued to be alone liable for the rent, notwithstanding that A. had received rent from C.

SALE OF INCUMBERED ESTATES.—The two remaining lots of the Kerry estates of Messrs. John and Morgan O'Connell were sold in Tralee, subject to the final approval of the Commissioners of Incumbered Estates. The purchase-money for both lots amounted to 4,520*l*. The new proprietors of this remnant of the property are Dr. Barry and Colonel Thomas Bourke.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

I SHOULD be glad to learn the opinion of the Profession on the following point:—

A building society whose rules are properly drawn and duly registered, take securities in the names of its trustees. A new set of trustees are appointed, and the society's mortgaged securities are transferred to them. Does the deed of transfer require to be stamped? FRANCIS MEWBURN.

COUNTY COURTS.

ATTORNEYS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I have perused in your paper of the 2nd inst. the letter of "A Barrister," which, containing some observations in respect to the attorneys in the County Courts, and their costume, has suggested to me a few remarks upon the subject, which I beg the favour of your inserting. In doing this, I feel assured I am only giving utterance to the sentiments of a very large number of my professional brethren, the country attorneys. Now that attorneys are legally recognised as advocates in the County Courts, and declared entitled to equal audience with members of the bar, it is surely desirable and proper, both for the respectability and dignity of the Court as for their own self-respect, that they should appear in a professional costume, which they may be called upon to assume, and not be ashamed to wear. At present, however, the gown alone, which it is supposed an attorney is entitled to wear, gives him the appearance of a verger in a church, or an usher in one of the courts at Westminster, and there is no gentleman but feels himself ashamed to be seen in such a garb, and, rather than assume it, he appears in court without his robe. Some, too, rather than appear wanting in respect to the Court, always wear the gown, but adopt the band to overcome their scruples of appearing like the usher. Thus it is that in the County Courts throughout England some advocates are in gowns, some in gowns and bands, and the greater number without any gown at all, and there are scarcely two courts in any of the circuits where there is any uniformity. This state of things should surely be put an end to. If it is proper that advocates should appear in professional costume, let a proper costume be authorised for those who are attorneys, and let it be one that a gentleman need feel no repugnance in assuming. The present gown would probably do very well if with the gown bands similar to those of the Bar were authorised to be worn, and, I think, with this arrangement the attorneys would be satisfied. The Bar would still be distinguished by the difference in the gown and by the wig. Now that the County Courts dispose of so large a portion of the legal business of the country, it is surely high time that there should be a settlement of this question, and that there should be an uniformity in the appearance of these courts, and of the costume of the advocates who practise in them.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

AN ATTORNEY PRACTISING IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

COUNTY COURT COSTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Observing in your paper of the 18th Sept. an invitation for remarks and suggestions on the framing of a scale of costs in the County Courts, I am induced to mention the practice in one of our County Courts of Yorkshire. The judge in every undefended cause refuses to allow any costs to the plaintiff's attorney unless the plaintiff can shew that he had reason to believe the defendant intended to dispute the claim; so that although the attorney may have taken the trouble to get up half-a-dozen cases with his usual care, and although all the defendants may be at such a distance that neither the attorney nor his client knows anything of their intentions, the attorney must either go without his fees or the client must pay them out of his own pocket, if the defendants are honest enough to admit the claims on the causes being called on for hearing.

This is not the practice in any other Court that I am aware of; it seems to me a manifest injustice to the client, and contrary to the intention of the Legislature in providing for the allowance of costs to the attorneys practising in these courts.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Oct. 2, 1852. AN ATTORNEY.

THE LAWYER.

IT will be seen by a statute that was given last week in extenso, that great changes have been made in that which was one of the grievances of the Profession and of suitors—the fees and salaries of the officers of the law courts. It was a grievance to the Profession, because the fees so paid increased the Attorney's bill, without any profit to the Attorney, to whose account the client placed the total sum of charges, without considering how much of the whole was paid out of pocket, and it was a grievance to the suitor, on whom this tax upon justice ultimately fell. The Act of last session (15 & 16 Vict. c. 73) has materially abated this wrong. It abolishes the office of Marshal in the Common Law Courts in London, and requires their duties to be performed by the Associates, who are in future to be appointed by the Chiefs of the various courts. The Associates are to appoint clerks, not exceeding two, to assist them, if need be; and offices are to be provided for them.

On the circuits the Marshal is continued, but he is to be paid by salary instead of fees. The Chiefs are to appoint three clerks, and the puisne Judges two each, one of whom is to be Crier; and they are to perform all the duties hitherto performed by the Judges' clerks. The present officers are to be reappointed and hold office during good behaviour. Tables of fees to be taken by them are to be prepared by the Treasury, with approbation of the Judges. Officers and clerks are not to act as Barristers, Attorneys, or agents; and their salaries are to be fixed by the Treasury, with a retiring allowance. Ushers and subordinate officers are to render an account to the Treasury of their fees, and they are to be appointed by the Chiefs, and to be paid by salary out of the Consolidated Fund, the amount being fixed by the Treasury. Compensation is made for abolished offices; all appointments are to be made without pecuniary consideration, and any officer accepting a gratuity is to be peremptorily dismissed. No compensation, however, is to be allowed for the loss of the right of appointment to any office.

The fee of 6s. 8d. to the Marshal on circuit for entering the cause is abolished, as are "all other payments upon circuits to or to the use of the judges," as also are the fees to the Marshal's men and the Judge's bailiff, and to any servant attending circuit.

Accounts are to be laid before Parliament; the duties of officers are to be performed in person; no deputies will be allowed in future, except from some temporary cause.

In Ashley v. Allden, 20 Law T. Rep. 14, Vice-Chancellor TURNER held, that where there were two suits on behalf of an infant, the clerk to the plaintiff's solicitor in the first suit is not necessarily an improper next friend to the infant in a second suit.

Queries.

WILL the Editor of the LAW TIMES inform a subscriber what is the etiquette of the Profession as to a stranger coming into a town to practise,—whether the stranger should call on the old offices, or the older practitioners call upon him?

[We believe the usual course to be, for the stranger to call upon the eldest practitioners; but perhaps some experienced reader will more correctly inform our correspondent as to this.—ED. LAW T.]

RE-OPENING OF THE ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE IN BANKRUPTCY.—On Saturday notice was given that the office of the Accountant-General in Bankruptcy, which has been closed by order of the Lord Chancellor since the 12th of August last, will be re-opened to-day, when dividend warrants will be paid.

EVIDENCE IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—The new rules and orders in Chancery will regulate the admission of evidence, both oral and documentary, in proceedings under the new Acts, which Acts will effect some considerable alterations with respect to evidence in the court. The evidence on both sides, whether taken orally or upon affidavit, is to be closed within nine weeks after issue joined. The Court has power to enlarge the time, but after the period fixed no further evidence is to be given without the special leave of the Court. Any witness who has made an affidavit is to be subject to oral cross-examination within one month after the expiration of the nine weeks stated, by or before an examiner, in the same manner as if the evidence given by him in his affidavit had been given by him orally. Any party in any cause or matter may, by subpœna, require the attendance of any witness to be examined before an examiner, and may use his evidence upon any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding, before the Court, in like manner as such witness would be bound to attend and be examined with a view to the hearing of a cause. Under the new law something like expedition will be attained in obtaining evidence.

THE NEW CHANCERY ORDERS.—In the new Chancery Rules, in lieu of the present fees allowed to solicitors for instructions for bills (which from the commencement of next Term are to be printed), the following charges are to be allowed:—For instructions for bill, 1*l.* 14s.; for making a copy of a bill or claim for the printer, per folio, 5d.; for correcting the proof-sheet, per folio, 2d. (the printer's bill to be paid and allowed); for amending each copy of a bill or claim to serve, where there is no reprint, 13s. 4d.; instructions for brief (in several matters) to be charged only once in the progress of a cause, 1*l.* 1s.; for amending each brief of a bill or claim, where there is no reprint, 13s. 4d.; for perusing and considering the bill on behalf of each defendant, or set of defendants appearing by the same solicitor, 1*l.* 1s.

CHEAPNESS IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—Hitherto large sums have been charged for engrossing and copying bills filed in Chancery, in lieu of which printed bills are to be delivered; and by one of the new rules a considerable reduction is effected. It is ordered that "the payment to be made by the defendant to the plaintiff for printed copies of the bill or claim shall be at the rate of one halfpenny per folio."

DOCUMENTS IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—In the new Chancery Act (cap. 86) there are two provisions respecting the production of documents in the possession of plaintiffs and defendants. It is declared to be lawful for the Court, upon the application of a plaintiff or defendant in any suit, whether commenced by a bill or claim, to make an order for the production, by the plaintiff or defendant, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just.

DELAYS IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—The new act "To Amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery," will remove several causes of delay which have hitherto obstructed suits in equity, especially with regard to having all parties before the Court, and also as to bills of revivor and supplemental bills on the death, marriage, &c. of any of the parties. By the 51st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the Court may decide between some of the parties without making others interested parties to the suit. In case of abatement (by another provision), by marriage, or otherwise, the Court may make an order which shall have the same effect as a bill of revivor or supplemental bill. The order so made is to have the effect of making the persons named parties to the suit without the delay of a supplemental bill. There is another clause to prevent supplemental bills. New facts, after the commencement of a suit, need not be stated in a supplemental bill, but may be introduced as amendments.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

A POINT of considerable interest in the Law of Banking is reported from Scotland. A. a merchant in Glasgow, obtained from a banker there a letter of credit upon a bank in England in favour of B. and C. merchants in Liverpool. A forged draft was presented at the English bank, who thereupon paid away the contents of the letter of credit. A. B. and C. brought an action against the Glasgow Bank for the amount. It was held by the Court of Session that such an action would not lie. There was no neglect of duty on the part of the bank. It had done all required of it, and which it undertook to do, namely, to send the letter of credit to the bank in England. (Orr v. The Union Bank of Scotland, 20 Law T. Rep. 16.)

Some interesting Bankruptcy cases in our last number deserve attention. The Court of Appeal has intimated an opinion in Ex parte Whitaker, 20 Law T. Rep. 12, that the Court has not jurisdiction to direct the commissioner to review his judgment upon the question whether a certificate ought to be granted or refused. In Ex parte Sherlock, 20 Law T. Rep. 12, the commissioner was held to be empowered, under the 198th section of the Bankruptcy Act, to appoint a sitting for the consideration of a bankrupt's certificate, and that to give jurisdiction it is not necessary that an application for that purpose should be made by the bankrupt himself.

Mr. Commissioner HILL has held, in Bristol, that where the ground of opposition goes to the refusal of the certificate altogether, the depositions of witnesses examined in support of an alleged fraudulent removal of property, and which were taken in the bankrupt's absence, cannot be read or referred to. But the Court adjourned for the production and examination of the witnesses de novo. (Re Phillips, 20 Law T. Rep. 15.)

In the same case it was held that the clerk of the Attorney charged with having prepared for the bankrupt a deed giving a fraudulent preference was privileged, and that although the privilege was that of the bankrupt, it was not divested by the bankruptcy.

In Re Lawrence, 20 Law T. Rep. 16, where the bankrupt had absconded, the Court made an order to intercept and deliver to the official assignee post letters addressed to the bankrupt at his place of business.

THE NEW PASSENGERS ACT.—The Commissioners of Customs having approved of four forms of bonds to be entered into under the provisions of the Passengers Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 44, which came into operation on the 1st inst. orders have been issued for them to be printed and supplied to the proper officers in London and at the outports, with directions to take care that in attesting the execution of a bond each witness be required to subscribe his name and address in full in conformity with the marginal note to the form of a bond given in schedule B of the Act mentioned; and that in the case of a foreign passenger ship going to a British possession, the certificate required by the 60th section of the said Act and printed at the foot of the bond be dated. The principal officers of Customs at the several ports in the kingdom are to make application for the supply of the number of forms of bonds required for their respective ports.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

The subject of the relations between the Bar, the attorney, and the client was brought before the society in a report which was much considered, and as to which the following resolutions were eventually adopted:—

That any practice which has a tendency to prevent the public from obtaining the assistance of counsel except through the compulsory intervention of an attorney should be discontinued.

That so much of the 61st section of the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, as prevents a barrister from advocating the causes of suitors in the County Courts unless instructed by an attorney should be repealed.

The latter resolution has now been adopted by both Houses of Parliament, which by a Bill of this session for extending the jurisdiction of the County Courts has repealed this clause of the former Act. It will be for the Bar to consider whether it will act on the first of the above resolutions, which it has the power to do, if it should see fit, and should the occasion require it.

The other principal measures of law amendment which, either in the form of Bills or in that of reports, have been before Parliament and the country since the last annual meeting of our society, have been the report of the Commissioners of the House of Commons on the laws of partnership, and the Bills for extending the jurisdiction of the County Courts, for amending the patent laws, and for diminishing the expenses of proceedings under commissions de lunatico inquirendo. In the consideration of these several measures this society has taken an active part, and we may reasonably expect from past experience that its labours will have a beneficial effect in determining the course of legislation.

Local administration of justice is now established, and has been found of infinite practical benefit, and your council hope to see it gradually extended as well to suits of an equitable nature as to those of a legal character, and that in local courts, at least, both jurisdictions will be amalgamated.

We would also call your attention to an effort that is in progress for extending the jurisdiction of the County Courts in Scotland, the precursors of our own County Courts, and for improving the procedure of Sheriffs' Superior Courts by introducing viva voce evidence, and making other reforms.(a)

We entirely concur in the propriety of these changes, and we call on the law reformers of England to aid their fellow-labourers in Scotland in effecting them. It is only just to say, that among the whole body of judges of different degrees in the United Kingdom, we know of none more zealously or usefully employed, or more deserving of general respect, than the resident sheriffs of Scotland. It must be gratifying to the Society to reflect, that while their president was mainly instrumental in introducing the now popular County Courts in England, another of their members (Lord Murray), now one of the Lords of Session, brought forward the Bill for establishing these courts under the name of Small Debt Courts in Scotland.

The proposed reforms of these courts would also be steps towards assimilating the law of the two countries—an object your council have much at heart, and on which they have already bestowed much attention.

Since our last general meeting, the important Act for admitting the evidence of parties in suits in the Superior Courts, which originated in a report of this society, has come into operation. At first, as might have been expected, the alteration was followed by some cases of perjury; but we doubt whether, in a single instance, the fraud was successful; and we are happy to say that testimony has been borne in favour of this Act by many of the judges of the Superior Courts, some of them in their places in Parliament, in addition to the evidence recently given at the request of this society by the judges of the County Courts.

The chief subjects in which our society has taken part, in which no movement has been made during the last year, are the laws of debtor and creditor, of divorce, and those relating to deceased persons' estates. But although there may be some matters in which little progress is making, the general cause of the amendment of the law was never in so promising a state before. Happily law reform is beyond the reach of party politics, and we therefore can count within our ranks distinguished men belonging to all the present divisions of the State, whose opinions on many other subjects are at variance. At the beginning of the session the speech from the Throne, expressing, of course, the views of the party then in power, recommended the amendment of the law; and scarcely was another party installed in office than it announced law reform as one of the principal features of its policy.

Under such favourable circumstances every measure of law amendment on which there is a general agreement of opinion should be pressed forward for immediate enactment.

To turn to full account the present opportunity the powers of law reformers must be gathered and concentrated. The organisation of the Law Amendment Society affords the means of examining and bringing forward any measure of legal improvement, and the names of its members, not to speak of its past acts, present, we trust, a sufficient guarantee for the work being done efficiently. Such being the case it seems quite unnecessary and a loss of strength to have separate societies for isolated objects.

Since the last general meeting forty-four new members have been admitted, making the present number 340, and the balance of income and expenditure, instead of being against the Society, as it was last year, is now in its favour. Still the exertions of the Society are crippled for want of larger funds and its potency diminished by the want of a greater body of associates.

With a larger income two important objects at least might be attained—the formation of a good library of reference and news-room, with some of the social advantages of a modern club, and the engagement of a paid assistant secretary, to be in daily attendance at the rooms, and qualified to give aid to members of Parliament and others who might want information on questions of contemplated legal changes.

A freer use of the power of printing would also be of much service, and would much facilitate the proceedings of our committees.

To supply these and other deficiencies, we call on our fellow-members each to exert himself in his own sphere to make known the objects of the society, and to obtain for it recruits who sympathise in those objects, and who by their personal efforts and pecuniary contributions, or, yet better, by both combined, will aid in their attainment. Especially would we call on the lay members of our society to endeavour to increase the number of those who do not belong to the profession.

The combination in due proportion of the two elements of professional and non-professional members is most desirable, and would, we are convinced, produce a result far better than can be attained by either class attempting to act alone.

To the honour of the legal profession, its members have come forward in the cause of law reform in a body, powerful alike by number and by position; but while we count many honoured names among our lay members, the whole number of such members is but small.

As a means of extending a knowledge of our society's proceedings, we recommend that the annual reports of the council should be widely circulated, and we advise that the council should be empowered to adopt such arrangements as they may deem expedient for establishing a connection between the society and such town-councils, chambers of commerce, justices at quarter sessions, and other bodies unconnected with party politics as may be desirous of entering into relationship with it.

The interest in the objects of our society, which our treasurer found to exist in different parts of Scotland, which he visited last autumn, is evidence of a wide-spread feeling of sympathy and concurrence of opinion, which under good arrangement may serve to create for us powerful auxiliaries. Such a connection as we have referred to would, we believe, be mutually advantageous; and among other benefits to our society—benefits which would ultimately be partaken in by those who conferred them—would be increased means of collecting information on the actual working of our laws, and practical suggestions for itheirmprovement.

Your council have shewn that this society has assisted in the settlement of several questions of the most difficult and complicated nature—the Court of Chancery, the Masters' office, the procedure of the Superior and County Courts, the enfranchisement of copyholds, and the transfer of land. It will be the duty of this society to watch over all these alterations and the new state of things introduced by them, and thus to obtain the speedy, cheap, and satisfactory administration of justice for all classes of the community.

But the society has also a still higher duty, which is, if possible, to obviate the necessity of law-suits, or, at all events, to diminish their number. Under any circumstances, a law-suit must often be productive of much expense, anxiety, and distress. Prevention is better than cure, and if the law were presented to the public in a more intelligible and accessible form, many law-suits which are now rendered necessary from the present ill-declared state of the law would be prevented.

It is needless to remind the society that the rules relating to the law in this country are scattered through 1,000 volumes, and that it is thus difficult for the practitioner, and often impossible for the unprofessional man, to ascertain the exact state of the law.

The council, therefore, urge on the society that it cannot better employ its influence and exertions than in attempting some remedy for this state of things.

This is to be found in a comprehensive digest, consolidation, and codification of the whole of the statute and common law. A part of this, the criminal law, has already been effected, and only wants the final stroke to complete it. But the whole of the other branches of the statute law, and the whole of the other branches of the common law, in accordance with the recommendations of the learned Criminal Law Commissioners, should be subjected to this process; and if there be any part of it which more calls for it than another, it is perhaps the commercial law, as to which some steps have already been taken, and as to which a great interest has been expressed as well in Scotland and Ireland as in England by many important commercial bodies and meetings.

Here, then, is a worthy object, to obtain which all our exertions are required and should be devoted. Nor do the council believe that, considering the other subjects already successfully dealt with by the society during the course of its nine years' ministration, if the same zeal, boldness, and judgment be employed as on former occasions, its exertions will be in vain.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Solicitor's Book of Practical Forms.
By H. Moore, Esq. Butterworth.

A useful collection of forms commonly required in the office of a solicitor, as indentures of apprenticeship, conditions of sale, contracts, statutory declarations, powers of attorney, and such like. Mr. Moore has added to these an abridgement of the Stamp Acts, instructions for the preparation of legacy and residuary accounts, and applications for increase and return of probate duties, with tables shewing the rates of duty. From this account of its contents it will be seen that it offers a great deal of really useful information in a small space. Mr. Moore states that they are all taken from draughts in actual employment in an office.

The publishers complain that we omitted to state of Mr. Kennedy's Chancery Practice, noticed in our last, that it does contain the new orders, as well as the new statutes. We fear that our real objection must have been misunderstood. We intended to express surprise that a Chancery Practice should have been published just at this moment, a considerable portion of which consists of the old orders that will be virtually rendered obsolete by the new procedure, and that the author did not wait until the new orders now in preparation are issued, without which the new Acts and the Orders already issued are worthless to the practitioner, because incomplete. A Chancery Practice that contains the obsolete law and does not contain all the law by which procedure will be governed in future certainly appears to us to be of little worth. From respect for our good friends, the publishers, whose judgment rarely fails them in their choice of books, we have reviewed our opinion, but we can find no reason to change it.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Proclamation of Banns.—A curious case was recently litigated before Mr. Sheriff Barclay, and was taken by appeal before Mr. Sheriff Craufurd, by whom the substitute's decision was reversed. It was a competition between the Session-clerks of Moneydie and Monzie as to which of them were entitled to the proclamation fees of a certain couple. David Patton, at the time of his proclamation, resided in a part of the parish of Monzie, which, some 150 years ago, was disjoined from the parish of Monzie, and united, quoad sacra, to the parish of Methven. On this point the dispute hinged;—to which of the Session-clerks did the proclamation fees belong—to him of the quoad sacra, or of the quoad civilia, portion of the parish of Monzie? Sheriff Barclay decided in favour of the quoad civilia: but, on appeal, Sheriff Craufurd, but with hesitation, decided otherwise. Both the learned gentlemen gave copious and ingenious reasons for their respective judgments.—Glasgow Constitutional.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

Value of Land in Derbyshire.—The sale of the remaining portion of the estates which belonged to the late Samuel Shore, esq. deceased, situate in the parish of Norton and in the townships of Coal Aston and Totley, in the county of Derby, took place at Mr. Nicholson's mart, in Sheffield. The sale attracted a very highly respectable company, and the competition for the whole of the lots was very animated. We subjoin the particulars:—Lot 1, a farm, consisting of dwelling-house, buildings, and about 156a. 3r. 2p. of land, near Norton, in the occupation of Mr. Joseph Bingham, was sold to Mr. Henry Watson, solicitor, for 6,550*l*. Lot 2, the adjoining closes of land, containing 31a. 1r. occupied by Mr. Mason and others, sold to the same gentleman for 1,040*l*. Lot 3, six other closes of land, in the township of Coal Aston, containing 19a. 1r. 18p. to Mr. Watson for 705*l*. Lot 4, two closes of rather improved land, near Troway, in the occupation of Charles Jones, consisting of 10a. 3r. 24p. was sold to Mr. James Rhodes, of Coal Aston, for 365*l*. Lot 5, a close of land, called "The Bank," sold to Mr. Rhodes for 170*l*. containing 4a. 0r. 20p. Lot 6, consisting of 16a. 2r. 20p. of land, and part of a farm, sold to Mr. W. Smith, of Sheffield, for 1,080*l*. Lot 7, the same gentleman was the purchaser of this lot at 1,190*l*.—18a. 0r. 12p. of land. Lot 8, a close of land, called "The Birches," near Coal Aston, 7a. 1r. 11p. was sold to Mr. James Rhodes for 245*l*. Lot 9, "The Two Birches," comprising about 9a. 1r. 1p. was sold to Mr. Marshall, of Fullwood Hall, for 410*l*. Lot 10, the mines of coal and other minerals under a portion of land of Coal Aston—were passed by, only one bidder for it. Lot 11, in the township of Totley, consisting of two small cottages and 12a. 2r. 21p. of land, in the occupation of J. Mitchel, was sold to Mr. Henry Waterfall, solicitor, for 490*l*. Lot 12, a small close of land, containing 1a. 3r. 10p. was sold to Mr. Thomas Gatley, for 48*l*. Lot 13, five fields, containing 13a. 2r. 9p. also at Totley, was sold to D'Ewes Coke, esq. for 390*l*. Lot 14, the rent charge of 21s. 15r. 11p. arising out of various lands in about fourteen different holdings, in the township of Totley, was sold to Mr. Waterfall for 450*l*. Lot 15 comprised 101a. 2r. 16p. of moor land, near Ringinglow, in the township of Upper Hallam; this lot, for which there was a very spirited bidding, was eventually knocked down to Mr. Saunderson, of Sheffield, at 1,560*l*. When it was offered by auction last year we heard the reserve bidding was only 1,300*l*. The total of the sale amounted to 14,703*l*.—Derbyshire Courier.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1852.

TO READERS.

THE indexes to the nineteenth volume of the LAW TIMES will be published, as usual, on Saturday next. It is impossible to prepare so voluminous a document more speedily.

We purpose to present, in a series of articles, a sketch of an Action at Law, and of a Suit in Equity, as they will be under the altered procedures.

The reporters in all the courts will pay particular attention to all points of practice that may be decided, so that the Profession may be fully informed, at the earliest moment, of the constructions which the Judges put upon the new statutes and rules, and a weekly commentary will explain to them the effect of those decisions upon their practice. The most distant reader of the LAW TIMES will thus be as fully acquainted with the working of the new law as if he had been present in the courts; nay, more so, for he could be in one court only—here he will find the collected and digested decisions of all the Courts.

The new forms required in the new practice are in the press. Of these the most important will be the writs of summons, with the special indorsements. To permit of particulars of various lengths being thus appended to the writ, paper copies of writ of summons will be printed, with ruled spaces below, varying in length from half a page of foolscap to four pages, and with pounds, shillings, and pence lines. The uses of this will be obvious.

The like copies of writ of summons will be printed, with special indorsements for bills of exchange and promissory notes.

THE EXODUS.

THE Exodus of Ireland to America, and of England to Australia, is rivalled by the Exodus of the Bar from the Temple. You cannot pass through that region at any hour but you will meet laden porters going out of it, or see suspicious vehicles at doors receiving piles of dusty lumber and mountains of mouldy books. The Bar is migrating—some to dig gold or keep a store in the land of wealth; others to follow some more hopeful calling at home; but the majority to the provinces, anticipating the localisation of law and better chances for themselves in the local courts. Soon the Bar that hitherto has been centralised in London will be scattered over the whole face of the country. At any other season than this, when so many questions of practical law are claiming attention, it would have been a curious and interesting subject for speculation what will be the consequence of this great change to the Bar itself, to the Profession generally, and to the public. For our own part, we believe that it will be equally injurious to all. The Bar never can be again what it has been, and we have little doubt that in no long time its entire functions will be changed, and it will take a different status. But while lamenting such a catastrophe, we must admit that it was inevitable. It has been the result of other great social changes. Society has advanced farther than the Lawyers, and is now running over them. The functions of an Attorney are a necessity that rather increases than diminishes; but those of the Barrister, except as an Advocate, are not necessary, and therefore society is striving to do without him.

If this is the true theory of the decline of the Bar, we fear that it will not be stayed by a flight to the provinces; we suspect that its decay will thus be hastened rather, for reasons which we have not space to set forth now, but which we purpose to explain when there is a little more leisure in the legal world.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

SPECIAL INDORSEMENTS ON WRITS.

REMEMBER that after the 24th of October you will be enabled to obtain judgment for debt upon the writ alone, without any further process.

For this purpose the writ must be specially indorsed—that is to say, it must contain the particulars of the debt stated as fully as they used to be when particulars were given with the declaration. The safer and the fairest course will be to indorse upon the writ the account in full, with all the items set forth; unless, indeed, it runs to a very inconvenient length, in which case it might be abbreviated. If a writ be so specially indorsed, and appearance be not entered in due time, judgment may be signed for the amount claimed by the particulars, and execution may be issued thereon.

It would be impossible to devise a speedier or cheaper process for the recovery of debts. The remedy thus offered by the Superior Courts will be vastly better than that given by the County Courts, and of course every debt that can be sued for in the former will henceforth be taken there.

FORECLOSURE.

IT may not have occurred to our readers that, under the new Equity Procedure, foreclosure will be the cheapest remedy for a mortgagee. It may be obtained by claim (without a bill) in a very short time, and at a very small cost, and power is given to the Courts to order a sale. Henceforth it will be quite unnecessary to incumber mortgage-deeds with long powers of sale. In small mortgages, where cost is a consideration, the powers of sale may be now omitted, thus abbreviating a mortgage deed by nearly a skin.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

AMONGST other useful reforms introduced by the Suitors in Chancery Relief Act, power is given to the Lord Chancellor, entrusted by the sign manual with the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, by any order or orders, to abolish all or any of the fees payable in relation to proceedings in lunacy, and to direct that such of the fees as shall not be abolished, if any, shall be collected by means of stamps in the manner thereinbefore provided, with respect to fees payable in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and also to direct that in lieu of all or any of such fees, a per centage or ad valorem payment shall be paid on the clear annual incomes of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, and on the amount of the taxed costs incurred in proceedings in lunacy, or on such annual incomes only, or on the amount of such taxed costs only, the amount of such annual incomes as aforesaid, and the amount of the per centage or ad valorem payment to be paid thereon, and on such taxed costs to be from time to time ascertained and fixed in such manner, by such means, and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor, entrusted as aforesaid, shall by any order or orders direct, and the amount of such per centage or ad valorem payment is to be paid into the "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," at such times and by such persons as the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, shall by any order or orders direct; but the amount to be raised by such per centage or ad valorem payment is not to exceed the amount which may from time to time be required to provide for the payment of the salaries, expenses, and sums of money payable under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 84, or any other Acts or Act of Parliament in force with respect to lunatics; and a statement of the amount of such per centage or ad valorem payment is from time to time, within fourteen days after the same shall have been settled, to be laid on the table of the House of Commons, if Parliament shall be then assembled, or if Parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of Parliament then next following. (Sec. 14.)

By the next section all the jurisdiction, and all the powers and authorities of a judicial nature, given by 1 Wm. 4, c. 65, by "The Trustee Act, 1850," and by any other Acts or Act of Parliament now in force, to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the sign manual with the care, &c. of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, is to belong to and may be exercised by all or any of the persons or person for the time being intrusted as aforesaid. (Sec. 15.) This section will confer jurisdiction upon the Lords Justices, which they previously did not possess.

The next section carries out what in our last number we submitted to be the correct principle upon which the expenses of the administration of justice should be paid, viz. by the country at large and not by the suitor, and it will enable a very considerable reduction to be made in their fees, which now add so considerably to the expenses of a Chancery suit by throwing those of the Judges' salaries as are not already paid from that source upon the consolidated fund.

This section begins by reciting, that under certain Acts the salaries of the Master of the Rolls, and of the Vice-Chancellors, appointed under 53 Geo. 3, c. 24, were payable out of the consolidated fund; but the salary of the Lord Chancellor (except as speaker of the House of Lords), and the salaries of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and of the other Vice-Chancellors, were payable out of the interest and dividends arising from the Government or Parliamentary securities placed in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, which had been purchased from time to time with moneys taken out of the common and general cash belonging to the suitors of the Court of Chancery, lying dead and unemployed in the Bank of England; and reciting that it was expedient that the salaries of all the Judges of the Court of Chancery should be paid out of the consolidated fund, instead of out of the interest of the securities purchased with the cash of the suitors as aforesaid: it enacts, that after the 10th October, 1852, there shall be paid and charged upon the consolidated fund the annual salaries thereinafter-mentioned; that is to say, to the Lord Chancellor such yearly sum as, with the salary payable to him as Speaker of the

House of Lords, will make up the net yearly sum of ten thousand pounds; to each of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, six thousand pounds; to the Vice-Chancellor for the time being under the Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, session one, chapter five, five thousand pounds; and to the Vice-Chancellor appointed under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 4, five thousand pounds. All which salaries are to be in lieu of all salaries theretofore payable to such Judges respectively, out of any fund whatsoever. (Sec. 16.)

The six following sections are of considerable importance: they provide for the payment of the Accountant-General by a salary, instead of the present very objectionable mode of his receiving a share of the brokerage; they also enable the Treasury to regulate the payments to be made to the broker, who is at present paid by a commission on the full amount of purchases and sales directed to be made on any particular day by the Accountant-General, although if the amount of the purchases and sales were set off one against the other, the stock in the Accountant-General's name would be increased or diminished by a very small amount; a state of things which probably would not have been allowed to exist so long, unless, contrary to every principle of equity, an officer standing in a fiduciary relation to the suitors of the Court, had been allowed to make a profit out of the trust committed to his care, and had thus a direct interest in not doing anything to effect a reduction in exorbitant charges on account of brokerage which pressed so heavily on those whose interests he ought to have protected.

By the 17th section so much of the 5 Vict. c. 5, as enacts that the Accountant-General is, on or before the 1st of September in every year, to pay into the Bank to an account entitled "An Account of Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Money placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," the sum of 150*l.* is repealed. (Sec. 17.)

And after the 28th of October, 1852, the brokerage which may from time to time be received by the present Accountant-General is to be paid by him into the Bank of England, to be there placed to his credit, as such Accountant-General, to the account entitled "The Suitors' Fee-fund Account," at such times and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct (sec. 18); and there is to be paid to the present Accountant-General, in lieu of the brokerage, and in addition to his salary and allowance for books, &c. the net yearly salary of two thousand seven hundred pounds (sec. 19); but nothing is to affect the rights, privileges, or duties to which the present Accountant-General is entitled, or which he is liable to perform as one of the Masters in Ordinary. (Sec. 20.)

Power is given to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to make such regulations with respect to the broker to be employed in transacting the business relating to the funds of the Court of Chancery, and the amount of commission to be received by such broker, or the payment of such broker by salary or otherwise, as they shall from time to time think fit. (Sec. 21.)

After the resignation or death of the present Accountant-General, the salary provided for the Accountant-General of the said Court by 12 Geo. 2, c. 24, and 9 Geo. 3, c. 19, is to cease, and there is to be paid to the Accountant-General for the time being the net yearly salary of three thousand pounds. (Sec. 22.)

Another burthen upon suitors was that of the fees of certain useless offices. Many of them are abolished by the Act. After the 28th October, 1852, the following officers are to be removed, and their respective offices to cease; that is to say, the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, the secretary of decrees and injunction, one of the two gentlemen of the chamber attending the Great Seal, the chaff wax, the deputy chaff wax, the sealer, and the deputy sealer; and the duties theretofore performed by the secretary of decrees and injunctions are thenceforth to be performed by the clerks of the records and writs, and the respective duties of the offices of the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper and of chaff wax and sealer are thenceforth to be performed by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the purse-bearer to the Lord Chancellor respectively, as directed by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 84, upon such offices becoming vacant by the death, resignation, or removal of the then respective holders thereof, and such purse-bearer is to be thenceforth entitled to such yearly sums for the expenses of the offices of chaff wax and sealer as are by the said last-mentioned Act directed to be paid to him. (Sec. 23.)

After the 28th October, 1852, there is to be paid to the officers of the Lord Chancellor, next hereinafter named, in lieu of all fees heretofore received by them respectively for their own use, the following yearly salaries; that is to say, to the principal secretary of the Lord Chancellor, 1,200*l.* to the gentleman of the chamber, 500*l.*; to the purse-bearer 500*l.* and to the trainbearer 200*l.*; and power is given to the Lord Chancellor to appoint a clerk to be employed in the office of such principal secretary, at a salary not exceeding 200*l.* as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct. (Sec. 24.)

After the 10th October, 1852, the persons or person holding the offices of Secretary of Presentations and Secretary of Commissions of the Peace, are to account for all the fees and emoluments payable to and received by them or him, by virtue of such offices, and are to pay the same into the receipt of her Majesty's exchequer, and when so paid, they are to be carried to the consolidated fund. (Sec. 25.)

And after the 10th October, 1852, there is to be paid to the persons or person for the time being holding such last-mentioned offices the yearly sum of 800*l.* to be divided between such persons, in case such offices should be held by different persons, in such proportions as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, and such yearly sum is to be paid out of the consolidated fund. (Sec. 26.)

After the 28th October, 1852, the offices of the patentee of the subpœna office, the deputy of the patentee of the subpœna office, the clerk of affidavits, the assistant clerk of affidavits, the second assistant clerk of affidavits, the clerk of reports, the doorkeeper of the Court of Chancery, and the crier of the Court of Chancery, and the office of usher of the Court of Chancery, now held by Thomas Francis Le Dieu, are to be abolished. (Sec. 27.)

After the 28th October, 1852, the execution of the duties of the subpœna office are to be transferred to the clerks of records and writs, and such duties are to be performed by them in such manner as they are directed to perform the same by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 105, after the death, resignation, or removal from his office of the present patentee of the subpœna office. (Sec. 28.)

After the 28th October, 1852, the duties of the affidavit office are to be performed by the clerks of records and writs, but affidavits or affirmations may be sworn, affirmed, or attested upon honour, and declarations made before the clerk of enrolment for the time being, as occasion may require, for the better despatch of business; and the duties of the clerk of reports are to be performed by such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint for that purpose, and such person or persons shall be entitled under the Act to such salary or salaries as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall by any order direct, provided that the whole amount of such salaries shall not in any one year exceed the sum of 400*l.* (Sec. 29.)

NEW COMMON LAW PRACTICE.

Mr. Kerr's New Practice of the Common Law, under the Common Law Procedure Act, will be ready on Wednesday next. Its price will be 12s. It will be sent by the post, free, to persons ordering it, in the course in which their orders are received. It contains a copious Introduction and Appendix of Forms, &c.

Mr. Tudor's New Chancery Practice only waits the forthcoming orders.

In answer to the inquiries of correspondents, we have to reply, that Mr. Crockford is printing, for the use of practitioners, the form of warrant required under "The Debtors Arrest Act." It is on foolscap, and can be supplied in small quantities.

NEW BANKRUPTCY ORDERS.

At last the new Bankruptcy Orders are on the eve of being issued. Indefatigable Lord St. Leonard's has settled them, with the aid of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, and they will probably take effect from the beginning of Term. They are very voluminous; indeed, in extenso they would fill three whole numbers of the Law Times.

They will be published, as announced long since, in an appendix volume to Wise's edition of the Act, with Notes and an Index. But to make this more complete and valuable, the Act itself, with notes of all the cases that have been decided on its construction, will form part of the volume. As this portion of the work is ready, its appearance will not be long delayed.

AN ADVERTISEMENT.

The following advertisement appears in the Times of Saturday last:—

"LAW.—County Court Extension.—Sheriffs' Small Debts' Court, Guildhall.—Mr. G. MANLEY WETHERFIELD, Solicitor, begs to intimate that he continues to ATTEND this COURT as Advocate for suitors, and on the usual agency terms for the Profession. Charges limited to the scale allowed by the Court, and in some cases lower.—Offices, 18A, Basinghall-street, City."

Apart from its unprofessional character, it is an open avowal of a desire to violate the law that expressly prohibits an Attorney from acting as an Advocate in the County Courts instructed by another Attorney. After this announcement, an inquiry should be made into all cases in which Mr. Wetherfield appears, whether he is principal or agent.

Imagine an Attorney offering to do business at charges "lower than the scale allowed in the County Courts!"

NEW STATUTES.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

Cap. LXXXI.

An Act to Consolidate and amend the Statutes relating to the Assessment and Collection of County Rates in England and Wales.

(June 30, 1852.)

We give a summary only of this statute.

1. Repeal of 12 Geo. 2, c. 29; 13 Geo. 2, c. 18; 37 Geo. 3, c. 65; 55 Geo. 3, c. 51; 56 Geo. 3, c. 49; 57 Geo. 3, c. 94; 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 85; 1 Wm. 4, c. xlviii; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 48; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 111; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 65.

2. Justices at sessions to appoint committees for preparing a basis or standard for assessing county rates.

3. Meetings of committee.

4. Committee may appoint a clerk.

5. Committees may require returns of the annual value of the property in any parish liable to be assessed, with the date of the last valuation—Such returns to be laid before a vestry meeting previous to their being presented to the committee.

6. Meaning of "full and fair annual value."

7. Committees empowered to inspect rates, assessments, valuations, &c.—55 Geo. 3, c. 51.

8. Penalty on overseers or others refusing to attend or produce documents.

9. Committees may cause new valuations to be made.

10. If parish officers, &c. neglect to make returns, or make false returns, expenses of valuations to be paid by parishes.

11. Costs of valuations directed by committee.

12. Allowances and compensation to persons employed in the execution of this Act.

13. When committee have prepared a basis for a county rate differing in value from the preceding, they shall cause it to be printed, and distributed to the acting justices and overseers of the poor—Overseers to submit the proposed basis to a vestry meeting.

14. Notice of the time within which objections may be made to the proposed basis to be sent to the overseers.

15. Notice to be given when basis will be taken into consideration by Court of General or Quarter Sessions.

16. Basis to be deemed valid after confirmation by Court of General or Quarter Sessions.

17. Appeal against basis.—Notice of appeal.

18. Hearing and determining appeals.

19. Sessions to determine costs of appeal and of valuation ordered by Sessions.

20. Committee may revise basis or rate from time to time.

21. Justices in General or Quarter Sessions to make a fair and equal county rate, whenever circumstances appear to require it.

22. Parishes aggrieved may appeal.

23. Rate to be raised, notwithstanding appeals, until determination of justices.—57 Geo. 3, c. 94, s. 2.—In case justices order rate to be set aside, decreased, or lowered.—Money paid subsequent to the time of appeal to be returned out of the general county rate.

24. Expenses of appeals or proceedings at law shall be paid in such proportions as the justices or courts of law shall award.

25. Costs may be awarded upon notices of appeal not prosecuted.

26. Justices of the peace shall send precepts directly to guardians of unions for the payment of county rates:—Guardians to pay such rates.—County treasurer to receive the same.

27. If the guardians fail to pay such rates, the justices may issue warrants to the overseers of parishes, &c. to pay the same.

28. If the overseers, &c. fail to pay, the justices may levy the rate by distress and sale.

29. Parishes not in arrear with contributions to be reimbursed by those which are in arrear.

30. Justices may issue precepts to the overseers of parishes, &c. not comprised in unions, or only partly within the jurisdiction of the justices.

31. Powers of Act to extend to places where there are no separate churchwardens, &c. or where no separate or distinct poor-rate is made for any place extending into two or more counties, &c.—Justices not to act beyond their jurisdiction.

32. The overseers of parishes situated partly within boroughs and partly without to collect the county-rates leviable on the part of the parish not comprised within the borough.

33. Appeal against the rate, and audit of the accounts.

34. Mode of procuring the funds when the precept is sent to the guardians of the union comprising the divided place.

35. Where the amount required for the county or other rate is small, the making of the rate for reimbursement may be postponed.

36. Mode of collection where the office of high constable has not become vacant.

37. High constable to give security.

38. Mode of enforcing repayment by borough treasurers of money expended by counties out of the county-rates as provided by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 114 & 117.

39. Delivery of precepts, &c. by post, and evidence thereof.

40. Justices in general or Quarter Sessions to appoint justices to fix and determine boundaries between counties, ridings, divisions, or parts of counties, and other places of distinct and separate jurisdiction.

41. Appointment of new justices.

42. In case of difference between justices, a referee to be appointed to meet them, and determine boundary.

43. Act not to determine any question of boundary, except for the purpose of rating.

44. Limitation of actions.

45. Penalty on persons obstructing overseers, &c.

46. Penalties and forfeitures, costs and charges, may be levied by distress and sale of offender's goods. Committal. Application of penalties.

47. Counties where rates have been regulated by particular Acts authorised to make use of the provisions of this Act.

48. All business relating to the assessment and application of county rate shall be transacted in open court.

49. Notice thereof to be given.

50. Treasurers of counties or of divisions of counties to publish once in every year an abstract account of their receipts and expenditures.

51. The Act extended to all places having separate commission of the peace, and to all rates of the nature of county rates.

52. Construction of the words "parish," "union," "guardians."

Cap. LXXXII.

An Act to apply a Sum of the Consolidated Fund and certain other Sums to the Service of the Year 1852, and to appropriate the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament.

(July 1, 1852.)

Cap. LXXXIII.

An Act for amending the Law for granting Patents for Inventions. (July 1, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law concerning letters patent for inventions: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. Certain persons constituted Commissioners of Patents for Inventions, three of whom may act, the Chancellor or Master of the Rolls being one.—The Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, her Majesty's Attorney-General for England, her Majesty's Solicitor-General for England; the Lord Advocate, her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Scotland, her Majesty's Attorney-General for Ireland, and her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Ireland, for the time being respectively, together with such other person or persons as may be from time to time appointed by her Majesty, as hereinafter mentioned, shall be Commissioners of Patents for Inventions; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty, from time to time, by warrant under her royal sign manual, to appoint such other person or persons as she may think fit to be a commissioner or commissioners as aforesaid; and every person so appointed shall continue such commissioner during her Majesty's pleasure; and all the powers hereby vested in the commissioners may be exercised by any three or more of them, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls being one.

2. Seal of the commissioners.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners to cause a seal to be made for the purposes of this Act, and from time to time to vary such seal, and to cause to be sealed therewith all the warrants for letters patent under this Act, and all instruments and copies proceeding from the office of the commissioners, and all courts, judges, and other persons whomsoever shall take notice of such seal, and receive impressions thereof in evidence, in like manner as impressions of the great seal are received in evidence, and shall also take notice of and receive in evidence, without further proof or production of the originals, all copies or extracts, certified under the seal of the said office, of or from documents deposited in such office.

3. Power to commissioners to make rules and regulations, which shall be laid before Parliament—Commissioners to report annually to Parliament.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to make such rules and regulations (not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act) respecting the business of their office, and all matters and things which under the provisions herein contained are to be under their control and direction, as may appear to them necessary and expedient for the purposes of this Act; and all such rules shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the making thereof, if Parliament be sitting, and if Parliament be not sitting, then within fourteen days after the next meeting of Parliament; and the commissioners shall cause a report to be laid annually before Parliament of all the proceedings under and in pursuance of this Act.

4. Treasury to provide offices.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to provide and appoint from time to time proper places or buildings for an office or offices for the purposes of this Act.

5. Commissioners, with consent of the Treasury, to appoint clerks, &c.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners, with the consent of the commissioners of the Treasury, from time to time to appoint for the purposes of this Act, such clerks and officers as the commissioners may think proper; and it shall be lawful for the commissioners from time to time to remove any of the clerks and officers so appointed.

6. Petition and declaration to be accompanied with a provisional specification.—Every petition for the grant of letters patent for an invention, and the declaration required to accompany such petition, shall be left at the office of the commissioners, and there shall be left therewith a statement in writing, herein-after called the provisional specification, signed by or on behalf of the applicant for letters patent, describing the nature of the said invention; and the day of the delivery of every such petition, declaration, and provisional specification shall be recorded at the said office, and endorsed on such petition, declaration, and provisional specification, and a certificate thereof given to such applicant or his agent; and all such petitions, declarations, and provisional specifications shall be preserved in such manner as the commissioners may direct, and a registry thereof and of all proceedings thereon kept at the office of the commissioners.

7. Every application to be referred to one of the law officers.—Every application for letters patent made under this Act shall be referred by the commissioners, according to such regulations as they may think fit to make, to one of the law officers.

8. The provisional specification to be referred to the law officer, who, if satisfied, may give a certificate of his allowance, which shall be filed.—The provisional specification shall be referred to the law officer, who shall be at liberty to call to his aid such scientific or other person as he may think fit, and to cause to be paid to such person by the applicant such remuneration as the law officer shall appoint; and if such law officer be satisfied that the provisional specification describes the nature of the invention, he shall allow the same, and give a certificate of his allowance, and such certificate shall be filed in the office of the commissioners, and thereupon the invention therein referred to may, during the term of six months from the date of the application for letters patent for the said invention, be used and published without prejudice to any letters patent to be granted for the same, and such protection from the consequences of use and publication is herein-after referred to as provisional protection: provided always, that in case the title of the invention or the provisional specification be too large or insufficient, it shall be lawful for the law officer to whom the same is referred to allow or require the same to be amended.

9. Inventor may deposit, in lieu of a provisional specification, a complete specification, such deposit to confer for a limited time the like rights as letters patent.—The applicant for letters patent for an invention, instead of leaving with the petition and declaration a provisional specification as aforesaid, may, if he think fit, file with the said petition and declaration an instrument in writing under his hand and seal (herein-after called a complete specification), particularly describing and ascertaining the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed, which complete specification shall be mentioned in such declaration, and the day of the delivery of every such petition, declaration, and complete specification shall be recorded at the office of the commissioners, and endorsed on such petition, declaration, and specification, and a certificate thereof given to such applicant or his agent, and thereupon, subject and without prejudice to the provisions herein-after contained, the invention shall be protected under this Act for the term of six months from the date of the application, and the applicant shall have during such term of six months the like powers, rights, and privileges as might have been conferred upon him by letters patent for such invention, issued under this Act, and duly sealed as of the day of the date of such application; and during the continuance of such powers, rights, and privileges under this provision, such invention may be used and published without prejudice to any letters patent to be granted for the same; and where letters patent are granted in respect of such invention, then in lieu of a condition for making void such letters patent in case such invention be not described and ascertained by a subsequent specification, such letters patent shall be conditioned to become void if such complete specification, filed as aforesaid, does not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed; and a copy of every such complete specification shall be open to the inspection of the public, as herein-after provided, from the time of depositing the same, subject to such regulation as the commissioners may make.

10. Letters patent granted to the first inventor not to be invalidated by protection obtained in fraud of the first inventor. In case of any application for letters patent for any invention, and the obtaining upon such application of provisional protection for such invention, or of protection for the same, by reason of the deposit of a complete specification as aforesaid in fraud of the true and first inventor, any letters patent granted to the true and first inventor of such invention shall not be invalidated by reason of such application, or of such provisional or other protection as aforesaid, or of any use or publication of the invention subsequent to such application, and before the expiration of the term of such provisional or other protection.

11. Commissioners to cause protections to be advertised.—Where any invention is provisionally protected under this Act, or protected by reason of the deposit of such complete specification as aforesaid, the commissioners shall cause such provisional protection or such other protection as aforesaid to be advertised in such manner as they may see fit.

12. Application for letters patent to be advertised, and also oppositions to the same.—The applicant for letters patent, so soon as he may think fit after the invention shall have been provisionally protected under this Act, or where a complete specification has been deposited with his petition and declaration, then so soon as he may think fit after such deposit, may give notice at the office of the commissioners of his intention of proceeding with his application for letters patent for the said invention, and thereupon the said commissioners shall cause his said application to be advertised in such manner as they may see fit; and any persons having an interest in opposing the grant of letters patent for the said invention shall be at liberty to leave particulars in writing of their objections to the said application at such place and within such time and subject to such regulations as the commissioners may direct.

13. Specification and objections to be referred to law officer.—So soon as the time for the delivery of such objection shall have expired, the provisional specification or complete specification (as the case may be) and particulars of objection (if any) shall be referred to the law officer to whom the application has been referred.

14. Power to law officer to order by or to whom costs shall be paid.—It shall be lawful for the law officer to whom any application for such letters patent is referred, if he see fit, by certificate under his hand, to order by or to whom the costs of any hearing or inquiry upon any objection, or otherwise in relation to the grant of such letters patent, or in relation to the provisional (or other) protection acquired by the applicant under this Act, shall be paid, and in what manner and by whom such costs are to be ascertained; and if any costs so ordered to be paid be not paid within four days after the amount thereof shall be so ascertained, it shall be lawful for such law officer to make an order for the payment of the same, and every such order may be made a rule of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts at Westminster or Dublin, and may be recorded in the books of Council and Session in Scotland to the effect that execution may pass thereupon in common form.

15. Power to law officer to cause a warrant to be made for sealing of letters patent. Chancellor to have same powers in respect to warrant, &c. as he now has. Writ of scire facias.—It shall be lawful for such law officer, after such hearing, if any, as he may think fit, to cause a warrant to be made for the sealing of letters patent for the said invention, and such warrant shall be sealed with the seal of the commissioners, and shall set forth the tenor and effect of the letters patent thereby authorised to be granted, and such law officer shall direct the insertion in such letters patent of all such restrictions, conditions, and provisoes as he may deem usual and expedient in such grants, or necessary in pursuance of the provisions of this Act; and the said warrant shall be the warrant for the making and sealing of letters patent under this Act according to the tenor of the said warrant: provided always, that the Lord Chancellor shall and may have and exercise such powers, authority, and discretion in respect to the said warrant, and the letters patent therein directed to be made under this Act, as he now has and might now exercise with respect to the warrant for the issue under the Great Seal of letters patent for any invention, and with respect to the making and issuing of such letters patent; and the writ of scire facias shall lie for the repeal of any letters patent issued under this Act, in the like cases as the same would lie for the repeal of letters patent which may now be issued under the Great Seal.

16. Nothing to affect the prerogative of the Crown in granting or withholding grant of letters patent.—Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall extend to abridge or affect the prerogative of the Crown in relation to the granting or withholding the grant of any letters patent; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by warrant under her royal sign manual, to direct such law officer to withhold such warrant as aforesaid, or that any letters patent for the issuing whereof he may have issued a warrant as aforesaid shall not issue, or to direct the insertion in any letters patent to be issued in manner herein provided of any restrictions, conditions, or provisoes which her Majesty may think fit in addition to or in substitution for any restrictions, conditions, or provisoes which would otherwise be inserted therein under this Act; and it shall also be lawful for her Majesty by like warrant, to direct any complete specification which may have been filed under the provision hereinbefore contained, and in respect of the invention described in which no letters patent may have been granted, to be cancelled, and thereupon the protection obtained by the filing of such complete specification shall cease.

17. Letters patent to be made subject to avoidance on non-fulfilment of certain conditions.—All letters patent for inventions granted under the provisions herein-before contained shall be made subject to the condition that the same shall be void, and that the powers and privileges thereby granted shall cease and determine at the expiration of three years and seven years respectively from the date thereof, unless there be paid, before the expiration of the said three and seven years respectively, the sum or sums of money and stamp duties in the schedule to this Act annexed; and the payment of the said sums of money and stamp duties respectively shall be endorsed on the warrant for the said letters patent; and such officer of the commissioners as may be appointed for this purpose shall issue under the seal of the commissioners a certificate of such payment, and shall endorse a receipt for the same on any letters patent issued under the authority of the said warrant; and such certificate, duly stamped, shall be evidence of the payment of the several sums respectively.

18. Letters patent issued under the Great Seal to be valid for the whole of the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man—Nothing to give effect to any letters patent granted in any colony.—The commissioners, so soon after the sealing of the said warrant as required by the applicant for the letters patent, shall cause to be prepared letters patent for the invention, according to the tenor of the said warrant, and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to cause such letters patent to be sealed with the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, and such letters patent so sealed shall extend to the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man; and in case such warrant so direct, such letters patent shall be made applicable to her Majesty's colonies and plantations abroad, or such of them as may be mentioned in such warrant; and such letters patent shall be valid and effectual as to the whole of such United Kingdom, and the said islands and isle, and the said colonies or plantations, or such of them as aforesaid, and shall confer the like powers, rights, and privileges as might, in case this Act had not been passed, have been conferred by several letters patent of the like purport and effect passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, under the seal appointed to be used instead of the Great Seal of Scotland, and under the Great Seal of Ireland respectively, and made applicable to England, the dominion of Wales, the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man, and the said colonies and plantations, or such of them as aforesaid, to Scotland, and to Ireland respectively, save as herein otherwise provided: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or taken to give any effect or operation to any letters patent to be granted under the authority of this Act in any colony in which such or the like letters patent would be invalid by the law in force in the same colony for the time being: provided always, that a transcript of such letters shall, so soon after the sealing of the same and in such manner as the commissioners shall direct, be transmitted to the director of Chancery in Scotland, and be recorded in the records of Chancery in Scotland, upon payment of such fees as the commissioners shall appoint, in the same manner and to the same effect in all respects as letters patent passing under the seal appointed by the treaty of union to be used in place of the Great Seal of Scotland have heretofore been recorded, and extracts from the said records shall be furnished to all parties requiring the same, on payment of such fees as the commissioners shall direct, and shall be received in evidence in all courts in Scotland to the like effect as the letters patent themselves.

19. No letters patent to be issued after three months from date of warrant.—Provided always, that no letters patent, save as hereinafter mentioned in the case of letters patent destroyed or lost, shall issue on any warrant granted as aforesaid, unless application be made to seal such letters patent within three months after the date of the said warrant.

20. No letters patent (except in lieu of those lost, &c.) to be issued after expiration of protection given by this Act.—Provided also, that no letters patent (save letters patent issued in lieu of others destroyed or lost) shall be issued or be of any force or effect unless the same be granted during the continuance of the provisional protection under this Act, or, where a complete specification has been deposited under this Act, then unless such letters patent be granted during the continuance of the protection conferred under this Act by reason of such deposit, save that where the application to seal such letters patent has been made during the continuance of such provisional or other protection as aforesaid, and the sealing of such letters patent has been delayed by reason of a caveat or an application to the Lord Chancellor against or in relation to the sealing of such letters patent, then such letters patent may be sealed at such time as the Lord Chancellor shall direct.

21. Letters patent may be granted to personal representatives of the applicant during the term of protection, or within three months after applicant's decease.—Provided also, that where the applicant for such letters patent dies during the continuance of the provisional protection, or the protection by reason of the deposit of a complete specification (as the case may be), such letters patent may be granted to the executors or administrators of such applicant during the continuance of such provisional or other protection, or at any time within three months after the death of such applicant, notwithstanding the expiration of the term of such provisional or other protection, and the letters patent so granted shall be of the like force and effect as if they had been granted to such applicant during the continuance of such provisional or other protection.

22. If letters patent be destroyed or lost, other letters patent may be issued.—Provided also, that in case such letters patent shall be destroyed or lost, other letters patent of the like tenor and effect, and sealed and dated as of the same day, may, subject to such regulations as the commissioners may direct, be issued under the authority of the warrant in pursuance of which the original letters patent were issued.

23. Letters patent may be dated as of the day of the application.—It shall be lawful (the Act of the eighteenth year of King Henry the Sixth, chapter one, or any other Act, to the contrary notwithstanding), to cause any letters patent to be issued in pursuance of this Act to be sealed and bear date as of the day of the application for the same, and in case of such letters patent for any invention provisionally registered under the "Protection of Inventions Act, 1851," as of the day of such provisional registration, or, where the law officer to whom the application was referred, or the Lord Chancellor, thinks fit and directs, any such letters patent as aforesaid may be sealed and bear date as of the day of the sealing of such letters patent, or of any other day between the day of such application or provisional registration and the day of such sealing.

24. Letters patent where antedated to be of the same validity as if sealed on the day of the date.—Any letters patent issued under this Act sealed and bearing date as of any day prior to the day of the actual sealing thereof, shall be of the same force and validity as if they had been sealed on the day as of which the same are expressed to be sealed and bear date: provided always, that save where such letters patent are granted for any invention, in respect whereof a complete specification has been deposited upon the application for the same under this Act, no proceeding at law or in equity shall be had upon such letters patent in respect of any infringement committed before the same were actually granted.

25. Letters patent obtained in United Kingdom for patented foreign inventions not to continue in force after the expiration of the foreign patent.—Where, upon any application made after the passing of this Act, letters patent are granted in the United Kingdom for or in respect of any invention first invented in any foreign country, or by the subject of any foreign power or state, and a patent or like privilege for the monopoly or exclusive use or exercise of such invention in any foreign country is there obtained before the grant of such letters patent in the United Kingdom, all rights and privileges under such letters patent shall (notwithstanding any term in such letters patent limited) cease and be void immediately upon the expiration or other determination of the term during which the patent or like privilege obtained in such foreign country shall continue in force, or where more than one such patent or like privilege is obtained abroad, immediately upon the expiration or determination of the term which shall first expire or be determined of such several patents or like privileges: provided always, that no letters patent for or in respect of any invention for which any such patent or like privilege as aforesaid shall have been obtained in any foreign country, and which shall be granted in the said United Kingdom after the expiration of the term for which such patent or privilege was granted or was in force, shall be of any validity.

26. Letters patent not to prevent the use of inventions in foreign ships resorting to British ports; except ships of foreign states in whose ports British ships are prevented from using foreign inventions.—No letters patent for any invention (granted after the passing of this Act) shall extend to prevent the use of such invention in any foreign ship or vessel, or for the navigation of any foreign ship or vessel, which may be in any port of her Majesty's dominions, or in any of the waters within the jurisdiction of any of her Majesty's Courts, where such invention is not used for the manufacture of any goods or commodities to be vended within or exported from her Majesty's dominions: provided always, that this enactment shall not extend to the ships or vessels of any foreign state of which the laws authorise subjects of such foreign state, having patents or like privileges for the exclusive use or exercise of inventions within its territories, to prevent or interfere with the use of such inventions in British ships or vessels, or in or about the navigation of British ships or vessels, while in the ports of such foreign state, or in the waters within the jurisdiction of its Courts, where such inventions are not so used for the manufacture of goods or commodities to be vended within or exported from the territories of such foreign state.

27. Specifications to be filed instead of being enrolled.—All letters patent to be granted under this Act (save only letters patent granted after the filing of a complete specification) shall require the specification thereunder to be filed in the High Court of Chancery, instead of requiring the same to be enrolled, and no enrolment shall be requisite.

28. Specifications, &c. to be filed in such office as Lord Chancellor shall direct.—As to filing extra copies of drawings. — Every specification to be filed in pursuance of the condition of any letters patent shall be filed in such office of the Court of Chancery as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time appoint, and every provisional specification and complete specification left or filed at the office of the commissioners, on the application for any letters patent, shall forthwith after the grant of the letters patent, or if no letters patent be granted then immediately on the expiration of six months from the time of such application, be transferred to and kept in the said office appointed for filing specifications in Chancery; and in case reference is made to drawings in any specification deposited or filed under this Act, an extra copy of such drawings shall be left with such specification.

29. Copies of specifications to be open to inspection at office of commissioners, and at Edinburgh and Dublin.—The commissioners shall cause true copies of all specifications (other than provisional specifications), disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations filed under or in pursuance of this Act, and of all provisional specification after the term of the provisional protection of the invention has expired, to be open to the inspection of the public at the office of the commissioners, and at an office in Edinburgh and Dublin respectively, at all reasonable times, subject to such regulations as the commissioners may direct; and the commissioners shall cause a transcript of the said letters patent to be transmitted for enrolment in the Court of Chancery, Dublin, and shall cause the same to be enrolled therein, and the transcript or exemplification thenceforward shall have the like effect to all intents and purposes as if the original letters patent had been enrolled in the Court of Chancery in Dublin, and all parties shall have all their remedies by scire facias or otherwise, as if the letters patent had been granted to extend to Ireland only.

30. Specifications and other documents to be printed and published—As to presenting copies of publications to public libraries, &c.—The commissioners shall cause to be printed, published, and sold, at such prices and in such manner as they may think fit, all specifications, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations deposited or filed under this Act, and such specifications (not being provisional specifications), disclaimers, and memoranda respectively shall be so printed and published as soon as conveniently may be after the filing thereof respectively, and all such provisional specifications shall be so printed and published as soon as conveniently may be after the expiration of the provisional protection obtained in respect thereof; and it shall be lawful for the commissioners to present copies of all such publications to such public libraries and museums as they may think fit, and to allow the person depositing or filing any such specification, disclaimer, or memorandum of alteration to have such number, not exceeding twenty-five, of the copies thereof so printed and published, without any payment for the same, as they may think fit.

31. Enrolments, &c. may be removed to the Office for Specifications.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls to direct the enrolment of specifications, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations heretofore or hereafter enrolled or deposited at the Rolls Chapel Office, or at the Petty Bag Office, or at the Enrolment Office of the Court of Chancery, or in the custody of the Master of the Rolls as Keeper of the Public Records, to be transferred to and kept in the office appointed for filing specifications in Chancery under this Act.

32. Commissioners to cause indexes to be made to old specifications, &c.; such specifications, &c. may be printed and published.—The commissioners shall cause indexes to all specifications, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations heretofore or to be hereafter enrolled or deposited as last aforesaid to be prepared in such form as they may think fit, and such indexes shall be open to the inspection of the public at such place or places as the commissioners shall appoint, and subject to the regulations to be made by the commissioners, and the commissioners may cause all or any of such indexes, specifications, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations to be printed, published, and sold in such a manner and at such prices as the commissioners may think fit.

33. Copies of specifications, &c. as printed by Queen's printers to be evidence.—Copies, printed by the printers to the Queen's Majesty, of specifications, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations shall be admissible in evidence, and deemed and to be primâ facie evidence of the existence and contents of the documents to which they purport to relate in all courts and in all proceedings relating to letters patent.

34. Register of patents to be kept.—There shall be kept at the office appointed for filing specification in Chancery under this Act a book or books, to be called "The Register of Patents," wherein shall be entered and recorded in chronological order all letters patent granted under this Act, the deposit or filing of specifications, disclaimers, a memoranda of alterations filed in respect of such letters patent, all amendments in such letters patent and specifications, all confirmations and extensions of such letters patent, the expiry, vacating, or cancelling such letters patent, with the dates thereof respectively, and all other matters and things affecting the validity of such letters patent as the commissioners may direct, and such register, or a copy thereof, shall be open at all convenient times to the inspection of the public, subject to such regulations as the commissioners may make.

35. A register of proprietors to be kept at the office for filing specifications.—There shall be kept at the office appointed for filing specifications in Chancery under this Act a book or books, entitled "The Register of Proprietors," wherein shall be entered, in such manner as the commissioners shall direct, the assignment of any letters patent, or of any share or interest therein, any license under letters patent, and the district to which such license relates, with the name or names of any person having any share or interest in such letters patent or licence, the date of his or their acquiring such letters patent, share, and interest, and any other matter or thing relating to or affecting the proprietorship in such letters patent or license; and a copy of any entry in such book, certified under such seal as may have been appointed or as may be directed by the Lord Chancellor to be used in the said office, shall be given to any person requiring the same, on payment of the fees hereinafter provided; and such copies so certified shall be received in evidence in all courts and in all proceedings, and shall be primâ facie proof of the assignment of such letters patent, or share or interest therein, or of the licence or proprietorship, as therein expressed: provided always, that until such entry shall have been made the grantee or grantees of the letters patent shall be deemed and taken to be the sole and exclusive proprietor or proprietors of such letters patent, and of all the licences and privileges thereby given and granted; that certified duplicates of all entries made in the said register of proprietors shall forthwith be transmitted to the office of the commissioners in Edinburgh and Dublin, where the same shall also be open to the inspection of the public; and any writ of scire facias to repeal such letters patent may be issued to the sheriff of the county or counties in which the grantee or grantees resided at the time when the said letters patent were granted; and in case such grantee or grantees do not reside in the United Kingdom, it shall be sufficient to file such writ in the Petty-bag Office, and serve notice thereof in writing at the last known residence or place of business of such grantee or grantees; and such register or a copy shall be open to the inspection of the public at the office of the commissioners, subject to such regulations as the commissioners may make: provided always, that in any proceeding in Scotland to repeal any letters patent service of all writs and summonses shall be made according to the existing forms and practice; provided also, that the grantee or grantees of letters patent to be hereafter granted may assign the letters patent for England, Scotland, or Ireland respectively as effectually as if the letters patent had been originally granted to extend to England or Scotland, or Ireland only, and the assignee or assignees shall have the same rights of action and remedies, and shall be subject to the like actions and suits as he or they should and would have had and been subject to upon the assignment of letters patent granted to England, Ireland, or Scotland before the passing of this Act.

36. Power for more than twelve persons to have a legal interest in letters patent.—Notwithstanding any proviso that may exist in former letters patent, it shall be lawful for a larger number than twelve persons hereafter to have a legal and beneficial interest in such letters patent.

37. Falsification or forgery of entries a misdemeanor.—If any person shall wilfully make or cause to be made any false entry in the said register of proprietors, or shall wilfully make or forge, or cause to be made or forged, any writing falsely purporting to be a copy of any entry in the said book, or shall produce or tender, or cause to be produced or tendered, in evidence any such writing, knowing the same to be false or forged, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by fine and imprisonment accordingly.

38. Entries may be expunged.—If any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of this Act in the said register of proprietors, it shall be lawful for such person to apply, by motion, to the Master of the Rolls, or to any of the Courts of Common Law at Westminster in Term time, or by summons to a judge of any of the said courts in vacation, for an order that such entry may be expunged, vacated, or varied; and upon any such application the Master of the Rolls, or such Court or judge respectively, may make such order for expunging, vacating, or varying such entry, and as to the costs of such application, as to the said Master of the Rolls or to such Court or judge may seem fit; and the officer having the care and custody of such register, on the production to him of any such order for expunging, vacating, or varying any such entry, shall expunge, vacate, or vary the same, according to the requisitions of such order.

39. Provisions of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, and of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, as to disclaimers and memoranda of alterations to apply to patents under this Act—Applications for disclaimers and caveats to be at office of commissioners.—All the provisions of the Acts of the session holden in the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, chapter eighty-three, and of the session holden in the seventh and eighth years of her Majesty, chapter sixty-nine, respectively, relating to disclaimers and memoranda of alterations in letters patent and specifications, except as hereinafter provided, shall be applicable and apply to any letters patent granted, and to any specification filed under the provisions of this Act: provided always, that all applications for leave to enter a disclaimer or memorandum of alteration shall be made, and all caveats relating thereto shall be lodged at the office of the commissioners, and shall be referred to the respective law officers in the said first-recited Act mentioned: provided also, that every such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration shall be filed in the office appointed for filing specifications in Chancery under this Act, with the specification to which the same relates, in lieu of being entered or filed and enrolled as required by the said first-recited Act, or by the Act of the session holden in the twelfth and thirteenth years of her Majesty, chapter one hundred and nine, and the said Acts shall be construed accordingly: provided also, that such filing of any disclaimer or memorandum of alteration, in pursuance of the leave of the law officer in the first-recited Act mentioned, certified as therein mentioned, shall, except in cases of fraud, be conclusive as to the right of the party to enter such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration under the said Acts and this Act; and no objection shall be allowed to be made in any proceeding upon or touching such letters patent, specification, disclaimer, or memorandum of alteration, on the ground that the party entering such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration had not sufficient authority in that behalf: provided also, that no action shall be brought upon any letters patent in which or on the specification of which any disclaimer or memorandum of alteration shall have been filed in respect of any infringement committed prior to the filing of such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration, unless the law officer shall certify in his fiat that any such action may be brought, notwithstanding the entry or filing of such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration.

40. Provisions of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 67, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, as to confirmation and prolongation, to apply to patents under this Act.—All the provisions of the said Act of the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, for the confirmation of any letters patent, and the grant of new letters patent, and all the provisions of the said Act, and the Acts of the session holden in the second and third years of her Majesty, chapter sixty-seven, and of the session holden in the seventh and eighth years of her Majesty, chapter sixty-nine, respectively, relating to the prolongation of the term of letters patent, and to the grant of new letters patent for a further term, shall extend and apply to any letters patent granted under the provisions of this Act, and it shall be lawful for her Majesty to grant any new letters patent, as in the said Acts mentioned; and in the granting of any such new letters patent her Majesty's Order in Council shall be a sufficient warrant and authority for the sealing of any new letters patent, and for the insertion in such new letters patent of any restrictions, conditions, and provisions in the said order mentioned; and the Lord Chancellor, on the receipt of the said Order in Council, shall cause letters patent, according to the tenor and effect of such order, to be made and sealed in the manner herein directed for letters patent issued under the warrant of the law officer: provided always that such new letters patent shall extend to and be available in and for such places as the original letters patent extended to and were available in: provided also, that such new letters patent shall be sealed and bear date as of the day after the expiration of the term of the original letters patent which may first expire.

41. In actions for infringement of letters patent, particulars to be delivered, and no evidence allowed not mentioned therein.—In any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Westminster or in Dublin for the infringement of letters patent the plaintiff shall deliver with his declaration particulars of the breaches complained of in the said action, and the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall deliver with his pleas, and the prosecutor in any proceedings by scire facias to repeal letters patent shall deliver with his declaration, particulars of any objections on which he means to rely at the trial in support of the pleas in the said action or of the suggestions of the said declaration in the proceedings by scire facias respectively; and at the trial of such action or proceeding by scire facias no evidence shall be allowed to be given in support of any alleged infringement or of any objection impeaching the validity of such letters patent which shall not be contained in the particulars delivered as aforesaid: provided always, that the place or places at or in which and in what manner the invention is alleged to have been used or published prior to the date of the letters patent shall be stated in such particulars: provided also, that it shall and may be lawful for any judge at chambers to allow such plaintiff or defendant or prosecutor respectively to amend the particulars delivered as aforesaid, upon such terms as to such judge shall seem fit: provided also, that at the trial of any proceeding by scire facias to repeal letters patent the defendant shall be entitled to begin and to give evidence in support of such letters patent, and in case evidence shall be adduced on the part of the prosecutor impeaching the validity of such letters patent, the defendant shall be entitled to the reply.

42. Courts of Common Law may grant injunction in case of infringement.—In any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Westminster and in Dublin for the infringement of letters patent, it shall be lawful for the Court in which such action is pending, if the Court be then sitting, or if the Court be not sitting then for a judge of such Court, on the application of the plaintiff or defendant respectively, to make such order for an injunction, inspection, or account, and to give such direction respecting such action, injunction, inspection, and account, and the proceedings therein respectively, as to such Court or judge may seem fit.

43. Particulars to be regarded in taxation of costs.—In taxing the costs in any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts at Westminster or in Dublin, commenced after the passing of this Act for infringing letters patent regard shall be had to the particulars delivered in such action, and the plaintiff and defendant respectively shall not be allowed any costs in respect of any particular unless certified by the judge before whom the trial was had to have been proved by such plaintiff or defendant respectively, without regard to the general costs of the cause; and it shall be lawful for the judge before whom any such action shall be tried to certify on the record that the validity of the letters patent in the declaration mentioned came in question; and the record, with such certificate, being given in evidence in any suit or action for infringing the said letters patent, or in any proceeding by scire facias to repeal the letters patent, shall entitle the plaintiff in any such such suit or action, or the defendant in such proceeding by scire facias on obtaining a decree, decretal order, or final judgment, to his full costs, charges, and expenses, taxed as between attorney and client, unless, the judge making such decree or order, or the judge trying such action or proceeding, shall certify that the plaintiff or defendant respectively ought not to have such full costs: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect the jurisdiction and forms of process of the Courts in Scotland in any action for the infringement of letters patent or in any action or proceeding respecting letters patent hitherto competent to the said courts: provided also, that when any proceedings shall require to be taken in Scotland to repeal any letters patent, such proceedings shall be taken in the form of an action of reduction at the instance of her Majesty's Advocate, or at the instance of any other party having interest with concurrence of her Majesty's Advocate, which concurrence her Majesty's Advocate is authorised and empowered to give upon just cause shewn only.

44. Payments and stamp duties on letters patent to be as in schedule.—There shall be paid in respect of letters patent applied for or issued as herein mentioned, the filing of specifications and disclaimers, certificates, entries, and searches, and other matters and things mentioned in the schedule to this Act, such fees as are mentioned in the said schedule; and there shall be paid unto and for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for or in respect of the warrants and certificates mentioned in the said schedule, or the vellum, parchment, or paper on which the same respectively or written, the stamp duties mentioned in the said schedule; and no other stamp duties shall be levied, or fees, except as hereinafter mentioned, taken in respect to such letters patent and specifications, and the matters and things in such schedule mentioned.

45. Duties to be under management of Commissioners of Inland Revenue.—The stamp duties hereby granted shall be under the care and management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and the several rules, regulations, provisions, penalties, clauses, and matters contained in any Act now or hereafter to be in force with reference to stamp duties shall be applicable thereto.

46. All moneys received to be paid to the Consolidated Fund.—The fees to be paid as aforesaid shall from time to time be paid into the receipt of the Exchequer, and be carried to and made part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

47. Not to prevent payment of fees to law officers in cases of opposition, &c.—Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the payment as heretofore to the law officers in cases of opposition to the granting of letters patent, and in cases of disclaimers and memoranda of alterations, of such fees as may be appointed by the Lord Chancellor and Master of the Rolls as the fee, to be paid on the hearing of such oppositions, and in the case of disclaimers and memoranda of alterations respectively, or of such reasonable sums for office or other copies of documents in the office of the commissioners, as the commissioners may from time to time appoint to be paid for such copies, and the Lord Chancellor and Master of the Rolls, and the commissioners, are hereby respectively authorised and empowered to appoint the fees to be so paid in respect of such oppositions, disclaimers, and memoranda of alterations respectively, and for such office or other copies.

48. Fees and salaries of officers.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury from time to time to allow such fees to the law officers and their clerks (for duties under this Act in respect of which fees may not be payable to them under the provisions lastly hereinbefore contained) as the Lord Chancellor and Master of the Rolls may from time to time appoint, and to allow such salaries and payments to any clerks and officers to be appointed under this Act, and such additional salaries and payments to any other clerks and officers in respect of any additional duties imposed on them by this Act, as the said Commissioners of the Treasury may think fit.

49. Sums for defraying salaries and expenses under this Act to be paid out of moneys to be provided by Parliament.—It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to allow from time to time the necessary sums for providing offices under this Act, and for the fees, salaries, and payments allowed by them as aforesaid, and for defraying the current and incidental expenses of such office or offices; and the sums to be so allowed shall be paid out of such moneys as may be provided by Parliament for that purpose.

50. Power to Treasury to grant compensation to persons affected by this Act.—And whereas divers persons by virtue of their offices or appointments are entitled to fees or charges payable in respect of letters patent as heretofore granted within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or have and derive in respect of such letters patent, or the procedure for the granting thereof, fees or other emoluments or advantages:

It shall be lawful for the said Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to any such persons who may sustain any loss of fees, emoluments, or advantages by reason of the passing of this Act, such compensation as, having regard to the tenure and nature of their respective offices and appointments, such commissioners deem just and proper to be awarded; and all such compensations shall be paid out of such moneys as may be provided by Parliament for that purpose: provided always, that in case any person to whom any yearly sum by way of compensation shall be awarded and paid shall, after the passing of this Act, be appointed to any office or place of emolument under the provisions of this Act, or in the public service, then and in every such case the amount of such yearly sum shall in every year be diminished by so much as the emoluments of such person for such year from such office or place shall amount to, and provision in that behalf shall be made in the award to him of such yearly sum.

51. Account of salaries, fees, and compensation allowances to be laid before Parliament.—An account of all salaries, fees, allowances, sums, and compensations to be appointed, allowed, or granted under this Act shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so appointed, allowed, or granted respectively, be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, then within fourteen days after the next meeting of Parliament.

52. Not to extend to patents applied for before commencement of Act.—Letters patent may be granted in respect of applications made before the commencement of this Act, in like manner and subject to the same provisions as if this Act had not been passed.

53. As to letters patent granted before commencement of this Act for England, Scotland, or Ireland.—Where letters patent for England or Scotland or Ireland have been granted before the commencement of this Act, or are in respect of any application made before the commencement of this Act hereafter granted for any invention, letters patent for England or Scotland or Ireland may be granted for such invention in like manner as if this Act had not been passed: provided always, that in lieu of all the fees or payments and stamp-duties now payable in respect of such letters patent, or in or about obtaining a grant thereof, there shall be paid in respect of such letters patent for England or Scotland or Ireland on the sealing of such respective letters patent a sum equal to one-third part of the fees and stamp-duties which would be payable according to the schedule to this Act in respect of letters patent issued for the United Kingdom under this Act, on or previously to the sealing of such letters patent; and at or before the expiration of the third year and the seventh year respectively of the term granted by such letters patent for England or Scotland or Ireland, sums equal to one-third part of the fees and stamp-duties payable at the expiration of the third year and the seventh year respectively of the term granted by letters patent issued for the United Kingdom under this Act; and the condition of such letters patent for England or Scotland or Ireland shall be varied accordingly; and such fees shall be paid to such persons as the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall appoint, and shall be carried to and form part of the said Consolidated Fund.

54. Forms in schedule may be used.—The several forms in the schedule to this Act may be used for and in respect of the several matters therein mentioned, and the commissioners may, where they think fit, vary such forms as occasion may require, and cause to be printed and circulated such other forms as they may think fit to be used for the purposes of this Act.

55. Interpretation of terms.—In the construction of this Act the following expressions shall have the meanings hereby assigned to them, unless such meanings be repugnant to or inconsistent with the context (that is to say);

The expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal:

The expression "The Commissioners" shall mean the commissioners for the time being acting in execution of this Act:

The expression "Law Officer" shall mean her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General for the time being for England, or the Lord Advocate, or her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the time being for Scotland, or her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General for the time being for Ireland:

The expression "Invention" shall mean any manner of new manufacture the subject of letters patent and grant of privilege within the meaning of the Act of the twenty-first year of the reign of King James the First, chapter three:

The Expressions "Petition," "Declaration," "Provisional specification," "Warrant," and "Letters patent" respectively, shall mean instruments in the form and to the effect in the schedule hereto annexed, subject to such alterations as may from time to time be made therein under the powers and provisions of this Act.

56. Short Title.—In citing this Act in other Acts of Parliament, instruments, and proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852."

57. Commencement of Act.—This Act shall commence and take effect from the first day of October, One thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

Letters Patent.

Victoria, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith; to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas hath by his petition humbly represented unto us that he is in possession of an invention for which the petitioner conceives will be of great public utility; that he is the true and first inventor thereof; and that the same is not in use by any other person or persons, to the best of his knowledge and belief: the petitioner therefore most humbled prayed that we would be graciously pleased to grant unto him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, our royal letters patent for the sole use, benefit, and advantage of his said invention within our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man [colonies to be mentioned, if any], for the term of fourteen years, pursuant to the statutes in that case made and provided:

[And whereas the said hath particularly described and ascertained the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed, by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, and has caused the same to be duly filed in ;]

And we, being willing to give encouragement to all arts and inventions which may be for the public good, are graciously pleased to condescend to the petitioner's request: know, ye, therefore, that we, of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and more motion, have given and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant unto the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, our especial licence, full power, sole privilege, and authority that he the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them, by himself and themselves, or by his and their deputy ordeputies, servants or agents, or such others as he the said , his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall at any time agree with, and no others, from time to time and at all times hereafter during the term of years herein expressed, shall and lawfully may make, use, exercise, and vend his said invention within our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man, in such manner as to him the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, or any of them, shall in his or their discretion seem meet; and that he the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall and lawfully may have and enjoy the whole profit, benefit, commodity and advantage from time to time coming, growing, accruing, and arising by reason of the said invention, for and during the term of years herein mentioned; to have, hold, exercise, and enjoy the said licenses, powers, privileges, and advantages hereinbefore granted or mentioned to be granted unto the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, for and during and unto the full end and term of fourteen years from the day of , A.D. next and immediately ensuing, according to the statute in such case made and provided; and to the end that he, the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them, may have and enjoy the full benefit and the sole use and exercise of the said invention, according to our gracious intention hereinbefore declared, we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, require and strictly command all and every person and persons, bodies politic and corporate, and all other our subjects whatsoever, of what estate, quality, degree, name, or condition soever they be, within our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man [colonies to be mentioned, if any], that neither they nor any of them, at any time during the continuance of the said term of fourteen years hereby granted, either directly or indirectly to make, use, or put in practice the said invention, or any part of the same, so attained unto by the said as aforesaid, nor in anywise counterfeit, imitate, or resemble the same, nor shall make or cause to be made any addition thereunto or subtraction from the same, whereby to pretend himself or themselves the inventor or inventors, devisor, or devisors thereof, without the consent, licence, or agreement of the said , his executors, administrators, or assigns, in writing under his or their hands and seals first had and obtained in that behalf, upon such pains and penalties as can or may be justly inflicted on such offenders for their contempt of this our royal command, and further to be answerable to the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, according to law, for his and their damages thereby occasioned: and moreover we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, will and command all and singular the justices of the peace, mayors, sheriffs, bailiffs, constables, headboroughs, and all other officers and ministers whatsoever of us, our heirs and successors, for the time being, that they or any of them do not nor shall at any time during the said term hereby granted in anywise molest, trouble, or hinder the said , his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any of them, or his or their deputies, servants, or agents, in or about the due and lawful use or exercise of the aforesaid invention, or anything relating thereto: provided always, and these our letters patent are and shall be upon this condition, that if at any time during the said term hereby granted it shall be made appear to us, our heirs or successors, or any six or more of our or their Privy Council, that this our grant is contrary to law, or prejudicial or inconvenient to our subjects in general, or that the said invention is not a new invention as to the public use and exercise thereof, or that the said is not the true and first inventor thereof within this realm as aforesaid, these our letters patent shall forthwith cease, determine, and be utterly void to all intents and purposes, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding: provided also, that these our letters patent, or anything herein contained, shall not extend or be construed to extend to give privilege unto the said , his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any of them, to use or imitate any invention or work whatsoever which hath heretofore been found out or invented by any other of our subjects whatsoever, and publicly used or exercised, unto whom like letters patent or privileges have been already granted for the sole use, exercise, and benefit thereof, it being our will and pleasure that the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, and all and every other person and persons to whom like letters patent or privileges have been already granted as aforesaid, shall distinctly use and practise their several inventions by them invented and found out, according to the true, intent and meaning of the same respective letters patent and of these presents: provided likewise nevertheless, and these our letters patent are upon this express condition, [that if the said shall not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of his said inventions and in what manner the same is to be performed, by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, and cause the same to be filed in within calendar months next and immediately after the date of these our letters patent;] [and also if the said instrument in writing filed as aforesaid does not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said invention, and what manner the same is to be performed;] and also if the said his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall not pay or cause to be paid at the office of our Commissioners of Patents for Inventions the sums following, that is to say, the sum of pounds on or before the day of A.D. , and the stamp duty payable in respect of the certificate of such payment, and the sum of pounds on or before the day of A.D. and the stamp duty payable in respect of the certificate of such payment; and also if the said his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall not supply or cause to be supplied for our service all such articles of the said invention as he or they shall be required to supply by the officers or commissioners administering the department of our service for the use of which the same shall be required, in such manner, at such times, and at and upon such reasonable prices and terms as shall be settled for that purpose by the said officers or commissioners requiring the same; that then and in any of the said cases these our letters patent, and all liberties and advantages whatsoever hereby granted, shall utterly cease, determine, and become void, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding: provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the granting of licenses in such manner and for such considerations as they may by law be granted; and lastly, we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, grant unto the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, that these our letters patent, or the filing thereof, shall be in and by all things good, firm, valid, sufficient, and effectual in the law according to the true intent and meaning thereof, and shall be taken, construed, and adjudged in the most favourable and beneficial sense for the best advantage of the said , his executors, administrators, and assigns, as well in all our Courts of Record as elsewhere, and by all and singular the officers and ministers whatsoever of us, our heirs and successors, in our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man [colonies to be mentioned, if any] and amongst all and every the subjects of us, our heirs and successors, whatsoever and wheresoever, notwithstanding the not full and certain describing the nature or quality of the said invention, or of the materials thereunto conducing and belonging. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent, this day of , A.D. , and to be sealed and bear date as of the said day of , A.D. , in the year of our reign.

Specification.

To all to whom these presents shall come;

I, of send greeting:

Whereas her most excellent Majesty Queen Victoria, by her letters patent bearing date the day of A.D. , in the year of her reign, did for herself, her heirs and successors, give and grant unto me, the said her special licence that I, the said , my executors, administrators, and assigns, or such others as I, the said , my executors, administrators, and assigns, should at any time agree with, and no others, from time to time and at all times thereafter during the term therein expressed, should and lawfully might make, use, exercise, and vend, within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man [colonies to be mentioned, if any], an invention for [insert title as in letters patent] upon the condition (amongst others) that I, the said , by an instrument in writing under my hand and seal, should particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed, and cause the same to be filed in within calendar months next and immediately after the date of the said letters patent: now know ye, that I, the said , do hereby declare the nature of my said invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed, to be particularly described and ascertained in and by the following statement; (that is to say), [describe the invention].

In witness whereof I, the said A.B. have hereto-fore set my hand and seal, this day of A.D. A. B.

THE MAGISTRATE,
AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Answers to Queries.

DRUNKENNESS, 21 JAC. 1, c. 7.

In answer to a query by "H. P." concerning the legality of certain costs being imposed on a conviction for drunkenness, your correspondent "C. H." at p. 55 of 17 Law T. refers to 18 Geo. 3, c. 19, as the existing and ruling law, but I presume he is unaware of that Act having been repealed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 13, s. 36, which, he says, is "hardly applicable" to the case. Now, if this is the fact, there is no remedy for costs; therefore, the opinions of the Profession should be sought on the point.

My own conclusion is the same as that of "C. H." but is drawn from rather contradictory reasons.

Sec. 22, c. 43, 11 & 12 Vict. directs that in cases where justices are authorised to issue warrants of distress to levy penalties, &c. and where no further remedy is provided, justices may commit; and sec. 18 directs that the costs shall be recoverable in the same manner as any penalty adjudged to be paid by the conviction. If imprisonment in the stocks under 21 Jac. 1, c. 7, is a further remedy to obtain payment of costs, the 11 & 12 Vict. is certainly inapplicable, because that Act only provides for the recovery of costs in cases where no remedy is provided beyond distress.

I submit, however, that imprisonment in the stocks is not a further remedy, but is alternative. Therefore, if a justice convict a party, and adjudge the penalty to be recovered by distress, and no distress be found, the further remedy is by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 22. Imprisonment in the stocks is the remedy where "the offender be not able to pay," and he is imprisoned immediately; so I submit that it is not a further remedy, and that in default of distress where the week's time is given for payment, the justice may proceed to commitment for the penalty under the recent Act, and to commitment for costs under its 18th sec. G. C. Rice.

THE MILITIA.

GOVERNMENT PROSECUTION.

The attention of her Majesty's Government has been drawn to the fact, that for some time past numerous handbills have been circulated, especially in the rural towns and districts, of an "anti-militia" character, and tending to prevent the carrying out of the law in respect to voluntary enlistment. Some of the placards were said to emanate from the Peace Society, and were headed "Flogging in the Militia." The Government have taken the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the subject, and have determined to make the offence a matter for government prosecution. The following letter to Colonel Berne, of the 34th Light Infantry, has led to prosecutions in Suffolk:—

"Whitehall, 7th October, 1852.

"Sir,—I am directed by Mr. Secretary Walpole to inform you that he has under his consideration the two placards intended to dissuade men from volunteering for the militia, which accompanied your letter of the 4th ultimo, and he is advised that they are libellous and that consequently their publication is an indictable offence. If magistrates should think it their duty to hold a person accused of such publication to bail to answer the charge at the assizes, Mr. Walpole will instruct the solicitor to the Treasury to conduct the prosecution.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"D. W. Jolliffe."

Prosecutions have already been taken in Bucks, Herts, and Suffolk, and parties held to bail.

The Militia Pay Act.—It is provided by the Militia Pay Act, which is to continue in force until the 1st of September next, that the officers and non-commissioned officers, drummers, and private men of the regular militia shall, for the period or periods during which they shall be called out for the purpose of exercise or training, be entitled to the same pay and allowances as the officers, non-commissioned officers, drummers, and private men of the militia when embodied.

Billeting the Militia.—There is a provision in the New Militia Act to the effect that the militia may be billeted in beerhouses in which soldiers may be billeted.

The Law relating to Friendly Societies.—A Parliamentary blue-book has just been printed, containing the report and evidence given before a select committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the operation of the law relating to friendly societies. It appears that eighty-three assurance societies had complained of certain friendly societies being in reality trading life assurance companies. Mr. Tidd Pratt, the registrar, stated in his evidence that he is the sole depository of all the various mass of miscellaneous matter which in the last twenty years had been poured in from about 10,000 societies, and he suggested that a board should be formed for the purpose of superintending the management of friendly societies, and of affording advice and information when required. The committee directs the attention of the House to the evidence of Sir Alexander Spearman, the Controller of the National Debt Office, shewing that on the investments made with the office the interest payable is higher than that which the Government receives. The capital belonging to friendly societies invested with the Commissioners of the National Debt is 2,393,000*l.* at an interest part of 4*l.* 11s. 3d. and part of 3*l.* 16s. whereas the average rate of interest realised during the last twelve years has been only 3*l.* 4s. 9d. and that the total loss, if the whole were sold and paid off at the present price of stocks, would be 127,000*l.*

New Convict Settlement.—Her Majesty's Government have resolved to make Freemantle, in Western Australia, a convict settlement, and the first batch, consisting of 250, will be despatched early in the ensuing month of October. They will consist chiefly of persons who have served three years' probation in the Dartmoor and Pentonville convict prisons, and whose conduct there has entitled them to favourable consideration. Each convict will, on landing, receive a ticket of leave, strictly confining him to the colony of Western Australia. A company of enrolled Chelsea pensioners go out as a convict guard; their wives and children go with them, and they will be located in the country as military colonists.

County Rates.—By a provision in the new County Rates Act it is enacted that all business relating to the assessment and applications of county rates must be transacted publicly and in open court, and no order is to be binding unless made publicly and in open court.

Poor-Law Commissioners.—The Treasury has just sanctioned the appointment of seven permanent Poor-law inspectors, at a salary of 500*l.* a-year, with allowances. It is understood that these appointments are to be made from the eleven Poor-law inspectors who were employed in the service temporarily, and whose warrants will expire on the 31st instant. Mr. Senior is now chairman of the Poor-law Board, but his late appointment has not been filled up, in order that room may be made for several minor situations.—Observer.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

WINDING UP.

It had been long a moot point with those engaged in winding up, whether a call could be made merely to pay costs, where there were no liabilities and no debts proved. The Lord Chancellor has decided this in the affirmative, in Ex parte Reece, 20 Law T. Rep. 17. There the company had been dissolved, and 15s. per share returned. But some persons, probably with an eye to costs, not content with this, placed it under the Winding-up Act. No debts were proved, but that which was the evident purpose of the proceeding was obtained—costs were incurred to a considerable amount. The Master made an equal call upon all the contributories to meet them. He was held to have rightly done so, and that those who had received the 15s. back were equally liable with the rest. But it was also said, that they were not liable to refund the money so received, because it was paid to them in consideration of the cancellation of their shares. His Lordship repeated in this judgment his remark, that the House of Lords was not bound to follow its own erroneous decisions in a case compounded of law and fact. He added, in his own expressive manner, that which we have so often urged here—and which we made the foundation of the argument upon which we maintained those views of the law of winding up that have now been ultimately affirmed by the highest tribunals—but for which we so long contended, almost alone, against all the other writers on the subject, and against the opinion of the whole Bar. Lord St. Leonards said, "As to the Winding-up Acts, they do not alter legal or equitable liabilities. They do not impose liabilities, legal or equitable, which did not exist before." We recommend the careful perusal of this able judgment to every reader who has taken any interest in this branch of the law.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

The liability of trustees is a subject that might well engage the attention of the Law Reformers. As it is, no prudent man would accept the office of trustee; and in practice great difficulty is experienced in procuring friends who will undertake duties that are both burdensome and unpaid. The remedy is obvious. Let the law give to all acting trustees a small commission upon the property that passes through their hands, as a remuneration for their labour and risk. This would be but just and reasonable, and it would remove the difficulty that now makes the acceptance of a trusteeship a favour that one man has scarcely a right to ask of another. Of late the Courts appear to have been leaning strongly against trustees, as our readers who have followed these weekly summaries of the decided law, must have observed. Lord St. Leonard's, however, does not appear to be inclined further to extend their liabilities, for in Adey v. Arnold, 20 Law T. Rep. 17, he held, upon appeal, that a liability arising out of a breach of trust was a simple contract debt and not a specialty.

An interesting case of a disputed claim to the benefit of a fire assurance policy, is that of Garden v. Ingram, 20 Law T. Rep. 17. A lessee under covenant insured leaseholds against fire in the joint names of himself and the lessor. He then mortgaged the premises by demise, and the mortgagee sold them under a power of sale. They were subsequently damaged by fire, and the lessee refused to join the lessors in a receipt to the insurance office to enable the mortgagee to recover the money due on the policy, claiming a lien on the policy for the money he had expended in rebuilding. The mortgagee and his purchaser then filed a claim, and it was held that the lessee had no lien on the policy as mortgagor, and that he was bound to sign the receipt. The Lord Chancellor observed that "it had been decided that if a tenant for life insures, the remainder-man is entitled to the benefit of the policy. The policy in this case was intended as an indemnity to the lessor, and was effected in the joint names of the lessor and lessee, because the former had an interest in it; any advantage under it would accrue to his benefit as landlord."

Of the many reported cases on the construction of wills, but few can be made intelligible in a summary. Plowden v. Hyde, 20 Law T. Rep. 18, is, however, of some importance, for it was a decision of the Court of Appeal upon a point that might occur in other wills. A. contracted for the purchase of an estate, and then made his will, devising it on certain trusts. Subsequently he took a conveyance of the estate to the usual uses to bar dower. Was the devise revoked? It was held to be so. It should be observed, that this was under the operation of the old law. The new Wills Act has altered the law in this respect, so that the case now under notice is an authority only as respects wills made before the new Act.

In the same case there was another point as to the effect of a mortgage in revoking a devise. After the estate had been conveyed to A. he mortgaged it, and the proviso for redemption was that it should be reconveyed to him. After the mortgage he made his will, devising the estate. Subsequently he paid off the mortgage, and took a reconveyance of the estate. Was the devise revoked by the reconveyance? It was held not to be so. The judgments of the Lords Justices in this case will reward perusal.

In Coulthurst v. Carter, 20 Law T. Rep. 20, which was also on the construction of a will, the Master of the Rolls determined a point of law which has been concisely stated by the learned reporter in his head-note,—that the children of a deceased parent, who formed one of a class, cannot take by substitution when their parent could not have taken according to the terms of the will.

In Gray v. Gray, 20 Law T. Rep. 23, the question was, what constitutes a binding trust; and the rule was thus laid down by Vice-Chancellor Kindersley:—"The rule with regard to the question whether a binding trust is constituted is this—if the founder of the trust has not only distinctly expressed the purpose of his act, but had done all that is necessary to complete the design expressed, the Court holds the trust completely imposed. But, however clear the intention, still, if nothing is done by the party, whether from incapacity or indisposition to do it, the Court will say it cannot decree the performance of the intended trust."

I beg to refer T. M. to the exemption from stamp duties in the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32, s. 9, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 37. If the proceedings are in strict conformity with the statutes in all respects, my impression is, that your transfer to new trustees does not require a stamp. Transfers of shares are therein particularly mentioned as not being subject or liable to, or charged with, any duty or duties whatsoever. J. G.

Compulsory Enfranchisement of Copyholds.—The new Copyhold Act does not provide for the compulsory enfranchisement of copyholds until after the 1st of July next. At any time after the next admittance to lands on or after the 1st of July, 1853, either party, the lord or tenant, may desire the lands to be enfranchised in the manner provided by the Act.

Incumbered Estates Commission.—An extensive sale, by order of the commissioners, took place in Belfast on Friday and Saturday, of ground-rents arising from several plots of ground, dwelling-houses, and premises, held in fee simple, in Belfast, in the matter of the estate of Mr. Alan Gardner Brown and Mr. Charles Grainger, owners and petitioners. The entire property produces a clear annual income of about 1,840*l.* 17s. The property was put up in 94 lots, a few of which were sold by private contract. The amount realised by the sale was—by private sale, 2,350*l.*; by auction, 30,450*l.*; gross amount, 32,800*l.* for an annual income of 1,940*l.* 17s.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

We are not informed whether the committee of the Judges have yet made any progress in the framing of the Table of Costs in the County Courts. They have received a vast number of communications upon the subject, the examination of which will of necessity occupy some considerable time. Possibly they may find that in the multitude of counsellors there is not wisdom.

One Insolvency case was reported last week from Dublin. In Re Turner, 20 Law T. Rep. 24, it was held that where an insolvent was guilty of great extravagance, and had contracted debts without reasonable expectation of paying them, the indorsees of his bills might oppose, even though they had no personal dealings with him. In the same case a friendly bill of sale, designed to protect property from creditors, was deemed to be a making away with it.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

VI. CASES ON THE QUESTION OF SPLITTING DEMANDS.

There is nothing more important in the law and practice of the County Courts than the establishment of a correct and definite principle as to what plaints may and what plaints may not be entertained in these courts. The words of the statute are, indeed, sufficiently clear to exclude certain specified causes of action from being tried there; but much doubt has existed as to whether others come within their jurisdiction owing to the particular nature of these actions, and to which we lately adverted when considering the decisions upon the question of jurisdiction. The criterion of value has been adopted as the main one in determining the cases to be entertained by the Superior Courts and the County Courts respectively. But even this has not been found sufficiently definite in all cases to settle the point, inasmuch as it has been attempted, by dividing demands of a large amount and triable only in the Superior Courts, into several smaller separate demands, to bring them within the jurisdiction of the County Courts. That such a course is contrary both to the principle and the spirit and intention of the County Courts Act, needs not here be pointed out. It is calculated, moreover, to bring within the operation of these courts a class of transactions over which it was never intended that they should have a jurisdiction; and by a fictitious division into several of one cause of action, matters are rendered subject to the County Courts over which the Legislature intended that the Superior Courts, and they alone, should continue to exercise a control.

We propose here to take a brief review of the leading and recent decisions on this subject which have been pronounced by the Superior Courts, in which the principle we here maintain has been distinctly and fully recognised, and which is thus set forth in 19 Hen. 6, c. 54:—"If there be one entire contract above 40*s.* and a man sues for it in a court baron, severing it into divers small sums under 40*s.* a prohibition shall be granted, because this is done to defraud the court of the king."

The first case to which we shall draw the reader's attention, is one which was decided long before the establishment of the present County Courts, but in which the principle of splitting one demand into several, came distinctly under the notice of the Court. It is that of Rex v. The Sheriff of Herefordshire, in a cause of Derby v. Clarke, 1 B. & Ald. 672. A. became indebted to B. in a sum not exceeding 40*s.* for the carriage of a parcel of goods; and in a month afterwards incurred another debt to B. not exceeding 40*s.* for the carriage of a second parcel. A. brought two actions in the County Court for the respective debts. It was held that the causes of action were distinct, and that A. was entitled to sue separately for each demand; and the Court of K. B. refused a prohibition. Lord Tenterden, C.J. observed that, in this case, the two items were perfectly distinct debts, the one having no connection with the other.

In Neale v. Ellis, 1 Dowl. & L. 163, which arose under the Brighton Court of Requests Act, 3 Vict. c. 10, s. 24, Coleridge, J. held, that a plaintiff who had demands for the price of a horse, for goods sold and delivered, and for rent, was entitled, after having sued for and recovered 15*l.* in respect of the horse by plaint in the County Court, to maintain his action in the Superior Court for the residue of his claim. In this case there are numerous contracts, each implied from a different state of facts, which therefore must, for the purposes of this argument, be treated as express contracts, made at different times, and under different circumstances. It is unnecessary here to point out how different this is from the case of one contract, though containing several distinct but continuous items, being divided into several demands, for the purpose of bringing them each within the jurisdiction of a County Court.

The 63rd section of the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, enacts that "it shall not be lawful for any plaintiff to divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said courts; but any plaintiff, having cause of action for more than 20*l.* for which a plaint might be entered under this Act, if not more than 20*l.* may abandon the excess," &c.

The case which follows was determined in Easter Term, 1848, subsequent to the passing of the County Courts Act. In this case, it was held that the term "cause of action," does not mean a cause of action in one single entire contract, but should be interpreted "cause of one action." In an action on a tradesman's bill, although each item of goods supplied, or work done, constitutes a separate contract, so that after the stipulated price becomes due, the tradesman could sue for one item; yet the understanding is that it shall be united with other items to form one entire demand. It was held, therefore, that the 63rd section applies to the case of a tradesman's bill in which one item is connected with another in this sense, that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item, if not paid, shall be united with another, and form one entire demand. (Grimsby v. Ackroyd, 1 Cox and Mac. 79.) It seems, therefore, that the term "cause of action," will not extend to cover all contracts executed, however dissimilar in character, which, according to modern practice, could be included in one indebitatus count. But it appears doubtful whether the Superior Courts could interfere by prohibition where the total sum due, being under 20*l.* was wholly within the jurisdiction of the County Court, although several plaints have been brought upon the several items. Pollock, C.B. observed in this case, while delivering the judgment of the Court, that the present case did not depend upon any authority derived from reported cases, but upon the construction of the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. By the 58th section, the County Court has jurisdiction in all pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.* whether on a balance of account or otherwise. That clause had probably been introduced in consequence of the provision in some of the Courts of Requests Acts, that the Act should not extend to any debt for the balance of an account originally exceeding a given sum, as in Porter v. Philpot, 14 East, 345. Be that as it may, it cannot be doubted that the law was made to give jurisdiction where the debt claimed consisted of various items, together originally not exceeding 20*l.* at the time of the suit, or which had been reduced to that amount by payment or set off of other sums. They had next to consider the effect of the 63rd section, and the whole question is as to the meaning of the term "cause of action" in that section. It is provided that it shall not be lawful to divide any cause of action for the purpose of bringing two or more suits in any of the said courts; but any plaintiff having "cause of action" for more than 20*l.* for which a plaint might be entered under this Act, if not for more than 20*l.* may abandon the excess, and therefore the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover to an amount not exceeding 20*l.* and the judgment of the Court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly. What, then, is the construction of the words "cause of action?" The term "debt," or "damage," here is not used as it is in the passage already cited from 4 Inst. 266, but the more extensive term adopted is "cause of action." This term, "cause of action," did not necessarily mean a "cause of action," or one single contract, for there may be one cause of action on several debts contracted at different times, and in by far the greater number of cases in count in indebitatus assumpsit, or debt, is founded on many distinct contracts, as was pointed out in the case of Hesketh v. Fawcett, 11 M. & W. 360, and one count might be considered as one cause of action. To provide that one cause of action, or one entire contract, should not be divided, would be unnecessary and surplusage; and although the argument that a clause in an Act of Parliament, if understood in one sense would be inoperative, and in another sense would be operative, is not by any means conclusive, because it could not but be admitted that clauses are often introduced into an Act of Parliament ex abundanti cautelâ, yet it is of some weight, and the probability was, that the Legislature, in enacting that a "cause of action" should not be divisible, meant a "cause of action" which, but for that enactment, would be divisible. And when it is considered to what abuses the narrower construction of this term might lead (which is strongly exemplified in the present case, in which 208 actions have been commenced, and 3,000 might have been brought), we think we may safely conclude that the term "cause of action" ought to be interpreted "cause of one action," and not be limited to an action on "one separate contract." But, on the other hand, if the term is to comprise all sums that might be included in one count, as debt for work and labour, for goods sold, and for occupation, which, though totally unconnected with each other, might be included in one indebitatus count, they would be precluded from being divided under this particular clause, and if indivisible, and the creditor brought an action for only one part, he would virtually abandon all claim to the remainder by the operation of the latter part of the 63rd section. A great inconvenience would follow if the term "cause of action" were interpreted to mean "cause of action," on one separate contract; and also if the construction were to be, that it was intended to cover all contracts executed, however dissimilar in character, that could be included in one indebitatus count, which, according to the modern practice, may comprise any number of separate unconnected contracts, whenever made, each having ended in a debt before the commencement of the suit. As some extension must be given to the former construction, some restriction must be put on the latter; and we think we ought to hold that the 63rd clause does apply to the former cases. Whether it applied to all debts which could be comprised in one description, in one count, as for goods sold or not, the Court need not in the present instance determine; but, at all events, to the case of tradesmen's bills, in which one item is connected with another in this sense, that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item, if not paid, shall be united with another, and form one entire demand. If that demand exceeds 20*l.* it would, of course, cease to be within the jurisdiction of the County Court; and therefore we are of opinion, on the facts disclosed in the affidavits before us, that all the debts claimed fall within that description—the total greatly exceeding 20*l.*—and that they ought not to have been separated into different suits. Whether if the total had only amounted to 20*l.* and the items then were separated and sued for by separate plaints—the total being within the jurisdiction of the County Courts, which could then have given adequate relief—the suits could have been prohibited, was a question which need not, in the present instance, be discussed. But when the total exceeds that amount, and justice cannot be done in the County Court, we are of opinion that the County Court has no jurisdiction.

Where a plaintiff had split his demand, and obtained judgment in two actions for the same "cause of action," under the above decision in Grimsby v. Ackroyd, and it appeared from the particulars of the demand annexed that two plaints had been entered on the same day, by the same plaintiff, against the same defendant, for goods sold and delivered, it was held that this was a sufficient defect apparent upon the face of the proceedings to enable this Court to issue a prohibition against proceeding in the second action. (Acworth and Another v. Dowsett, 1 Cox & Mac. 118.)

In the following case a plaintiff had brought two actions in the County Court against the same defendant—one of tort, for an assault; and the other on contract for the amount of a surgeon's bill incurred by reason of the assault. It was held that these were distinct causes of action, and might be separately sued for in the County Court. (Hartley v. Ayurst, 1 Cox & Mac. 109.)

The plaintiff brought two actions in the County Court against the defendant, one for 19*l.* 8s. 1d. rent in arrear, the other for 9*l.* 14s. 2d. for double value for holding over after notice to quit, under stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 68, s. 1. It was held, that these were distinct "causes of action," within the meaning of that term in the County Courts Act, and that they might be made the subjects of separate plaints. (Wickham v. Lee, 1 Cox & Mac. 119.)

The defendant, being indebted to the plaintiffs in a sum exceeding 20*l.* they entered a plaint in the County Court for and recovered 19*l.* 9s. 6d. The plaintiffs afterwards sued for the balance in the Superior Courts, the declaration containing counts for money lent, goods sold, and account stated. The defendant pleaded to the whole declaration the former County Court judgment, and that the plaintiffs had cause of action for the 19*l.* 9s. 6d. and all money in the declaration for which a plaint could, if the whole had been under 20*l.* have been entered at the time of so entering it for the 19*l.* 9s. 6d. It was held that it should have averred the causes of action in the County Court to be the same as those for which the action was brought in the Superior Court; and that "cause of action" in the 63rd section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, does not include all that may be inserted in an indebitatus count. (Gregory and Another v. Chidley, 1 Cox & Mac. 145.)

In the following case the plaintiff, who was a tailor residing at Pentonville, within the jurisdiction of the Clerkenwell County Court, sued the defendant for the amount of a bill sent in, containing several items for clothes supplied, repaired, and altered. The defendant resided at Hammersmith, within the jurisdiction of the Brompton County Court, and carried on his business at the Burlington-arcade; and with regard to one, the order was given, the work done, and the goods delivered at the plaintiff's residence. It was held, on motion to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs, that the whole bill formed one cause of action; that the cause of action did not wholly occur within the jurisdiction of the County Court, either of Brompton or Middlesex, being put within that of Clerkenwell; but that, as one item arose within the jurisdiction of a County Court, the cause of action was to be considered as arising in some material point within the jurisdiction of a County Court, under the 128th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95; and that the action ought not to have been brought in the Superior Court. (Wood v. Perry, 18 L.J. 161, Ex.)

The plaintiff sued out two plaints in a County Court. The particulars of the first exceeded 20*l.* for work and labour and goods sold and obtained, and purported to give credit for a set-off, shewing a balance under 20*l.* The particulars of the second plaint were items for moneys lent, and interest, not exceeding in the whole 20*l.* Some of the items in the two plaints were contemporaneous but there were no items in any other way connected. Both plaints were heard, and the plaintiff recovered certain amounts in respect thereof. The affidavits in support of a motion for writs of prohibition, on the grounds that the first plaint had been reduced below 20*l.* by a set-off, and that the two plaints constituted but one entire cause of action, shewed that these objections were raised at the hearing, and that there had never been any account stated in which it had been agreed that the set-off should be allowed; but did not shew that the plaintiff, at the hearing of the first plaint, proved more than 20*l.* to be due, or that there had not been at the hearing an arrangement between the parties to allow the set-off. It was held, that the particulars of the two plaints did not form one cause of action, within the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 63, and that this was not a case of splitting demands. (Kimpton v. Willey, 1 Cox & Mac. 351.)

Where some items of an account are for goods sold, and others for money lent, the plaintiff may bring two separate plaints in the County Court; the items being of a different character, and not constituting one "cause of action," within the meaning of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 63. (Bromskill v. Powell, 19 L. J. 362, Ex.) And it is not a dividing of the cause of action, within sec. 63, to levy one plaint for rent of premises, and another, under stat. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, to recover double value for holding the same premises after expiration of a notice to quit. An action for double value lies in the Courts established under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95. (Wickham v. Lee, 12 Q. B. 521; 18 L. J. 21, Q. B.)

In each of these cases, though differing one from another, both with regard to the nature of the transaction which formed the subject of them, and the decision which was pronounced, the principle which we have above maintained was established. In Neale v. Ellis the items were held to be distinct and independent, and as such contrasted with the case of "one contract, though containing several distinct but continuous items, being divided into several demands." In Grimsby v. Ackroyd it was distinctly laid down that "in the case of tradesmen's bills, in which one item is connected with another in this sense, that the dealing is not to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item if not paid, shall be united with another, and form one entire demand, such demand, if it exceeds 20*l.* ceases to be within the jurisdiction of the County Court." And in Wood v. Perry it was also decided, with regard to the tradesman's bill in question, which contained numerous items, that "the whole bill formed one cause of action." These cases, therefore, taken together at once set at rest this important point, and fully illustrate the principle on which the determination is made.

We shall next proceed to consider cases on the question of suing for excess, which are regulated by the latter part of the 63rd section of the County Courts Act; the former portion of which relates to the subject of this article.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As you are desirous of being furnished with some information with regard to the scale of charges which should be adopted in the County Courts, the two following cases, amongst many others which I have tried before Mr. Parry, may, perhaps, be good examples of the imperfect remuneration allowed to attorneys:—

COX v. WOODHAMS.

This was an action to recover damages for the negligence of the defendant in driving his gig against that of the plaintiff, and breaking his arm.

In this case my brief consisted of nine sheets closely written. It took me nearly two days to prepare it, as I had to see no less than ten witnesses, and it occupied my clerk a day to copy. I had a notice to produce to serve five miles off, to attend twice at the County Court, which is eight miles distant, and to pay my expenses of horse hire, &c. which amounted to 1*l.* The plaintiff got a verdict; and although the judge directed the clerk to allow full costs, my fee was of necessity taxed at 15s.

FOOTIT v. WITHERS.

This was a running down case. My brief consisted of four sheets. I had to attend a County Court twelve miles distant. One day was devoted to seeing the witnesses and preparing the brief. It took my clerk half a day to copy the case. The trial lasted several hours, and I was allowed 15s. as my fee.——

One word on the subject of employing counsel. It may be said in these cases, why did you not conduct them yourself, and thus save the trouble of preparing a brief? My answer is, first, that I have generally observed that the business of every County Court where attorneys only act as advocates is conducted with great looseness, a great deal of acrimony between the advocates, and still worse behaviour between the suitors; secondly, that the Bar have greater opportunities for acquiring legal knowledge than attorneys; are more in the habit of conducting cases; are independent of local influence; and from their independence form a wholesome check both upon the judge and the suitors.

In a conversation which I had with one of the best County Court judges before whom I have ever practised, and whom I believe to be one of the most honourable of men, he stated to me that he believed a well-ordered Bar was essential to the due administration of justice in County Courts, and that without it they would degenerate into mere bear-gardens. I attended a County Court once, where the attendance of a Bar is discouraged, and where the judge actually decided that although the defendant had pleaded a set-off he could not give evidence of it with a view to reduce the plaintiff's claim, but that it must form the subject of a fresh action; and on another occasion the same judge gravely stated that it was contrary to practice for the defendant's advocate to address the jury in a case in which he had submitted there was no evidence to go to the jury, and the judge had overruled the objection. Surely this shews the necessity of a Bar.

The following scale of fees in the above cases would, in my opinion, have been a fair remuneration to the practitioner, and would have worked no injustice to the suitors:—

You are at liberty to make any use of the foregoing letter, either by publishing it in the LAW TIMES, or by laying it before the judges appointed to revise the scale of fees in the County Courts. I am convinced that, if they would hear the evidence of some of the country practitioners, such information might be given as would enable them to prepare a scale of fees with which both the public and the Profession ought to be satisfied.

PAYMENT INTO COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the case against the Midland Railway Company, tried in the County Court at Leicester, in September last, and which is commented upon in an interesting article contained in your publication of the 9th inst. the payment into court was made only in respect and because of an unguarded offer of compromise, to the amount paid in, made before action brought by an agent of the defendant's to the plaintiff, and wholly irrespective of the obligation arising out of the contract between the plaintiff and the company.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

A LISTENER IN COURT.

Leicester, October 81, 1852.

NEW JUDGE OF THE MARYLEBONE COUNTY COURT.—Mr. Andrew Amos, who has for some years past presided as judge of the County Court for Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford, having resigned that appointment, the Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. John Leycester Adolphus, of the Northern Circuit, Solicitor-General of the county palatine of Durham, and the well-known reporter of the Court of Q. B. to be the new judge. His Honour sat on Thursday for the first time at the Marylebone County Court.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE same question that has been mooted in the County Courts has arisen in the Court of Bankruptcy. In both, a Solicitor is expressly permitted to appear as an Advocate, and in both a doubt has been expressed whether this extended to the privilege of holding a brief for another Solicitor. Lord CAMPBELL first laid it down in the Q. B. that this could not be done legally, for a Solicitor was responsible for the conduct of a case, and he could not delegate that responsibility to another. The statute has since prohibited it in the County Courts, and now Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE has decided that it cannot be done in the Bankruptcy Courts, assigning the same reasons as Lord CAMPBELL. "The Court," he said, "could not recognise the professional interference of any legal practitioner, not being a member of the Bar, except he were the Solicitor retained by the party himself.

The Courts at Westminster had long recognised the salutary rule that the Attorney or Solicitor directly retained in a case is to be deemed the responsible agent of the party until formally removed. . . . . Parties or their Solicitors were always at liberty to obtain the assistance of counsel in the conduct of proceedings in the Bankruptcy Courts, but it was in every way inconvenient for the duties of the Solicitor to be shifted from one practitioner to another in the mode at present attempted. If a Solicitor, who was properly retained by a bankrupt, chose himself to conduct the case on his own responsibility, without the assistance of Counsel, it was legally competent for him to do so; but he had no power, at a particular stage of the proceedings, to hand over at his pleasure the conduct of the case to another Solicitor. It had been settled by the highest authorities that such a course was illegal." (Re Bull, 20 Law T. Rep. 24.)

The two Chancery Reform Acts were given in extenso in our last. They have been already minutely described in a series of leading articles.

Queries.

The Courts at Durham are now assimilated in practice to the Superior Courts, by the 220th section of the Common Law Amendment Act, by which it is enacted that all its enactments "with respect to writs for the commencement of personal actions," shall apply to the Courts at Durham; refer to s. 2, and it appears that this enactment extended to Durham is, "that all personal actions brought in her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law, shall be commenced by writ of summons," in the form, &c. Semble, is not then the old jurisdiction in the County Palatine of Durham, of commencing actions by the ancient writ of pone per vadios, abolished from October 24th instant?

The Affidavit Office of the Court of Chancery.—From the 28th instant the duties of the Affidavit-office of the Court of Chancery are to be performed by the clerks of records and writs, and affidavits and affirmations may be sworn, affirmed, or attested upon honour, and declarations made before the clerk of enrolments for the time being, as occasion may require, for the better despatch of business; and the duties of clerk of reports are to be performed by such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor may appoint for that purpose. The salary or salaries for such duties must not exceed 400*l.* a year.

Chancery Stamps.—As already stated, documents stamped are to be used in the Court of Chancery instead of money payments. Further, it is declared by the same Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 87), that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct any of the officers of the Court of Chancery whose duties may be diminished in consequence of the substitution of stamps for money payments or otherwise to act under the directions of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, in the sale and distribution of all or any of the stamps to be used. Should it be inconvenient for any officer of the court to act, then the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may appoint a person or persons to sell the same, and to allow a discount or poundage. Any officer or other person guilty of fraud or wilful neglect in relation to stamps, whereby fees are lost or evaded, is to be liable to dismissal.

Stamps in the Court of Chancery.—The Lord Chancellor is empowered by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, to order fees to be received, not in money, but by means of stamps. The commissioners of the Inland Revenue are to provide stamps, and after order made, no document is to be received or used in the Court of Chancery unless stamped.

Chancery Proceedings.—Before the name of any person (it is enacted by one of the New Chancery Acts) shall be used in any suit to be instituted in the Court as next friend of any infant, married woman, or other party, or as a relator in any information, such person shall sign a written authority to the solicitor for that purpose, and such authority shall be filed with the bill, information, or claim.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

One case only, and that in Bankruptcy, is to be found in last week's reports, belonging to this department. In Re Bull, 20 Law T. Rep. 24, Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque held it to be "not only the right, but the duty, of the assignees to bring under the notice of the Court every circumstance which could influence the Court in the grant of the bankrupt's certificate. The assignees represented the whole body of creditors, and every particular creditor whose claim was not disputed; and in justice to the creditors whom they represented, they had no alternative but to oppose the granting of a certificate of conformity, if the bankrupt had committed any of the offences specified in the Act of Parliament. And, whether opposed or not, the bankrupt could not obtain his certificate if the offence charged were proved." This is an important decision.

Seamen's Advance Notes.—A case has been heard in the City Sheriff's Court, on that fertile source of dispute and litigation, the advance-note system, the discontinuance of which we have been so long recommending. It is certain that while it remains a part of our maritime code, so long will it be a source of annoyance to shipowners and their agents; and we are only surprised that any person can be found to advance money on such a questionable security. The whole amount at issue in the case in question was 2*l.* 10s. yet we find legal gentlemen (as we suppose) employed for plaintiff and defendants; the judgment was for the plaintiff, which probably cost him as much as the sum he gave for the advance note, if not more. It follows, therefore, that, where the purchase of these notes is a matter of such hazardous speculation, they must be bought at a very considerable discount against the sailor. The disputed point, too, was rather a curious one; namely, whether the Downs, Gravesend, or London was to be considered the port of departure of a vessel sailing from London. It certainly required some ingenuity to discover so nice a question for legal inquiry. However, the judge very properly decided that London is London, and not either Deal or Gravesend.—Shipping Gazette.

State of the Debtor's Prison, Newgate.—Appended to the numerical report made by Mr. Burdon, a governor of the debtors' prison in Whitecross-street, were the following observations:—"I beg most respectfully to report to your hon. Court that the total number of commitments for the year ending Michaelmas-day last was 1,654, being an increase of twenty-seven as compared with the year preceding. The commitments under the County Courts Acts were 673, against 720 for the year 1851. It is probable, however, there will be an increase for the current year, as the Act for the Recovery of Small Debts in the City, which came into operation on the 29th ult. now extends to debtors' demands of 50*l.*; and the 39th section of the Act, besides giving increased facilities to creditors, also simplifies the execution of the process of the Court against debtors. The daily average number of prisoners receiving the diet provided and paid for by the City was seventy-four. The prison has been whitewashed and thoroughly cleansed throughout during the past quarter, and the prisoners have been generally healthy, and free from any epidemic complaint."

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Accident to the Lord Chancellor.—A correspondent mentions that the Lord Chancellor met with an accident on the 13th inst. in the vicinity of his residence, Boyle Farm, Surrey, which, although not attended with any serious injury to the noble and learned lord, was likely to have proved of a very different character. His lordship was taking his accustomed airing on horseback, attended by his groom, when it commenced raining, and on putting up an umbrella, the horse began to rear, and his lordship was thrown to the ground. Beyond receiving some rather severe bruises, the noble lord was not otherwise hurt. He returned to his residence at Boyle Farm, and has since recovered from the shock his system received from the fall.—Observer.

The Meeting of Parliament.—The general impression in official quarters is that Parliament will meet about the 5th or 6th of November, but that the Queen's speech will not be delivered until the 11th of that month.—Evening paper.

Committal of a Sham Lawyer at Leeds.—A person, named James Shillito, who was educated for the legal profession, but who has not for many years taken out his certificate, was brought before the Leeds justices on Monday, charged with obtaining money by false pretences. From the evidence brought against him, it appears that some few months ago a working man, named William Dacre, of Thorp Arch, had an action for debt brought against him, which he was anxious to defend, and the prisoner was recommended to him as a likely man to undertake the defence. Dacre and the prisoner accordingly met at a public-house in Leeds, where the matter was talked over, and Shillito, who represented himself as a solicitor, agreed to undertake the defence, promising to put in an appearance, which he said would cost 3*l.* 10s. Dacre gave him 2*l.* all the money he then had with him, and promised to send him the remainder on the following market-day to the Spotted Cow Inn, where Shillito was to meet either him or his messenger. Dacre's father was sent with the money, but Shillito could not then be found, and a short time afterwards the plaintiff in the action put in an execution and levied upon Dacre's goods for 8*l.* 15s. In consequence of this, Dacre waited upon Shillito, to ask why he had not put in an appearance, when the latter said he had intended to do it, but could not, and made other excuses, but promised to repay the 2*l.* Mr. Ferns, the solicitor who conducted the prosecution, said that he had caused the roll of attorneys to be searched, but the prisoner's name could not be found upon it. This, then, was the false pretence relied on, that the prisoner, under pretence of being a practising attorney, had obtained this 2*l.* from Dacre, for which he had done nothing whatever. The prisoner, on being called upon for his defence, said he had not acted with any fraudulent intention, but would reserve stating anything further in defence until another time. He was then committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions for the borough, but the justices offered to liberate him on bail, himself in the sum of 20*l.* and two sureties in the sum of 10*l.* each.

The Great Scotch Will Cause.—The Jury Court at Glasgow was occupied for several days up to Friday last in the trial of the important will cause of Gilmour v. Gilmour, before Lord Robertson and a special jury, in which property of the value of 300,000*l.* depended on the result. The wills in dispute (and which were in the Scotch form of deeds of disposition) were those of the late Mr. Adam Gilmour, a merchant, of Glasgow, who was the architect of his own fortunes, and by his exertions and integrity had amassed an enormous fortune in business there, from which he retired shortly before his death, taking a very large capital. By a testamentary disposition made in 1833, he bequeathed the bulk of his fortune to his nephew and heir-at-law, Mr. Adam Gilmour, jun. merchant, the pursuer (or plaintiff) in this suit. In the year 1848, shortly before his death, the testator executed another deed, making the former deed null, and settling his property on another nephew, Mr. Adam Gilmour, of Portnor, the defendant in this suit. The validity of that disposition was now questioned, and the jury were now called upon to decide—first, whether the testator was in a weak state of mind and easily imposed upon when he executed it; secondly, if that deed of 1848 was obtained by fraud, &c. Twenty-two witnesses were examined, and on Friday the pursuer declined to proceed further with the contest, declaring that he had been actuated by a desire to ascertain the facts, and his honourable feeling dictated the course now of consenting to a verdict for the defendant. The counsel for the defendant bore testimony to the high character and principle which had dictated that step, and Lord Robertson also testified to the high feelings of justice which had dictated such a surrender of the contest, remarking that there were higher considerations in this life than the mere attainment of money. The jury consequently gave a verdict for the defendant.

The Debtors' Prison at Berlin.—A complete change has been effected in the debtors' prison at Berlin. Instead of living as they pleased—some of them in costly style—the debtors are now obliged to content themselves with such a quantity of meat and drink as can be procured for the sum which their creditors allow them daily, and these articles, which are supplied by the administration, are of the simplest kind. The debtors are, moreover, only to be allowed to receive very short visits from their relatives and friends. Although these measures have only just come into force, they have already had a very good effect. Similar reforms are to be carried out in all the provincial prisons for debt.—Galignani.

Charge of Conspiracy against a Solicitor.—The magistrates of Chesterfield, Derbyshire, were on Tuesday engaged in investigating a twofold charge, brought by a man named Henry Rotherham, against a plumber named George Haslam, and Mr. John Cutts, solicitor. The charge against Haslam was for perjury; and the information upon which the proceedings were instituted alleged that he had been suborned by Mr. Cutts to commit that offence. After a patient inquiry into the circumstances, the bench dismissed the case, being unable to credit the most material portions of Rotherham's testimony. Both parties intimated their intention to carry the question before the Superior Courts.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

The New House-duty.—A return to Parliament has just been issued, shewing the number of houses valued at 20*l.* and upwards, the number of those which pay house-tax at sixpence and ninepence in the pound, with other information on the same subject. In England and Wales there are 179,234 houses charged at sixpence; and in Scotland, 6,377. The amount of duty in England and Wales is 200,182*l.* 19s. 2d.; and in Scotland, 5,288*l.* 11s. 9d.; making 205,471*l.* 10s. 11d. at sixpence; while at ninepence in the pound there are 252,213 houses in England and Wales producing 463,204*l.* 4s. 8d.; and in Scotland, 24,095 houses at 38,340*l.* 17s. 1d.; making the ninepence duty 501,545*l.* 1s. 9d. The total amount of duty is stated at 707,016*l.* 12s. 8d. The return, which was obtained by Mr. Goulburn, contains the number of houses in some of the principal towns rated at 10*l.* and other sums.

COMMON LAWYERS IN EQUITY.

Some of our friends belonging to the Equity Bar doubt whether there will be any such necessity as we have suggested for bringing practised men from the Common Law Bar to the vivâ voce examination of witnesses in Equity, under the new procedure. They argue vehemently that if the Equity men should, from inexperience, be somewhat deficient in skill at first, they will soon learn their business, and that it will not be worth while to introduce strangers for so short a time.

But in this they err. It will not be a short time. The art of skilfully examining witnesses is not learned in a month, or in a year, or in five years; it is the result of experience continued day by day for many years, and which cannot be acquired by occasional practice. The knowledge, that has almost become an instinct, what questions to put to a witness, and what to withhold, how certain characters are to be managed, and certain others drawn out or curbed, is slowly and laboriously acquired. Imagine an Equity Counsel who has not examined half-a-dozen witnesses in his life, and probably has never even seen fifty examinations, pitted against one of our Nisi Prius Advocates in an Equity Court, with a batch of difficult witnesses—what chance would he have in the unequal conflict? Think how he would stumble at every step, and how the quick eye of his opponent would instantly detect the slip, and draw the rein until he is brought to a stand-still, and cannot advance in any direction. How the astute Common Lawyer would play with his adversary's witnesses and make free with his own, and mould the evidence of both to the requirements of his case! And how the Solicitor would be vexed! And how the client would storm!

If, at the Common Law Bar, where it is the business of every man to make the examination of witnesses his study, only a few excel, and the most successful require the daily experience of practice to be continued for years, it is manifestly impossible that a Bar wholly unaccustomed should suddenly appear trained and competent to the work. It may be said that where all are equally unskilful, there is an even chance for clients, and that the defects on one side will be balanced by the shortcomings of the other. This would be true, and to some extent consolatory, if the Equity Bar were absolutely closed against all but Equity men, and no Common Lawyer could intrude himself among them. But there is no such barrier. A Solicitor, desirous of winning, will not be likely to consult the conveniences of the Equity Bar. He will not hesitate to send in a Common Lawyer if he thinks that his work will thus be better done, and his cause more surely gained. If there is but one such intruder, the competition is established. He will have so great and manifest an advantage over the others in the management of the witnesses, that the opposing parties also must, in self-defence, call in a Common Lawyer, and if once that Bar obtains a footing in the Equity Court, it will not be readily expelled.

One other speculation offers itself as within the range of possibility. A portion of the Equity Bar may devote itself to the examination of witnesses as a distinct branch of business, which, in fact, it is. This would, perhaps, be the most convenient course for all parties, for there are manifest inconveniences in going to another Court for Counsel, whose services cannot be secured without considerable cost. Should such an arrangement be made, the men who ought to constitute this body of Equity practitioners, should come from the Common Law Bar, and formally take their places as among the regular practitioners in Equity. For such a Bar there is a decided opening, and even if there should be an endeavour, at first, to do without them, they may be sure that in no long time the Solicitors will recognise the advantage of having witnesses examined by Counsel, skilful in the art, and then it will be the custom to employ one set of men to do the law work of the Courts, and another to conduct the examinations of witnesses.

Such appears to us to be one among the many probable changes in the Profession that "looms in the future."

COST OF CONVEYANCING.

A correspondent says that our "Hint" for the omission of the Powers of Sale from small mortgages is quite unnecessary, for that in the country, a mortgage, with all these provisions, is usually brought within a single skin, and rarely costs more than 5*l*. We know not what is the experience of our correspondent, or the custom of the country in which he has the fortune or misfortune to be domiciled, but certainly such is not the scale of conveyancing costs in London, or in that part of the country with which we were familiar. We have seen a mortgage with powers of sale comprised in one skin; we have drawn such; but to the alarm of the elder practitioners, who could not accept as safe any other formula than that to which they had been accustomed. We know that one of the most frequent troubles of a country attorney is to manage a small mortgage, so as to bring it within a single skin, and many are the blottings and interlinings of a draft to reduce it to the thirty folios. We have hinted a mode of effecting the object without all this trouble. Omit the Powers of Sale, and trust to foreclosure by claim for your remedy.

We fear that if some improvements are not made by us Lawyers voluntarily in the practice of conveyancing, we shall have changes forced upon us that will be much more destructive, as we have already experienced with the County Courts, and the other reforms which we declined to undertake and mould, and which were therefore so constructed by our enemies as to work against us. It cannot be disguised that some improvements in conveyancing are required.

We have before indicated how they may be effected.

By a scale of fees regulated by the amount of the transaction, and a single charge for the whole, instead of a detailed bill of costs.

An abbreviation of Conveyances by such means as our "Hint" suggested, or by a single clause in an Act of Parliament, which should enact that in mortgages the Powers of Sale should follow the mortgage as of course, unless it was expressly provided to the contrary. We believe that it is so with Irish mortgages. Why should not so rational an arrangement be adopted here? Other similar improvements might readily be found.

We know that a great onslaught upon Conveyancing is preparing by the Lawyer-hating Law Reformers, and, therefore, we are thus earnest in entreating the Profession to strike the destructive weapon out of the hands of their enemies by moderate improvements of their own making.

THE NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.

Mr. Tudor's new Practice is passing rapidly through the press, and will be published in a few days, unless the New Rules in preparation should be positively announced for early promulgation, in which case it will be delayed for them. If issued without them, they will be supplied in an Appendix.

NEW PRACTICE OF THE COMMON LAW.

Mr. Kerr's promised Practice under the New Act is published at last. We trust that the work will be found by the Profession to be worthy of the time and toil that have been bestowed upon it (and which have caused its late appearance), and to be thoroughly practical, as is the design of the Law Times Editions of the Important Statutes.

The chapter giving a complete sketch of an Action at Law as it now is, after the manner of Smith's, will be a novel and useful feature of this volume.

THE ATTORNEY; (a)

HIS EDUCATION, PRACTICE, AND DUTIES.

ARTICLE XXVII.

If, having heard your opinion, your client should resolve to proceed, you should take from him a warrant to sue, some blank forms to which should always lie upon your table, ready for use.

But, before you issue the writ, you should make an endeavour to procure an amicable settlement of the dispute, and this, whether your client does or does not desire it. Such a course is due to your own professional reputation, that you may not be charged with what is termed "sharp practice." Address to the defendant a polite letter, stating the nature of your client's claim, and threatening proceedings if it be not recognised, if due compensation be not made for any damage done, or a prompt concession of any right withheld. Allow a reasonable time for a reply, because a man cannot be expected to yield to a sudden claim without some inquiry and reflection. If no notice be taken of your application at the expiration of the appointed time, you may proceed at once; but if the defendant answers, and negotiates for a settlement, you must allow a further reasonable term for that purpose, however eager for hostilities your client may be. If, however, your claim is still disputed, or you have good cause to believe that delay is sought with a design to defeat you, no blame can attach to you for commencing proceedings as soon as the time allowed for an amicable settlement has expired.

But although it is prudent and proper to try every fair means for the adjustment of a difference before proceedings are commenced, when once begun they cannot be pursued too vigorously. Nothing is gained by delay; but much is hazarded. A wise man will not fight if he can honourably avoid it, but being forced into the field, he will put forth all his power.

Your next duty will be to determine how to proceed, whether your remedy is in equity or at law, or in both, or in the Superior Court or in the County Court. This is an important consideration, both for your client and for yourself, and as there is usually a choice of remedies it will depend upon you whether that is preferred which is intrinsically the best,—that is to say, the most sure, the most speedy, and the cheapest.

And here again another temptation will beset you. The remedies that offer themselves may differ materially in the amount of profit which they are likely to yield to yourself. A suit in equity, even with the reformed procedure, is vastly more profitable than an action at law, and an action in the Superior Court than a plaint in the County Court. But you have no right to permit this consequence to enter at all into your consideration.

You have one plain duty to perform in this, as on all other occasions, and that is, to consider only what is for the interest of your client. To ascertain this, you must not take into your calculations one only of the elements of justice, good law, speedy judgment, or cheapness of procedure, for neither of these alone should influence your decision. You must consider all of them in reference to the nature of your case. In some, as where the value of the subject of litigation is small, speed and cheapness are more to be desired even than sound law. In others, as where rights are in dispute, or the purpose is to determine doubts upon the law, and not merely to try a question of fact, or where the sum in dispute is large, the importance of obtaining the assistance of the ablest Counsel, and the decision of the most learned Judges, will be properly preferred to a tribunal that would be more rapid and less costly. The County Courts have not hitherto offered anything like a reasonable remuneration for professional services; but this objection to them will be speedily removed by the operation of a clause in the recent statute, which it was our good fortune to cause to be introduced and carried, by which a scale of fees for Attorneys in the County Courts is to be framed by the Judges. When this is done, there will be no excuse whatever for taking a case into the Superior Court which might be more speedily and cheaply tried in the County Court.

It is not our business in this treatise to describe to you what is the law with respect to the proper remedy for wrongs done or rights withheld. This learning you must acquire in your office, refreshing your memory by reference to the books, when the particular case arises for its application.

For the present, we will suppose that you have resolved to bring an action in one of the Superior Courts of Common Law; that you have given the defendant due notice of your purpose, and that either he has made no answer to your application, or refused redress; and that you have obtained your writ from your agent.

If the defendant is not likely to attempt to evade service, or to take any unfair advantage of your courtesy, instead of sending a process-server to serve it, you should write to the defendant to inform him that the writ is issued, that you are desirous of avoiding the annoyance to him of a personal service, and asking the name of his Attorney, who might accept service for him; and then, if referred to his Attorney, you will send the copy of the writ as directed, requesting an acknowledgment of the service. If, however, you cannot trust the defendant with this knowledge, or he makes no reply to your letter, you must cause him to be served in the regular manner.

But even in that do not forget the rules of politeness. Let your messenger be a sharp, shrewd, and intelligent man, but enjoin him to avoid all appearance of rudeness or insult, too often employed by the class of Jacks-in-office who are usually employed as process-servers. There is a civil mode of performing even a disagreeable duty, which is appreciated by those who are the objects of it, and who will give you credit for it, as, on the contrary, they will set to your account any insolence of your menial. Besides, it is right, as well as polite, and therefore, also, should be observed.

If the defendant resides at such a distance that the writ of service by your own messenger would be greater than the employment of an agent, you should send the writ for service to some respectable Attorney in the immediate neighbourhood of the defendant. Having received from him the affidavit of service, with the account of his fees, make it a strict rule forthwith, by return of post, to transmit to him, by post-office order, the amount of those fees, and thus avoid the complaints that, with too much truth, are made by many members of the Profession of the difficulty which they find in obtaining payment of such fees from some of their professional brethren, who will not pay them even after they have been received by themselves as part of their costs. Such a proceeding is something more than unjust, it is dishonest, for their agency fees are too trifling to be recovered by an action, and, therefore, are debts of honour. Treat them as such, and pay them as soon as they are incurred.

Even while the pleadings are in progress, begin to collect the evidence. There are many reasons why this most important part of your duty should not be delayed. It often happens that the statements of your client, upon the faith of which the action has been brought, cannot be sustained by the evidence: he has mistaken or exaggerated it, or it rests upon something that is not legal testimony, as hearsay, and such like, and then it is desirable that you should be enabled to stay proceedings at the earliest moment, so as to save your client from useless costs. Inasmuch as it is impossible to anticipate the time that will be required for the gathering of the evidence, you cannot too soon begin to do so. Witnesses may die, or remove, or documents may be withdrawn or concealed. Be assured that there is nothing like promptitude to command success in the practice of the law as in the other affairs of life. Ever bear in mind this admirable maxim of one of the wise men of the past, "Commit the beginnings of actions to Argus with his hundred eyes, and the endings of them to Briareus with his hundred arms." In other words, think well before you resolve to act, but, having resolved, act with all your might.

Under the new procedure you will be enabled, in the majority of cases, to prepare your own pleadings. But if there is the slightest doubt or difficulty in any case, it will be the safer course to send it to a Pleader.

The principal duty of the Attorney is to collect the evidence that will be required to support his case. It is impossible to lay down any rules for this, as the practice must vary in almost every instance, according to the circumstances; but a few hints may be serviceable.

You will, in the first instance, apply to your client. Having before you the notes of his instructions, you proceed to inquire from him by whom the acts as stated will be proved, and as he is now admissible as a witness, you will commence with him for your collection of the evidence. But you must not permit him to tell his own story, as on the former occasion, for your object now is not to obtain from him the general history of the case, as he has learned it from others, but only the facts of it that are known to himself, and which he is able to prove upon oath. You must now be the questioner, charging him to confine his answers to your queries; put them slowly, and take down his replies verbatim, on draft paper, for subsequent revision before they are transferred to the brief.

You must still remember what is his position. He has the deepest interest in the issue, and he is liable to be grossly misled by his own passions. The more wrathful he is, the more cautious you must be in taking his evidence, or he will deceive you as he has deceived himself. Treat him, therefore, almost as if he were an adverse witness, and cross-examine him. With all your skill and caution, you will find it extremely difficult to sever the facts he is able to prove from the mass of hearsay, surmise, suspicion, and conjecture that form the larger portion of the materials upon which is founded his confident belief in the justice of his own cause. If documents are referred to, request their production to you, to assure yourself that they are as represented. Accept no statement from the witness of anything he does not personally know, and is prepared to prove upon oath. Set down all his answers in his own words, and having thus obtained the evidence from him, read it over to him very slowly, sentence by sentence, asking him to correct you if any thing is there misstated, or omitted, or requires explanation; and when it has been moulded according to his final instructions, ask him to sign it as an acknowledgment of its verity, and then indorse it and place it on the file with the other papers relating to the cause.

But you must not content yourself with this evidence alone, however conclusive it may appear. Although the law no longer excludes the testimony of the parties, Judges and juries very properly receive it with some suspicion, and require that it shall be corroborated by other witnesses, if it be possible to do so. You will make it your particular care to procure from him this information, and especially as to the existence of documentary proofs. It is of very frequent occurrence in trials, that the evidence of a witness as to the terms of an agreement or otherwise is shut out by eliciting from him the fact that it had been put into writing. Hence the importance in all cases of ascertaining from the witnesses, when you examine them previously to the trial, whether there was any writing, and if there was such, you must use every exertion to procure it. This research it is that often demands so much time and labour, and makes it so desirable that you should begin to collect your evidence as soon as the action has commenced.

And as you do in taking the evidence of your client, so do with all the witnesses in succession. Endeavour to discover from each one if he has any bias of interest or feeling that might induce him to colour his narrative, or if he is really disinterested, and deal with him accordingly: in the one case subjecting him to that which almost amounts to a cross-examination: in the other, taking his story from his lips almost as he imparts it, with only such inquiries as are necessary to its completeness.

THE NEW BANKRUPTCY ORDERS.

It should, perhaps, be stated that the volume of the New Rules which is to be published, according to promise, as an Appendix to Wise's Bankruptcy Act, will not be edited by Mr. Wise, but by another gentleman, who has taken great pains in the collection of the cases decided upon the construction of the Act.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

JUDGMENT—WRIT OF INQUIRY.

JUDGMENT final can be obtained at once in all cases where the plaintiff seeks to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money, and in consequence writs of inquiry are almost completely abolished. All forms of action being disused, and the above simple method of obtaining final judgments substituted, the former great source of these writs, viz. ordinary actions on promises, which might have been brought equally well in debt, is lost; and, in fact, the recent Act goes further: as, by the 94th section, it enacts that, whenever the damages can be reduced to a matter of calculation they are to be assessed by the Master, and thus writs of inquiry can only now be used when the damages claimed are in their very nature uncertain and arbitrary, and (a point which should not be overlooked) in actions commenced against British subjects residing out of the jurisdiction, in case of non-appearance, the plaintiff must nevertheless prove the debt or damages claimed, either before a jury upon a writ of inquiry, or, &c.

H. P.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

HERETOFORE, the orders made by the Lord Chancellor or persons entrusted with the care of the persons and estates of persons found lunatic, &c. were not entered into a book, as orders in Chancery are. This led to much inconvenience, as persons interested in proceedings in lunacy, as well as those interested in Chancery proceedings, are often in need of authenticated copies of such proceedings. The 30th and two following sections provide a remedy, which will be found of much use.

By the 30th section, every order made in matters in lunacy by the Lord Chancellor, or the person or persons entrusted as aforesaid, when drawn up by the Secretary of Lunatics, and signed by the Lord Chancellor, or the persons or person entrusted as aforesaid, are to be entered by such secretary, who is to be thenceforth called the Registrar in Lunacy, in a proper book to be provided by him for that purpose, and he is to furnish to every person requiring the same, office copies of such orders, or of such part thereof as may be required, which copies are to be signed by such Registrar in Lunacy, and he is to provide a seal for his office, and is to cause to be sealed or stamped therewith all such office copies; and every such office copy, purporting to be so signed, and sealed or stamped with such seal, is at all times, and on behalf of all persons, and whether for the purposes of this Act or otherwise, to be admitted as evidence of the order of which it purports to be a copy, without any further proof thereof. (Sec. 30.)

Where any such order in lunacy relates to the payment, transfer, or carrying over of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects, to or into the name of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the matter of any person or persons being idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind; or to the payment, transfer, or carrying over, or other disposal by the said Accountant-General, of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects, which may be standing in his name to the credit of the matter of any person or persons being idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, the Accountant-General, and all other persons, including the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all other companies and societies, are to act upon such order, signed by the Lord Chancellor, or the persons or person entrusted as aforesaid, after the same shall have been so entered as aforesaid, in the same manner as if such order had been also drawn up by the Registrar of the Court of Chancery, and passed and entered according to the mode heretofore in force; and the Registrar in Lunacy is to certify under his hand to the Accountant-General, what stocks or funds he is, by virtue of any such order, to transfer, and to whom; in the same manner as the Registrars of the Court of Chancery have been heretofore accustomed to do. (Sec. 31.) A considerable saving will be effected by having, under this section, only one order drawn up and entered, instead of having an additional one drawn up and entered by the Registrar of the Court of Chancery, under the general order of the 10th February, 1834.

It is not to be necessary hereafter to file any certificate or report of the Masters in Lunacy in the report office of the Court of Chancery, but the Accountant-General and all other persons, including as aforesaid, are to act upon all certificates and reports of the Masters in Lunacy, filed in the office of the Registrar in Lunacy, in the same manner as if such certificates and reports respectively had been also filed in the report office of the Court of Chancery, according to the mode heretofore enforced. (Sec. 32.)

If any person forge the signature of the Registrar in Lunacy, or forge or counterfeit the seal of his office, or knowingly concur in using any such forged or counterfeit signature or seal, or tender in evidence any document with a false or counterfeit signature of such Registrar, or with a false or counterfeit seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to the same punishment as any offender under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113. (Sec. 33.)

The present practice of countersigning the cheques of the Accountant-General occasions much inconvenience, which will be much diminished by the two following sections.

The 34th section, after reciting that all notes and cheques for the payment of money, drawn by the Accountant-General upon the Bank of England, have been heretofore countersigned by the Registrars of the said Court, in pursuance of the provisions of 12 Geo. 1, c. 32; and that all copies and extracts taken from the Registrar's books, deposited in the office of the Master of Reports and Entries, have been heretofore signed by the said Registrars; and that the performance of such duties by the said Registrars is attended with inconvenience, and interrupts them in the execution of their other duties, and it is expedient that the Master of Reports and Entries should be empowered to sign such documents as well as the said Registrars; it is therefore enacted that the duties relating to the countersigning the notes or cheques drawn by the Accountant-General upon the Bank of England, and to the signing the copies and extracts made in or issuing from the office of the Master of Reports and Entries, heretofore performed by the Registrars of the said Court, so far as it shall be found necessary or expedient to continue such duties, are to be performed by the Master of Reports and Entries, or the Registrars of the said Court, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct. (Sec. 34.)

The Master of Reports and Entries shall also perform all such other duties as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct. (Sec. 35.)

By an order made by the Lord Chancellor on the 27th July last, it is ordered that the copies or extracts made in or issuing from the office of the Master of Reports and Entries, and certificates of no cause shewn, are to be signed by him alone, save that when he is prevented from signing the same by absence, or some unavoidable or reasonable ground, the same is to be signed by the Registrar, who is employed in countersigning, as next thereinafter mentioned. That until further order, the duty of countersigning the notes or cheques drawn by the Accountant-General of the Court upon the Bank of England, is to be discharged, as nearly as conveniently may be, during three days in each week, by the Master of Reports and Entries, and during the other three days in each week, by some one of the Registrars, in such order and rotation as shall be agreed upon by and between the Registrars and the Master of Reports and Entries, or the majority of them: and it is provided that such notes or cheques are to be equally valid and available, to all intents and purposes, whether signed by the Master of Reports or by any one of the Registrars.

By the next section, which abolishes the office of Clerks of Accounts, some time will be saved, which was formerly very unnecessarily lost, by the suitors, in getting their cheques entered, as the countersigning of the cheques of the Accountant-General by the Registrar or the Master of Reports and Entries, is a sufficient precaution of itself against the funds of the suitors being improperly transferred. This section, after reciting that, under an order of the said Court recited in the said last-mentioned Act, and thereby confirmed, an account of all moneys, securities, and effects belonging to the suitors of the court, was directed to be kept at the Report Office, and that, since the passing of such Act, three accounts of such moneys, securities, and effects have been respectively kept, that is to say, one at the Report Office by the Clerks of Accounts, another in the office of the Accountant-General, and a third at the Bank of England; and that it is considered that the account so kept at the Report Office was no longer necessary, and may be discontinued it is therefore enacted, that after the 1st October, 1852, the account so kept at the Report Office as aforesaid is to be discontinued, and the offices of Clerks of Accounts is to be abolished, and so much of the said last-mentioned order as requires that when any money belonging to the suitors of the said court should be directed to be paid by order of the said Court, the note drawn for such money upon cheque-paper as thereby directed should be carried to the Report Office, and an entry made thereof there, and intratur written thereon, shall be repealed, and after 1st October, 1852, every note or cheque for the payment of money under any order of the said Court, signed by the Accountant-General, and countersigned by the Master of Reports and Entries or one of the Registrars of the court, as thereinbefore required, is to be sufficient authority to the Bank of England to pay the money mentioned in such note or cheque to the person named therein, or to such person as he or she by endorsement shall order to receive the same. (Sec. 36.)

Power is then given to the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make and issue general orders (sec. 37), and from time to time to annul, alter, or vary the same. (Sec. 38.)

Power is also given to the Lord Chancellor to authorise and direct the first, second, and third clerks in each division of the office of the said Accountant-General, after the 28th of October, 1852, to continue to perform the duties hitherto performed by such clerks, in addition to the duties prescribed by Act of Parliament as heretofore, in exclusion of any other person, and to direct them to be paid such yearly salaries as the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of the Treasury, shall think just; and the Lord Chancellor may fix the fees to be paid for such acts as aforesaid, which shall be accounted for in like manner as the other fees now received in the office of the Accountant-General. (Sec. 39.)

The salaries of every clerk of the Taxing Masters, after the 3rd November, 1852, is to be 350*l.* per annum. (Sec. 40.)

The deposit now payable on setting down appeals and exceptions for hearing, are to be paid to the senior Registrar of the court, who is once in every three months to pay all sums so received to the credit of the Accountant-General (the amount to be verified by affidavit), to be placed to an account to be intituled "The Appeal Deposit Account," and the moneys which shall from time to time be standing to such account, are to be paid and applied as the Court of Chancery shall from time to time in that behalf order or direct. (Sec. 41.)

According to the present practice, the Chief Registrar receives money payable as deposits on appeals, and pays it over to the solicitor of the party to whom such deposit is ordered to be paid; but he is not in the mean time under any obligation to invest it for the purpose of security, to any account in the Bank of England. This practice, although it does not appear that the confidence of the Court has ever been abused, is wrong in point of principle,—it might lead, or have a tendency to lead, to abuses, and has therefore been very rightly abolished.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

DURING the pressure of the business of Term the following was laid aside, and has just come to hand. We give it a place now, for it is valuable evidence of the justice of remarks that have been often made in these columns, where Mr. MARSHALL has figured more than once. The case occurred in the Court of Bankruptcy:—

Re HUCKS.

The bankrupt, a cooper, of Rotherhithe, applied for his certificate. His debts and liabilities were 1,295*l.*; estimated assets, 251*l.*; profits, 1,854*l.*; expenses, 2,712*l.*

Linklater supported.

Dupree opposed, for a creditor, Mr. J. Holme, timber-merchant, of Liverpool, on the ground of reckless trading, bad book-keeping, and a vexatious defence to an action. In this case, the profits were exceeded by the item of wages alone. The bankrupt had been sued by Mr. Holme on a bill; he had pleaded to the action, putting the plaintiff to the proof of everything, including his handwriting; when the trial came on, no defence was made; but the costs were run up from 11*l.* 10s. to 29*l.* 6s. 8d. This, it was contended, disentitled the bankrupt to protection under the penal clauses of the new Act.

The bankrupt, in examination, stated that he had been induced by an advertisement in one of the daily papers, addressed, "To the embarrassed," to apply to a Mr. Marshall.

Linklater urged that the bankrupt had been misled by ill advice.

His HONOUR said this bankrupt had kept his accounts in the most imperfect manner, and had knowingly carried on a losing trade, as was shewn by the amount of wages paid. On these grounds the certificate must be suspended. There was a more material charge. The Court could never allow a debtor to impose terms on his creditor by threatening to put him to expense by legal proceedings. This man had as much excuse as could be alleged; he had fallen into the hands of an advertising attorney, and men who did that generally came to the Court of Bankruptcy, and were not at all released from their difficulties. The certificate (of the third class) would be granted at the end of six months; protection to be withheld for two months.

On the application of Mr. Dupree, a certificate to arrest the bankrupt was granted to his client.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary

WE have not deemed it expedient to print in extenso the statute of last session relating to the Assessment and Collection of the County Rates (15 & 16 Vict. c. 81). It is not likely to be referred to by any but those who are engaged in county business, and the abstract of it will sufficiently inform other Solicitors of the substance of the new law—if, indeed, it deserves the name, for, in fact, it is little more than a consolidation of the existing law. The practical statutes required by every member of the Profession were so numerous and so long, and yet so necessary to be given in full, that we were obliged to abstract those of less general importance, in order to complete the series before the business of Term, and the product of another session, could come to crowd our columns. We have now almost brought up the arrears, and shall be enabled to begin the legal year with the pages requisite for keeping pace with the current law, which will be more interesting than ever.

Queries.

IN many Acts of Parliament provision is made for a certain number of days' notice being given of meetings, &c. before they are held.

Illustrations of what I mean will be found in 8 Vict. c. 16, s. 71; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, ss. 33, 46, 48, 55, &c.; and many other similar statutes.

Will some of your readers have the kindness to state whether it is their practice, in giving such notices, to continue the advertisements throughout the whole number of days, or whether they consider that once advertising is sufficient?

WHERE the lands of a see were leased, and a railway company bought the reversion of the bishop, and the leases were renewable on the dropping in of lives and some at stated intervals, it was held that the bishop for the time being was not entitled to the dividends of the compensation money, but that they must accumulate, the bishop to have liberty to apply to have his deficiency paid out of the fund as the leases became renewable. (Ex parte the Bishop of Winchester, 20 Law T. Rep. 28.)

IMPORTANT RAILWAY DECISION.—In the Sheriff's Small Debt Court, Glasgow, on Thursday last, a decision of great importance to railway travellers and the public generally was pronounced by Mr. Sheriff Bell. It was in a case at the instance of Mr. Robert Dunlop, writer, Glasgow, against the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company for damages sustained through detention from business on the morning of Saturday, the 25th of September ult.; Mr. Dunlop, who resides in the parish of Campsie, having been, along with the other passengers, detained at the Milton station of the Campsie branch of the railway on that morning for about an hour and a-half, the train from Campsie which should have reached the Milton station at five minutes after nine o'clock a.m. not having arrived till about half-past ten o'clock. The railway company were defended by Mr. Bannatyne, on the plea, 1st, that the delay in question had arisen from an accident for which the company were not responsible—viz. the breaking down at Lennox-town of the engine used upon the branch: and, 2ndly, that the company's time-bills expressly stipulate that the company do not guarantee the hours of arrival and departure of the trains being kept under all circumstances, and do not hold themselves responsible for delays. After evidence had been laid, and parties were fully heard, the sheriff, in a very luminous manner, summed up, stating that the first plea urged in defence could not be sustained, the delay having been occasioned by the breaking down of the only engine used on the branch, and which the defendants' engine-driver admitted had recently undergone repair, having, in fact, only left the workshop the day before, and the repairs, as testified by the break-down the following morning, and also by the engine-driver himself, must have been imperfectly made by the servants of the company, for whom they were undoubtedly responsible; and as to the second plea, that it was quite true the stipulation urged was expressed in the time-bills, but no such stipulation could shelter the company in all circumstances from their responsibility as private carriers, and it certainly could not be given effect to in the present case, where the cause of the delay, and of their contract with the public not being implemented, was the deficiency of their own engine: the sheriff, therefore, decreed against the railway company for the damages claimed, and whole expenses.—Glasgow Herald, Oct. 15.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

THREE persons became entitled in unequal shares to real estate, subject to a mortgage. The mortgagee requiring payment, a transfer was made, which recited that payment having been demanded of A. B. and C. (the persons entitled to the equity of redemption) according to their respective proportions thereof, and that they had applied to the transferee to advance, &c.; and there was a fresh proviso for redemption on payment by A. B. and C. of the money, in proportion to their shares in the estate; and they covenanted for payment, and a bond was given by the three for the amount of mortgage-money. C. died, and the question arose, what part of her estate was the primary fund for the discharge of her portion of the debt? "It was settled law," said the Court, "that the mere transfers of a mortgage by one mortgagee to another, although accompanied by a covenant of the owners of the estate, making their personal estate liable to the transferee, would not, of itself, make their personal estate the primary fund for payment of the mortgage debts." And there were no circumstances in this case to take it out of that rule. (Hedges v. Hedges, 20 Law T. Rep. 29.)

In Turner v. Turner, 20 Law T. Rep. 30, leasehold ground-rents and shares in an insurance company were held not to pass under the words, "real estate, money, and securities for money."

It was laid down in Bell v. Morrall, 20 Law T. Rep. 30, that in order to give a claim for interest on balances in the hands of executors, there must be a clear case of retention of balances to a considerable and substantial amount.

In Ex parte Pugh, 20 Law T. Rep. 31, where a husband had become bankrupt, two-thirds of a sum which had been paid into Court under the Trustees Relief Act, and to which he was entitled in right of his wife, was ordered to be settled on the wife and children.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

AN Insolvency case was reported last week from the Q. B. In Kernot v. Pittis, 20 Law T. Rep. 32, it was held that an insolvent, discharged after the vesting order by default of the execution creditor, and with the consent, also, of the detaining creditors, cannot sue a party acting as the servant of the provisional assignee for the recovery of property passing under the vesting order, before an order is made by the Court for the re-delivery of the property to the insolvent, as directed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 44.

ATTORNEYS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Below you have a report of the observations which were made in a case wherein I was advocate for the plaintiff—"being an attorney acting generally in the action for him, and not being an attorney retained as an advocate by any other attorney." I say acting generally in the action, because no other attorney had acted for the plaintiff, in issuing the summons, or preparing the brief; and the next step in the action was to serve any notices which might be required, and to advocate the case. Neither the parties who surreptitiously altered this clause in the last stage of the Bill, after it had passed the Commons, nor the Legislature, appear to me to know anything about the course of proceeding in the County Courts; hence, they have made use of language which they do not understand, and which is not applicable to those Courts. In nine cases out of ten, in the Liverpool County Court, an attorney is not employed to sue out the summons. That is a proceeding done by the plaintiff himself, which is by merely delivering to the clerk the necessary number of copies of his claim, and the summons is issued by him accordingly. From this stage, until a few days before the day of hearing, the plaintiff is perfectly passive. He then collects his evidence (it may be without consulting an attorney), and the cause comes on for trial. It will be seen, therefore, that up to this time there has not been any attorney acting generally in the action; and it appears to me clear, that under these circumstances, the plaintiff is at liberty to employ any attorney he pleases to advocate his case. To come to an opposite conclusion, the attorney advocate would be excluded altogether, because he had not been acting generally in the action. I will now suppose that an attorney is employed to make out the claim, to issue the summons, and to pay the costs of it. Both attorney and client are then passive until a few days before the hearing, and the client then requests his attorney to prepare for trial and advocate the case. This the attorney declines to do, and refers his client to a gentleman who attends the Court daily during its sittings. This gentleman is then set in motion by the plaintiff, and draws up and serves a notice to produce documents in evidence, prepares his brief, and takes a written retainer from his client. Now, it will be seen that he has been acting more generally in the action than the one who has issued the summons only. Can it, therefore, be contended that he shall not advocate the case? Is he "an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney?" Certainly not. The advocate is retained by the party, and he may have as many attorneys as he pleases. In these Courts there is no record whereon the attorney's name appears as in the Superior Courts, and consequently there can be no occasion to apply for leave to change the attorney. The plaintiff, in fact, sues in person, and whoever appears for him at the trial, his name, as attorney or agent, is entered in the Court book. It is clear to me, that if no attorney has been employed until the instructions for advocating the cause are given by the party, no objection can be sustained against the attorney advocate. To contend the contrary would operate as an entire exclusion of the attorney advocate, and entail upon the party the cost of counsel and clerk; counsel, too, who in general are deficient in the tact requisite for conducting a cause in these courts. The attorneys are more handy at their work, and, in my judgment, at least equally efficient. In conclusion, I may state, that the clause in question goes to abridge the right of the attorney, and the language of the Legislature must therefore be construed strictly against the enactment, and liberally, in favour of the attorney.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

JNO. C. GROCOTT.

Liverpool, October 12, 1852.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

GREENOUGH v. BELL.

Professional practice—Advocacy by an attorney—Employment of two attorneys by the client—Construction of the advocates' clause in the new Act.

In this case Mr. Grocott rose and stated that he appeared for the plaintiff, whereupon Mr. Weir Anderson, the defendant's attorney, said—I object to Mr. Grocott appearing in this case, as not being the attorney employed; another gentleman has been retained.—Mr. Grocott: I am instructed by Mr. Greenough, and not by any other attorney, directly or indirectly. The brief is written out by the plaintiff himself.—Mr. Anderson: The facts are, that the other attorney has got up this case and has prepared the necessary documents, and has sent the brief, through the plaintiff, to Mr. Grocott. I think if an attorney takes out the summons and prepares the papers, that that attorney is alone entitled to appear in court, or a barrister.—The JUDGE: It is a very important point for the profession. I will read you the actual words of the Act; they are peculiar.—After repealing the last enactment, it says—"And it shall be lawful for the party to the suit or other proceeding, or for an attorney of one of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, being an attorney acting generally in the action for such party—[I had not before observed that the word "generally" was introduced into this]—but not an attorney retained as an advocate by such first-mentioned attorney, or for a barrister retained by or on behalf of the party, on either side, but without any right of exclusive or pre-audience, or by leave of the judge, for any other person allowed by the judge to appear instead of the party, to address the Court." Now, as I understand, Mr. Grocott, you are acting at present for this gentleman, and not retained by any other attorney? Mr. Grocott: Certainly not.—The JUDGE! But are you an attorney acting generally in the matter? When did the papers come into your hands? Mr. Grocott: This morning, from Mr. Greenough,—Mr. Anderson: And the papers have been prepared at another attorney's office.—Mr. Grocott: A man may have half a dozen attorneys if he chooses.—Mr. Anderson: It would take away the effect of the Act altogether if one attorney is to prepare the papers and another attorney is to attend here as an advocate.—The JUDGE: Was this matter in your hands before this morning?—Mr. Grocott: Never, sir.—The JUDGE: Of course you will understand that I am not putting these questions to you with the view of obtaining any information which you yourself are not desirous of affording.—Mr. Grocott: I am happy to afford any information which may be necessary. I have before conducted cases in this court for Mr. Greenough as an advocate, and I presume he was satisfied with my services on those occasions, and he has retained me again. The JUDGE: When the matter was first introduced into court, was any other attorney employed by the plaintiff?—Mr. Grocott: Not to my knowledge.—The JUDGE: I think we had better have the statement of Mr. Greenough himself about it. Will you tell us, Mr. Greenough, what you did yourself in this matter? I will take care that you are not prejudiced in any case, because if Mr. Grocott cannot attend for you, you shall have full opportunity so to prepare the matter as not to be deprived of the assistance of a professional gentleman. What I want to know is, whether any attorney besides the gentleman who is now acting for you has acted in any part of this action? Mr. Greenough replied to the effect that no other attorney had acted in any part of the action, excepting in drawing an instrument for the payment of the money. On Wednesday last the defendant said he would pay the debt provided he had time. He was told that time would be given him, and then instructions were given to Mr. Smith, solicitor, to draw up a paper to that effect. He (Mr. Greenough) had not seen Mr. Smith upon the subject of this action.—The JUDGE: You have not consulted any attorney as regards this action?—Mr. Greenough: None whatever.—The JUDGE.—Or laid any papers before any attorney?—Mr. Greenough: None whatever.—Mr. Anderson said his object was to prevent Mr. Smith being called as a witness against his client, because Mr. Smith called upon the defendant and made an arrangement with him to settle the case. That was on Thursday last.—His HONOUR thought that the meaning of this Act of Parliament was, that a person might have one attorney for the management of his business and the collection of his debts from the opposite party, but that he should only have one attorney in the action from the beginning of the action to the end. He thought it competent for a client to go to an attorney and put matters into his hands to arrange, and then, if it became necessary to enter an action in that court, he might have an attorney to conduct the action from beginning to end. He thought that was the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and that it was the construction which the members of the Profession themselves would be inclined to put upon it. The defendant had stated that he had not employed an attorney except to draw up a consent paper.—Mr. Bremner said they were all amici curiæ upon the subject. Supposing the attorney for the plaintiff entered a plaint, and supposing that on the day of the trial the attorney was called out of town, would it not be competent for the attorney to say, "I cannot attend to-day," and would it not be competent for the client to take his papers to Mr. Grocott, or any other attorney?—His HONOUR would state his impression. If, in consequence of the absence of the first gentleman employed at a time when his client's interest required his presence, the papers and all other matters relating to the action were transferred to another attorney, he was then really the attorney acting in the action. He could not think that a gentleman might not change his attorney in an action; but he did not think that a gentleman had a right to go to an attorney up to the time when the action was nearly coming on, and then put the matter in the hands of another attorney, and go to that attorney afterwards as if he had been formerly employed. If he (the judge) were to be taken as announcing generally that a man could never change his attorney at all, it would come to this, that when an attorney died a man could never have a second attorney in an action; but, as at present advised, he should hold that if a client went to an attorney and consulted him with respect to an action, and he acted in any way for him in that action, he could not come there and employ another gentleman and adopt him as his attorney for that action specially in that court, because he should think that would be evading the Act of Parliament.—Mr. Rymer: Your Honour knows that in the Superior Court no attorney can appear unless there is an order to change. Now, as the judges are about to form new rules, that, I believe, would be a most convenient one, and avoid any difficulty whatever.—The JUDGE: It is a question very well worth attention, and I hope we may have an opportunity of considering it, at all events. This is a perfectly new rule. It is a very important one, I think, to the Profession, and, if properly acted upon, I think it will work beneficially to the Profession. It is intended to prevent the giving to one gentleman the conduct of a case up to the time of its coming into court, and then putting it into the hands of another professional gentleman to act for that first gentleman.—Mr. Rymer: There will be a table of costs prepared shortly, which will be payable to some one, and then this question will arise.—The JUDGE: I shall hold that there must be a bonâ fide transference of the business from one attorney to another, and a perfect transference of the whole of the business of the action completed from one gentleman to another, in order to entitle the second gentleman to conduct a cause in this court. I believe that is the intention of the Legislature. I say nothing of the wisdom of the provision. I believe it was intended that the same gentleman should conduct the case throughout.—Mr. Grocott: I am sorry I cannot subscribe to that.—Mr. Bremner remarked that it would lead to the necessity of an attorney being admitted as a witness for his client, for circumstances would some time arise in which the evidence of an attorney was essential to his client's interest.—The JUDGE: It has many difficulties in it, Mr. Bremner; but I did not make the law.—Mr. Forshaw: That is a difficulty which may be got over. We all know that there will be a fixed bar in this court, and it will be in the power of any attorney so situated to employ counsel.—The JUDGE: What I hold, as at present advised, is, that the attorney who appears should be the attorney acting bonâ fide generally throughout the action. This is a matter of much importance to all the gentlemen concerned, and I may say for the conduct of the court; because it is exceedingly desirable for the interest of the public, as well as the Profession, that there should be frequently attending this court professional gentlemen of great respectability. Nothing shall be left undone on my part to hold out inducements to gentlemen to appear here whose respectability is undoubted, and to whom persons can confide their cases with the greatest confidence; but I feel so strongly the necessity of having some opinion in confirmation of my own view of the law tha, I will communicate with my brothers in the same position on the subject.

UNPUNCTUALITY OF TRAINS.—A new and important decision in connection with present complaints as to the unpunctuality of railway trains has just been decided by the Judge of the Yorkshire County Court. The plaintiff was Mr. Raikes, the banker, and the defendants the York and North Midland Railway. It appears that one of the company's trains, being heavy, arrived at the Milford junction half an hour after the Great Northern fast train for London had started. The case having been gone into, the jury returned a verdict in favour of the plaintiff.—Damages, 5*l.*

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

A POINT of Equity Practice appears in the case of Bennett v. Smith, 20 Law T. Rep. 28. It seems that the Court will not limit its jurisdiction by the amount of the claim, and in this instance it held that a claim for 50*l.* was not too small for its cognisance. This is important, now that equity will give a better remedy than the Common Law Courts.

Queries.

EJECTMENT.—THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

BY referring to the 177th section of the Common Law Amendment Act, it appears that in all cases of ejectment, in case of non-appearance, the plaintiff can obtain judgment by default at the end of sixteen days from the service of the writ, and thereby recover possession of the land, or even in a shorter period by defendant signing a cognovit or confession of the plaintiff's right, immediately after the issuing of the writ, under the 203rd section. A creditor who obtains a judgment by default from a debtor in respect of a debt is not affected by the Bankruptcy Acts, or the subsequent bankruptcy of the defendant; by analogy, therefore, why should not any trader suffer judgment by default of his lands, accompanied, of course, at once, by lawful adverse possession, and then become bankrupt or insolvent? This could not be called a voluntary assignment or conveyance of his estate, although certainly in prejudice to his creditors, and although a matter of remark upon his certificate, could the assignees recover back? or supposing the trader suffered a confession, this would not be such a confession of a debt as would be set aside under the bankruptcy statutes; and, above all, the plaintiff would be in possession. H. P.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

A CASE of great importance on the construction of the Factors' Acts has been decided by the LORD CHANCELLOR. The facts are as follow:—A. consigned goods to B. for sale, and drew bills upon him for 2,466*l.* their value. B. transmitted the goods to C. his agent in London, for sale, and drew upon him for 2,000*l.* on account of them. C. having notice that they were only consigned to B. for sale, accepted the bill. They were valued at 2,050*l.* Part were sold, and produced 320*l.* When the bill for 2,000*l.* became due, C. retained the 320*l.* and accepted, by way of renewal, a bill for 1,680*l.* the balance. B. became insolvent, and the bills drawn upon him by A. were not paid. C. then sold the rest of the goods by private contract for 1,300*l.* to recoup himself the amount of the bill drawn upon him by B. A. then filed a bill against B. and C. for an account, alleging collusion, and praying that C. might be decreed to pay him the amount produced by the sale of the goods. The first question was, whether a factor has a right to pledge goods entrusted to him for sale? At common law he could not do so under any circumstances. But a series of statutes has legalised such a transaction, and in this case the point was, whether they extended to the facts as above stated. We have not space here to describe Lord ST. LEONARD'S admirable review of the statutes, and their construction, which every student of mercantile law should gather from a careful perusal of the judgment itself. Suffice it, that his Lordship held that B. and C. were justified in so dealing with the goods. His Lordship thus put his construction of the statutes, 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39:—"There is this difference between the two Acts; the one says, you are safe in buying of a known agent in the ordinary course of business, if you are not aware that he is the agent; but the other merely recites that the pledge is in the ordinary course of business. It no longer makes it a condition that the pledge should be, but assumes that it is, in the ordinary course of business, and for the purpose of giving title to the pledge, it constitutes the agent owner. The Act says, that in dealing with any agent for pledge of property, you may safely consider him as owner, if you are acting bonâ fide, though you know he is the agent, and you are not bound to ask for his authority. It is the usual course of business to take for granted that he has authority, and that if he does not know you have not authority, you are perfectly safe." (Navulshaw v. Brownrigg, 20 Law T. Rep. 25.)

Two cases from the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy were reported last week. In Ex parte Bower, 20 Law T. Rep. 27, the word "goods," in particulars of demand served with a summons under the Bankruptcy Act, was held to be reasonable information to the debtor so as to prevent the adjudication from being annulled on the ground of uncertainty in the particulars of demand. It was, said the Court, a question to be determined upon the circumstances of each case. And even if they contained one claim that was not sustainable, the particulars were not thereby vitiated.

In Ex parte Heslop, 20 Law T. Rep. 28, it appeared that A. having a bill of sale to secure a debt due to him as mortgagee, allowed the goods to remain in the order and disposition of the mortgagor who committed an act of bankruptcy, but before the petition for adjudication was filed, A. took possession. The messenger took the goods from A. and sold them. A. brought an action of trover and recovered, on the ground that the assignees could not sell without an express order of the commissioner. Thereupon the assignees applied to the commissioner, who made an order confirming the sale retrospectively, and reciting that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt with the consent of the owner. The mortgagee now appealed against the order. But it was held to be valid. It was also ruled that the time of the signing of an order, and not the time of pronouncing it, is its proper date from which the period limited for appeal begins to run.

ABSENCE OF AN OFFICAL ASSIGNEE.—We understand that Dr. Shelton Mackenzie is absent from his post of official assignee in Mr. Commissioner Skirrow's court at Manchester, and has been so for some time. Pecuniary difficulties are the cause of his absence. The vacation ended on Thursday, the 23rd ult. and on the following Tuesday the commissioner received a communication from Dr. Mackenzie, dated Paris, in which he announced his reasons for absenting himself; and Mr. Commissioner Skirrow has laid the circumstances before the Lord Chancellor, and is awaiting his decision in the matter. Considerable interest attaches to that decision, for it is generally felt that the business in the court is not more than will properly remunerate one official assignee, and that to divide it between two is to render the office not worth the acceptance of a qualified and respectable man.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

CHANCERY REFORMS.—Four Acts were passed in the last session of Parliament in relation to the Court of Chancery, three of which are styled "the New Chancery Acts," founded on the report of the Chancery Commissioners, and will come into force in a few days; they will, if carried out, effect great alterations in the practice of the court. The first of the four Acts is to amend the Trustee Act, passed in 1850, by virtue of which trustees can be removed and appointed in an expeditious manner and at little expense. On the 30th of June the Masters in Chancery Abolition Act received the Royal assent. This Act will take effect on Tuesday week, the first day of Michaelmas Term. The second of the three new Chancery Acts is to amend the practice and course of proceedings in the court. It was passed on the 1st of July, and is to "commence and take effect from and after the 1st of November." The last of the three Acts is for the relief of the Suitors in the Court of Chancery. It will, as regards the principal provisions, take effect "from and after the 28th of October," and, as to the payment of certain salaries, from the 10th of October. It was likewise passed on the 1st of July. There are 183 clauses in the three Acts, and it is anticipated that if they are liberally construed, much of the odium attached to the Court will be removed.

COURT OF SESSION.—RETIREMENT OF LORD MEDWYN.—The rumoured resignation of Lord Medwyn is now confirmed. Lord Medwyn was called to the Bar in 1799, and raised to the Bench in 1825, and after such long service, and at the advanced age of seventy-six, his lordship's withdrawal from the laborious duties of the court cannot excite surprise. Lord Medwyn will carry with him into his retirement the respect and esteem of all who have known him during any period of his useful and honoured career. It is generally understood that the vacant judgeship will be conferred on Mr. John Marshall, Dean of Faculty; an appointment which will be considered as fit and acceptable by both sides of the Bar. The name of Mr. Hercules Robertson, sheriff of Renfrewshire, is mentioned in connection with the vacancy thereby created in the office of Dean of Faculty.—Scotsman.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1852.

THE NEW LEGAL YEAR.

Term begins on Tuesday, and with it all the interest that will result from the first trial of the new Procedures, both in Law and Equity. The Common Law Courts commence the Legal Year with the smallest list of arrears ever known. Altogether there are but forty-seven, distributed thus:—In the Q.B. 24; in the C.P. 6; in the Ex. 17. Of those in the Q.B. 16 are special cases and demurrers, 4 are new trials, and 4 appeals from the County Courts. In the C.P. there is 1 demurrer, 2 are enlarged rules, and 3 are new trials; and in the Ex. the special paper has 5, the peremptory paper 3, and the new trial paper 29, including one that stands for judgment.

Of course, the beginning of the term will produce some motions for new trials growing out of the last Assizes, but beyond these there is no prospect of business to occupy half the Term.

We shall, of course, give the earliest reports of the decisions on points in the new practice as they arise in all the courts.

VOL. XX. No. 566.

THE FIRST WEEK OF THE NEW PROCEDURE.

The Common Law Procedure Act came into operation on the 24th.

The 24th was a Sunday!

Monday, therefore, was its real birthday,—and that night's post carried to all parts of the country divers processes altered according to the new forms.

The Profession had scarcely realised the changes until they were thus made manifest to the eye. Great was the curiosity with which, on Tuesday morning, the strange arrivals were inspected by master and clerk in the various offices in the provinces.

Writs of summons had not a perceptibly altered aspect. Only where there was a special indorsement, for the purpose of obtaining speedy judgment upon the writ, without the preliminary process of declaration, was there any strangeness of feature to attract the eye.

But declarations! There was a change indeed. The greater portion of them were found to consist of a memorandum of three or four lines,—being considerably shorter than the writ! We were shewn some, by which hundreds of pounds were sought to be recovered, that did not exceed five lines.

They were probably drawn by a clerk. Manifestly, there will be no need now to employ Counsel or Pleader to draw declarations, save in very rare cases. Every Attorney will draw his own.

Another notable feature in the new procedure was its effect upon actions in progress. At first, there was some doubt whether the provisions of the statute were applicable to actions already commenced. But the authorities were not long in coming unanimously to a conclusion in the affirmative, and, consequently, in such cases the Attorneys have received declarations in the new form upon writs in the old form, and new pleas to the old declarations. Still some curious questions remain to be decided.

For instance, have the Courts power to amend the pleadings, so as to deprive parties of advantages they may have already taken by demurrer or otherwise? A special demurrer has been filed. Is it abolished by the new Act, so far, at least, that no use can be made of it? Can the Court hear it? If so, is judgment to be given upon the demurrer according to the old practice, or according to the new practice,—is the Court to decide according to the very right and justice of the case?

Many doubts of this nature may be suggested, and which can only be solved by the Courts as they arise.

A ridiculous report was spread last week, that the operation of the Act was to be suspended by an Order in Council, because it was supposed to be incapable of being worked without some new rules, which the Judges have not yet framed. We need not say that there was no foundation for such a report. The Act will require some exposition, but it is by no means impracticable, and the Judges will probably consider it most prudent to wait for a term or two, and see how it works, before they attempt to regulate its machinery by rules, under the ample powers vested in them for that purpose.

THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT AND THE DENIZENS OF WESTMINSTER HALL.

(From a Contributor.)

We have received communications from numerous valued correspondents in reference to this statute, the strictures we have felt it our duty from time to time to make upon it, and the opinions we have expressed as to its probable effects as regards the interests of the suitor, the Attorney, and the Bar.

Many of our friends have been unwearied in pointing out omissions and errors, incongruities, contradictions, absurdities even, in this now notorious statute. But to these well-founded complaints we have been unwilling to give space in our pages for three reasons; first, because by the stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 16, the judges may clear away all the rubbish of technicality and special pleading which the Common Law Procedure Act has not removed, and introduce into the Superior Courts a remedy pure, sure, simple, and efficacious as that of the County Court; secondly, because by the "Turkish cadi" powers of amendment conferred on the judges by the 222nd section of the new statute, all crotchet and nicety in pleading, all stringency in practice, may in a short time, if the judge so resolve, be made a matter of history; and thirdly, because, looking upon the Common Law Procedure Act as a "sham," as a mere tub thrown to the whale (i. e. to that portion of the public who demand law reform), we are content to leave its own imperfections to work out the repeal (or perhaps, unhappily, amendment (!) of the statute.

A procedure, worthy of the name should have been such that every Lawyer might have bought a copy of the statute alone, and therewith rested compulsorily contented. It ought to have been such that he that ran might have read. It should have been plain even to the capacity of an alderman or a beadle. What is the fact? Six editions of the statute, with commentaries, more or less voluminous, are before the public, and nearly as many more are advertised for publication when they are ready. No practising Lawyer can venture to take the simplest step in our courts without some guide to the still subsisting mysteries of an action in his hand; the consequences to his client might otherwise be somewhat disagreeable.

The Common Law Procedure Act is thought by the public to be a great reform. Looking to the "Elementary View of an Action at Law," as described in Mr. Kerr's introduction to his Treatise on the Statute, we are amazed at recognising all the ancient combinations and complexities (which we had thought abolished), in full working order and efficiency. Our readers may wonder at this. Let them satisfy themselves by an inspection of the statute itself. In our humble opinion, had the Queen offered a prize for the best essay, pointing out the necessity of a total change in the procedure of the Common Law Courts, for a clean sweep, in short, of special pleading, and all the preposterous crotchets accumulated in Dowling and Meeson, and Welsby, the prize should most assuredly have been gained by the framers of this statute.

What, then, are to be its effects? We do not pretend to the gift of prophecy, but we cannot conceal from our readers the views we have so often expressed, that the last chance of the Courts of Westminster regaining anything like their ancient splendour is for ever gone. A thorough reform might have done something to restore the cause lists. It is too late now, and we look forward to nothing but the extension of the jurisdiction of the County Courts, and the adoption of the further improvements we have often suggested in their procedure, so as to make their process in execution more speedy and effectual. This done, the Courts at Westminster may adjourn sine die.

The suitors will not be sufferers, for there will be none. Old fogies who will stick to the old fogiedom of pigtails and powder, and top-boots, will not adhere to old fogiedom in law. That is too expensive. An indulgence in "old fogiedom" to gratify temper or prejudice, is all very well. It is never done in matters of £ s. d.

The ranks of the Bar may now be advantageously reduced to one-sixth of the present number; and when this has come to pass, and it seems to us inevitable, the Bar itself will, perhaps, rank higher in every respect than it now does. We have heard two movements, which clearly demonstrate the truth of our views. The Special Pleaders, in solemn conclave assembled, have, we are informed, resolved to mark their new pleadings with a fee of 3s. 6d. (!) At first, this proposal threatened an émeute amongst that learned, grave, and decorous, though somewhat abnormal, genus of the variegated races which inhabit the Temple. But the fee-book of Mr. Baron Wood was pleaded as a justification of the innovation, and, on a replication of nul tiel record, the plea was found to be true: the learned Baron had taken 3s. 6d. fees.

The movement and resolution of the Pleaders is perfectly justifiable. They mark their fees, and are bound by no rule as to amount; but what shall we say to a portion of the elderly Junior Bar, who are agitating to cut down the guinea to 10s. 6d., in the vain hope that this will restore business. We lift our humble voice against this unworthy attempt to lower the Bar; to reduce the honorarium to a matter of contract; to make the Barrister an under-seller, and why not, in due course, an advertiser of cheap rates. We call upon the Seniors, and there are some on whom we implicitly depend, to resist this attempt to sink the Junior Bar. Let the Juniors be poor, if such must be their fate; let them struggle on, by literary and other congenial occupations; let them be Grub-street hacks; but let them not break through the great line of demarcation between the duties of Advocate and of Attorney which constitutes the only safeguard of the independence of the Advocate. We wish to denounce in the strongest terms this attempt to destroy the position of the Barrister. We know the secret of the agitation, and it is our duty to both branches of an honourable Profession, which is at present subjected to many temptations calculated to dishonour it, if they be not strenuously resisted, to oppose it in the strongest terms.

But these events shew what is the real position of affairs in Westminster. The only remedy we can suggest is, for five-sixths of the legal body to emigrate at once, either to the populous towns of England, there to form local Bars, or to the "diggings," or to the Bars of the rising empires in the East, South, and West.

NEW CHANCERY ORDERS.

The truth of the announcement which we made some time since, that more orders in Chancery for carrying into operation the new Procedure Act were under consideration, and would be promulgated before Term began, has been proved by the result, although it was confidently denied by some who had too hastily published books on the new practice, which now are rendered almost worthless for want of this necessary accompaniment. They are given in full in their proper place.

We trust that those who had complained of the delay in the publication of Mr. TUDOR'S edition of the new statutes, will now recognise the propriety of the resolution that was come to not to print it until the new orders were issued, so that the entire of the new law and practice might be placed in the hands of the practitioner. The result has fully justified the course that was taken; and if the subscribers have been compelled to wait, they have waited to good purpose.

It is now being printed as fast as possible, and we hope it will be out by next Saturday.

THE NEW ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

LONG looked for, the new orders have come at last. Laborious and yet rapid of thought and action, Lord ST. LEONARDS has done in six months what his predecessors, who had not half so much to think about, could not do in twice that period.

But we are not so much surprised that two Chancellors should have shrunk from the task, when we survey its bulk. Here it lies before us, occupying no less than thirty-three brief-sheets, closely printed. In number the "Rules and Orders" amount to one hundred and sixty-three, besides the forms. We are sorely perplexed how to deal with them. To give them here, in extenso, would occupy a whole double number at the least, excluding all other matter. That is out of the question. But is it worth while to give them in portions, extending over several weeks? We doubt it, especially at this moment, when the new practice in the Courts both of Law and Equity, and the early meeting of Parliament, will claim every column to keep our readers fully acquainted with the decisions of the Courts, their bearing upon the new practice, and the progress of legislation, which we understand is to be full of law reforms.

Unless, therefore, it be particularly desired by a great number of our readers, we propose not to fill so many pages with a mere reprint of these new orders, but to give in lieu of them some papers descriptive of their effect upon the Practice in Bankruptcy.

Already, as we had promised before, they are being printed as an Appendix to Mr. WISE'S edition of the Bankruptcy Act, and to make this edition of them the more useful, the Act itself will be given in full, with notes of all the cases that have been decided upon its construction, so that the whole law and practice as it now stands will be thus placed in the hands of the practitioner. This volume will, we believe, be ready in about ten days, and will be sent to purchasers, by post, in the order in which their names are forwarded. It will be entitled "The New Bankruptcy Law, containing the New Rules and Orders, and the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act, with Notes of all the Cases decided on its Construction," by C. J. HERTSLET, Esq. Barrister-at-Law,—and it will also form an "Appendix to Wise's Bankruptcy Consolidation Act."

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

IT is rumoured, that the Government has prepared a measure for the entire reform, if not for the abolition, of these anomalous tribunals, at least so far as respects all of their jurisdiction that is not strictly ecclesiastical. Should this prove to be true, the Profession and the public will have cause for congratulation, for this reform has been long demanded, has been often attempted, and has always failed, because interest has leagued with party for its defeat. If emanating from a Conservative Government it cannot fail to succeed, for one side of the House will support it for party's sake, and the other from principle, so that between them the public will obtain the justice so long denied.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

COUNTY PALATINE.

COURTS in the counties being assimilated to the Superior Courts, the writ of mittimus with the record, and mandate subsequently, are abolished; and all writs will now be addressed to the sheriff, and not to the chancellor, thus saving that latter gentleman's useless fees.

MR. KENNEDY'S MANIFESTO.

WE now perform our promise to present some further extracts from this extraordinary document, issued by the foremost of that segment of the Bar which has unwisely undertaken to do battle against the Attorneys—forgetting that two can play at the game, and that, if they endeavour to dispense with Attorneys, the Attorneys may retort by dispensing with them, and in such a warfare it would not be difficult to prophesy where the victory will be.

Thus magniloquently does Mr. KENNEDY assert his independence:—

> And now let me ask you, the people—will you allow it to be said, that a member of my profession is degraded by holding communication with you? I will tell you my opinion frankly. I would rather draw a poor man's will for five shillings, than cringe to an attorney for a hundred guineas. I would rather be dependent for my bread on the people at large, than upon a small fraction of the people. Dependence of the last kind is servitude.

There is positive insolence in the argument by which he strives to justify his course:—

> What can be more absurd than to make the attorney patron of the counsel—the inferior of the superior—reversing the natural order of things? Nor has such patronage in any way tended to improve the character of counsel. The tendency is to assimilate it to that of their employers. Few men of a high order of intellect can succeed. Relatives of attorneys are pushed into business. The attorney-race is propagated. Lofty aspirations are checked. A low average of acquirement is considered the best recommendation for a young barrister. He becomes a trader with Sharp and Co. The effects of this may not be visible to the casual observer, but they are not the less certain.

But Mr. KENNEDY'S "lofty aspirations" have issued in the forming of a cheap law society, for whom he is "to do" law at the rate of two guineas per head per annum! Lofty, is it not?

Then this man of "lofty aspirations" proposes his remedy.

Let the young, those who are pure of attorneyism, men of liberal education, ardent minds, and noble impulses, make a simultaneous irruption into the provinces—enter upon their high duties—emancipate themselves from a thraldom which drags down everything great and noble to the level of a wretched mediocrity.

What, by forming similar societies in every town?

But now comes the master grievance—the key to all this attorney-hating patriotism. "My friends," he exclaims, in a paroxysm of indignant fury, "bad as all this is, we have in the last few years witnessed something infinitely worse, the tendency of which is to corrupt all law and destroy all justice. I mean attorney-advocacy."

And then the picture he draws of the consequences, "Gentlemen, scholars, and men of honour excluded from our provincial courts." And by whom? Hear him—

> "In lieu of them there has sprung up a tribe of a different character: the tribe of rascal pettifoggers: creatures that formerly crept not into the light of day, but now swarm like locusts over the country. The courts where such persons practise, having no respect for the advocate, lapse into a sort of easy indolence, which is fatal to the administration of justice. Some of these have been turned into beargardens, some into dens of thieves, where the suitors are betrayed, truth and honour derided, estates given up to wholesale pillage. See who has for many years had the largest practice in our Court of Bankruptcy! A man who, after robbing his clients and others to a hideous and frightful extent, has, by the merest chance, fallen into his own snare and been removed. Another—worse than he—a fugitive on compulsion from a town where he practised before, who was charged with theft at the Old Bailey, was tried at Wawick for obtaining goods under false pretences, and escaped only by getting a material witness out of the way—this plague-spotted monster unblushingly enters the courts of Birmingham, shakes hands with attorneys, and is tolerated.
> As to other lawyers whom I see associating with such men, employing them, and what is more, even plotting and combining with them, I am justified in saying they are not much entitled to our respect.

The true reason why "gentlemen and scholars" are not employed in the County Courts, is simply because they are not wanted for the sort of cases that most commonly are heard there. A scholar is not required to conduct a claim of 5*l.* on the bill of a small tradesman. Clients can employ scholars if they please, but they are conscious of the incongruity, and they prefer the services of a more congenial advocate. That is the true cause of the little patronage which the Bar finds in the County Courts, and however unpleasant may be the fact, it is useless to disguise it. The law gives to suitors the power to employ a Barrister if they desire to do so, and if they will not do so, it can only be because they do not deem his services necessary in such cases, or not worth their cost. This accounts for the failures of the Bar at Birmingham, thus naïvely recorded by Mr. KENNEDY:—

> I find, upon inquiry, that in the last ten years there have been ten barristers come to settle in Birmingham, of whom only one has succeeded—that was Sergeant Allen; and I am informed that his success was owing chiefly to a powerful body, the Licensed Victuallers' Association, who made him their standing counsel. When I arrived here, I found Mr. Claydon had taken up his residence in the town, a gentleman of some standing, and the author of a good legal work. He remained here about fifteen months, and scarcely got a brief. I came myself at the invitation of some leading gentlemen connected with the Queen's College, where a Professorship of Law had just been established, and it was thought that legal students might be found in the town and neighbourhood to whom College lectures would be serviceable. I devoted a considerable portion of time to the preparation of lectures, designed to take in the whole compass of English law. My inaugural address gave universal satisfaction. It was printed at public request. But it produced little fruits—nine pupils at two guineas a piece made the year's profits of the Professorship. I do not complain; it might have been foreseen that lectures would never answer, unless the attendance were compulsory. The want which they undertook to supply was not felt by the parties concerned. The philosophy of six-and-eightpence is remarkably simple. It requires no large amount of liberal study.

Well, but professors of law don't get fat upon air, more than other people. We found at the end of a twelvemonth what Mr. Claydon had predicted—that nothing was to be done through attorneys; and had I not got business for myself, I might have lived upon potato-parings. There are, indeed, some solicitors inclined to employ counsel, and to these who have manifested such disposition I am grateful for the partial support which they have afforded; but their power is small. The tide has set in so strongly for attorney-advocacy, that nothing but a thorough change of system can stop it. In short, it has come to this—if the distinction between barristers and attorneys is to be maintained, attorney-advocacy must be entirely put a stop to. If this cannot be done, nothing will purify the law from pollution, nothing will satisfy the wants of the country, but barristers coming into the provinces, and opening their chambers to the people. And this last is the only true plan.

So that, divested of his eloquent verbiage, Mr. KENNEDY'S argument is in substance, "I and all the Bar who have tried to practise in Birmingham have failed, because the suitors there, having the power to employ us if they please, decline to do so, but prefer the advocacy of an Attorney, either because it is cheaper or better for their purpose, no matter which. Therefore, they must be prevented from doing so by forbidding an Attorney to be heard in any case, and thus suitors must be compelled, however unwilling, to employ us." Without pausing to contest the propriety of the argument on a point which has been irrevocably determined by the Legislature, let us glance at Mr. KENNEDY'S picture of the results.

It is vain to suppose that the mere permission for barristers to practise in the County Courts without an attorney will be sufficient to introduce them to business; or that the clause in the statute which forbids one attorney to retain another will put a stop to the mischief. Nothing is easier than to evade that clause. It was evaded and laughed at the very first week after it came into operation. But if barristers got all the briefs in the County Court, which the non-advocate solicitors have to give, they would not be many. The great majority of cases come to the advocate-attorneys directly, and they, as is well known, combine in every possible way to secure a monopoly to themselves.

Admitting, then, that a repeal is hopeless of the law that permits a suitor to employ, if he pleases, an Attorney to appear for him in the County Court, Mr. KENNEDY proposes as his remedy the desperate expedient of free trade in law! Hear him on this.

Let us have fair competition. We will appeal to the people. We will meet your wants and necessities, my fellow-townsmen.

That is the free-trade principle. The people of England have declared they will have it for corn. Lord Campbell declares in its favour for books. We will extend it to law. The attorneys have combined to close against us the Courts of Bankruptcy and County Courts. They will neither employ us themselves nor let us be employed by others, if they can help it. Give them the benefit of free trade; but let us have it also. The reciprocity must not be (as the Irishman said) all on one side.

Here we pause again. If other more urgent topics do not claim our columns, perhaps we may return once more to the manifesto of Mr. CHARLES RANN KENNEDY.

NEW CHANCERY PRACTICE.(a)

To proceed with our summary and remarks upon that part of the New Chancery Practice which is introduced by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87 (The Suitors in Chancery Relief Act). The 42nd section, after reciting that by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15, a duty is imposed upon every license to be taken out by auctioneers, and that every person who acts in such capacity at any sale where any person becomes a purchaser by competition and being the highest bidder shall, except as thereinafter mentioned, be deemed to carry on the trade of an auctioneer, and be required to take out such license; and that every person who carries on that trade without taking out such license shall, except as thereinafter mentioned, forfeit 100*l.*; and to obviate certain doubts as to liabilities attaching to a Master in Ordinary of the Court, or chief clerk of any such Master, it enacts that they and every other person appointed in that behalf by any such Master, may sell any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interests therein, under any decree or order of the Court, by auction, or by any other mode of sale by competition, without any license as an auctioneer, and without being liable to the duty imposed by the said last-mentioned Act, or any other Act or Acts now in force. (Sec. 42.)

And the Masters and their chief clerks are to be discharged and freed from all liabilities on account of any sale by or by way of auction or competition heretofore made or conducted. (Sec. 43.)

These sections do not provide against the doubt which may arise, as to the liability which may attach, either to the Judges or their chief clerks as to any sales conducted by or before them, and it does not appear to have been borne in mind by the Legislature that, except for the performance of certain temporary duties, the office of Master in Chancery, and with it that of their chief clerks, was about to be abolished.

Power is then given to the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, the patentee of the subpœna office, and for every officer of the Court of Chancery, and for every officer or persons employed in the offices of the Masters in Lunacy or the Registrar in Lunacy, whose salary or emoluments shall be taken away or diminished by the operation of this Act, or by the rules and orders to be made thereunder, to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, to whom full power is given by warrant to direct annual compensation to be made to such persons, and to be payable out of such funds and in such manner as is thereinafter in that behalf directed; and there is a proviso that an account of all such compensations is, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, to be laid upon the table of the House of Commons if Parliament shall be then assembled, or if Parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of Parliament then next following. (Sec. 44.)

Every person now holding any freehold office or offices for life, or during good behaviour, abolished by the Act, in respect of which any fixed salary is payable, is to receive the same for life, as if the Act had not been passed, if Fees of office are payable in respect of such office, he is to receive, after the passing of the Act, during life, an annuity equal to the average annual amount of such fees of office during the three years next preceding the passing of the Act; and the amount of such annuity is to be determined by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury in the same manner, and to be paid out of such funds and in such manner as by the Act is directed with respect to compensations provided for officers whose salary or emoluments shall be taken away or diminished by the Act, or by the rules and orders to be thereunder made. (Sec. 45.)

After the passing of the Act, the Lord Chancellor may, by order on petition, order to be paid to any person now or hereafter holding any office or appointment in the court, (except any Clerk of Enrolments, Clerk of Records and Writs, or Taxing-Master, to whom, subsequently to the passing of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, the Lord Chancellor shall have ordered a retiring allowance to be paid), and to any officer or person employed in the offices of the Masters in Lunacy, or the Registrar in Lunacy, who shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, or shall have continued in any office or offices for twenty years, and shall be desirous of resigning the same, a superannuation allowance under the Act, as the Commissioners of the Treasury shall think proper to direct according to the principles laid down by 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 20; and there is a proviso that the Lord Chancellor in every such order is to state the cause for making the same, and is to cause a copy thereof to be laid on the table of the House of Commons within fourteen days next after the making of the same if Parliament shall be then assembled, and if Parliament shall not be then sitting, then within fourteen days next after the assembling thereof. (Sec. 46.)

Power is given to the Lord Chancellor, after the passing of the Act by order, to remove any officer of the court, or any officer or person employed in the offices of the Masters in Lunacy, or the Registrar in Lunacy, who shall be afflicted with any infirmity which shall disable him from the due execution of his office, and who shall refuse to resign or become incapable of resigning the same, and upon such removal to order to be paid to him an annuity or retiring allowance not exceeding two-third parts of his yearly salary. (Sec. 47.)

Except as in the Act otherwise provided all salaries under this Act shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable quarterly out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General to the account intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account." (Sec. 48.)

The compensation to be made under this Act to the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper chaff-wax, deputy chaff-wax, sealer, and deputy sealer, is to be payable out the of Consolidated Fund, quarterly, free from all taxes and deductions; first payment to be computed from the 28th October, 1852. (Sec. 49.)

Except as in the Act otherwise provided, all compensations and superannuation or retiring allowances thereunder, are due from day to day, but to be payable quarterly out of the interests and dividends of the Government or Parliamentary securities, now or hereafter to be placed in the name of the Accountant-General to the two accounts, intituled, "Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with Surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," or either of them, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor for that purpose, without any draft from the Accountant-General. (Sec. 50.)

All salaries payable, under any Act or Acts now in force, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the account intituled "The Suitors' Fee-Fund Account," by equal quarterly payments, are, after the passing of this Act, to be paid on the 3rd February, the 3rd May, the 3rd August, and the 3rd November in every year. (Sec. 51.)

Power is given to the Lord Chancellor to order payment, and out of such of the funds thereby charged as he shall think fit, of all such sums proper to be paid for providing suitable courts, rooms, and buildings in which the business of the Court of Chancery may from time to time be carried on, and for keeping order in the several courts, and for the care and cleaning of all such courts, rooms, and buildings, and for the rent, taxes, rates, insurance from fire, and other outgoings charged upon or payable for or in respect thereof, and for the enlargement, alteration or improvement, repairs, furnishing, and fitting-up of the same, and for the books and stationery which may be required for the business of the court and the offices thereof, and for the making, writing, printing, counting, and examining official documents and records of the said court and office, and other copies of such documents and records, &c. &c.; and for all other necessary expenses relating thereto, and for the expenses of the purse-bearer and the running porter to the great seal, and the messenger to the Lord Chancellor during his absence from town, and for the petty expenses now borne by the porters' fund; and power is given to the Master of the Rolls to appoint a clerk or clerks to be employed in the office of the secretary at the Rolls to receive by way of salary an annual sum or sums not in the whole in any one year exceeding the sum of 300*l.* (Sec. 52.)

After reciting that many of the fees payable to the Suitors' Fee-Fund have been lately abolished, and several of them have been reduced and under the provisions of the Act, there will be a further reduction of the fees payable to the said fund, and that in order to effect such reduction and at the same time to keep up the said fund to an amount sufficient to satisfy the charges thereon, as well under this Act as under any former Act, it is enacted, that so much of any Act or Acts now in force as directs that the surplus interest, and annual produce which hath arisen and shall arise from the moneys placed out on the several accounts intituled "Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with Surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," beyond what shall be sufficient to answer the purposes of the several Acts relating to such securities, and also the interest produced from the securities purchased with such surplus interest and annual produce, is from time to time to be placed out in the purchase of Government or Parliamentary securities in the name of the Accountant-General, and placed to the credit of the said account, intituled, "Account of Securities purchased with Surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery" shall be repealed, and the surplus interest and annual produce hereafter to arise from the moneys placed out on the two several last-mentioned accounts beyond what shall be sufficient to answer the purposes of this Act, and the several other Acts relating to such securities is to be carried over by the said Accountant-General, and be placed to the said account, intituled, "The Suitors' Fee-Fund Account," and shall thereupon become part of the fund standing to such account. (Sec. 43.)

If at the end of any year there shall be a surplus standing to the credit of the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee-fund Account," after payment of the several salaries and sums of money charged thereon by this Act or any former Act, power is given to the Lord Chancellor by any order to direct that such surplus, or such part thereof as to the Lord Chancellor shall seem fit, shall be invested in the purchase of Parliamentary or Government securities in the name of the said Accountant-General, to be placed to the account intituled "Account of Moneys placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," and the Lord Chancellor may in like manner direct the investment of the dividends or interest to accrue from time to time on the securities now, or at any time hereafter, under this Act, or any former Act, to be placed to the said last-mentioned account, or so much of such dividends and interest as he shall think fit, in the purchase of Parliamentary or Government securities in the name of the said Accountant-General, to be by him placed to the credit of the said last-mentioned account, and as often as there shall be a deficiency in the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee-fund Account," at any of the times appointed for payment of any of the salaries or sums of money charged thereon, the Lord Chancellor may direct the said Accountant-General to make good such deficiency by carrying over and placing to the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee-fund Account," such sum as the Lord Chancellor may consider sufficient for that purpose, out of the interest and dividends to arise from the Government or Parliamentary securities standing to the said account, intituled "Account of Moneys placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," or by a sale of so much of the said securities as may be necessary for that purpose. (Sec. 54.)

Three other Acts passed during last session, may be now briefly noticed. First, An Act for the Amendment of the Law respecting the Property of Lunatics (15 & 16 Vict. c. 47), by which, amongst other things, power is given to the persons intrusted with the care of lunatics to sell or mortgage the reversionary interest of a lunatic in land or stock (secs. 1 and 2); to appoint a receiver of the dividends of stock in a lunatic's name, (sec. 5), and to order receiver to make repairs, leases, &c. Secondly, an Act to extend the provisions of "The Trustee Act, 1850." (15 & 16 Vict. c. 55). And, thirdly, "An Act to abolish the Office of Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts, and to regulate the office of Chief Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy." (15 & 16 Vict. c. 77).

The Acts of last session in reforming the practice and procedure of the Court of Chancery, the whole of which we have now examined, may be considered as by far the boldest, and, it is believed, will eventually prove the most successful attempt to grapple with abuses almost universally acknowledged, but hitherto only partially remedied. Other improvements will, doubtless, follow, the object of which will be that justice may be administered between man and man, with still less delay and less expense.

One thing, however, is clear, the time will shortly arrive when the practice of the Court, now to be learned only from a crude and ill-digested mass of Acts of Parliament, orders, and text-books, must be reduced to an intelligible, well-arranged, and complete Code of procedure, which would serve a suitor or his advisers as a guide for every step which he takes, from the beginning to the end of his controversy.

Until such a Code is produced, however many Acts may be passed or orders issued with the intention of ameliorating the practice of the Court, Chancery reform, although advancing, will nevertheless be incomplete.

THE LEGISLATOR.

NEW STATUTES.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

Cap. LXXXIV.

An Act to make better Provision respecting the Supply of Water to the Metropolis.

(July 1, 1852.)

Cap. LXXXV.

An Act to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead of the Metropolis.

(July 1, 1852.)

Cap. LXXXVI.

An Act to amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding in the High Court of Chancery.

(July 1, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the practice and course of proceeding in the High Court of Chancery: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Practice of engrossing bills on parchment discontinued, and a printed bill to be filed instead.—From and after the time herein-after appointed for the commencement of this Act, the practice of engrossing on parchment bills of complaint or claims to be filed in the said court, and of filing such engrossment, shall be discontinued; and the clerks of records and writs of the said court shall receive and file a printed bill of complaint or claim, in lieu of an engrossment thereof, in like manner as they now receive and file such engrossment,

2. Writs of subpœna and summons to be abolished.—The writ of subpœna to appear to and answer a bill of complaint in the said court, and the writ of summons upon a claim, shall respectively be abolished.

3. Defendants to be served with a printed bill in lieu of the writs of subpœna and summons.—In lieu of serving the defendant to a bill of complaint in the said court with a writ of subpœna to appear to and answer the same, and in lieu of serving the defendant to a claim in the said court with a writ of summons upon such claim, in the mode and according to the practice now adopted in the said court with reference to such writs respectively, the defendant shall be served with a printed bill of complaint or claim, with an indorsement thereon, in the form or to the effect set out in the schedule to this Act, with such variations as circumstances may require, such printed bill of complaint or claim so to be served being previously stamped with a proper stamp by one of the clerks of records and writs, indicating the filing of such bill of complaint or claim, and the date of the filing thereof.

4. The filing and service of a printed bill or claim to have the same effect as the filing and issuing of writs of subpœna and summons.—The filing of a printed bill of complaint or claim in the said court shall have the same effect as the filing of a bill of complaint or claim in the same court, and the issuing of a subpœna or writ of summons thereon respectively, now have, and the service upon the defendant of a printed bill of complaint or of a claim so filed, with such indorsement thereon, so stamped as aforesaid, shall have the same effect as the service on him of a writ of subpœna or writ of summons respectively now has, and shall entitle the plaintiff in such suit to such remedies for default of appearance and otherwise as he is now entitled to in case of due and proper service of a subpœna to appear to and answer a bill of complaint or of a writ of summons upon a claim.

5. As to service of printed bill.—The service upon any defendant of a printed copy of a bill of complaint or of a claim in the said court shall be effected in the same manner as service of a writ of subpœna to appear to and answer a bill of complaint is now effected, save only that it shall not be necessary to produce the original bill or claim, which will be on the files of the Court; provided that the court shall be at liberty to direct substituted service of such printed bill or claim, in such manner and in such cases as it shall think fit.

6. Written copies of bills may be served in certain cases, upon plaintiff undertaking to file a printed copy in fourteen days.—Notwithstanding the provisions hereinbefore contained, the clerks of records and writs of the said court may receive and file a written copy of any bill of complaint praying a writ of injunction or a writ of ne exeat regno, or filed for the purpose either solely or among other things of making an infant a ward of the said Court, upon the personal undertaking of the plaintiff or his solicitor to file a printed copy of such bill within fourteen days, and every bill of complaint so filed shall be deemed and taken to have been filed at the time of filing the written copy thereof; and a written copy of any such bill of complaint, stamped as aforesaid, and with such endorsement thereon as aforesaid, may be served on any defendant thereto, and such service shall have the same effect as the service of a printed copy.

7. Plaintiff to deliver printed copies of bill or claim at rate prescribed by Lord Chancellor.—The plaintiff in any suit to be commenced in the said court after the time hereinafter appointed for the commencement of this Act shall be bound to deliver to the defendant or his solicitor, upon application for the same, such a number of printed copies of his bill of complaint or claim as he shall have occasion for, upon being paid for the same at such rate as shall be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf.

8. Provisions as to filing, &c. prints of original bill extended to amendments.—In certain cases a printed bill may be wholly or partially amended.—Upon the amendment of any bill of complaint or claim to be filed in the said court after the time hereinafter appointed for the commencement of this Act, the provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to filing and serving and delivering printed copies thereof, shall, so far as may be, extend and be applicable to the bill or claim as amended: provided that where according to the present practice of the said Court, an amendment of a bill or claim may be made without a new engrossment thereof, or under such other circumstances as shall be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf, a bill or claim may be wholly or partially amended by written alterations in the printed bill of complaint or claim so to be filed as aforesaid.

9. Power to Lord Chancellor to revive the present practice as to filing of bills, &c.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make any order or orders directing that the provisions hereinbefore contained as to printing or otherwise shall be discontinued or suspended until further order, and to direct that all or any of the present practice as to the filing of bills and claims, and the issuing and service of subpœnas and writs of summons, may be revived and come into operation as if this Act had not passed.

10. Bills of complaint to contain concise narratives of material facts, &c. divided into numbered paragraphs, but not to contain interrogatories.—Every bill of complaint to be filed in the said Court after the time hereinafter appointed for the commencement of this Act shall contain as concisely as may be a narrative of the material facts, matters, and circumstances on which the plaintiff relies, such narrative being divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and each paragraph containing, as nearly as may be, a separate and distinct statement or allegation, and shall pray specifically for the relief which the plaintiff may conceive himself entitled to, and also for general relief; but such bill of complaint shall not contain any interrogatories for the examination of the defendant.

11. Person whose name is used as next friend of any infant, &c. in any suit, &c. to sign a written authority.—Before the name of any person shall be used in any suit to be instituted in the said court as next friend of any infant, married woman, or other party, or as relator in any information, such person shall sign a written authority to the solicitor for that purpose, and such authority shall be filed with the bill, information, or claim.

12. Interrogatories to be filed in record office by plaintiff within time prescribed.—Within a time to be limited by a general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf, the plaintiff in any suit in the said court commenced by bill may, if he requires an answer from any defendant thereto, file in the record office of the said court interrogatories for the examination of the defendant or defendants, or such of them from whom he shall require an answer, and deliver to the defendant or defendants so required to answer, or to his or their solicitor, a copy of such interrogatories, or of such of them as shall be applicable to the particular defendant or defendants; and no defendant shall be called upon or required to put in any answer to a bill unless interrogatories shall have been so filed, and a copy thereof delivered to him or his solicitor within the time so to be limited, or within such further time as the Court shall think fit to direct.

13. Defendants may answer without leave within the time now allowed, though not required so to do by plaintiff; but after that time defendant must have leave.—Whether the plaintiff in any suit in the said court commenced by bill does or does not require any answer from the defendant or any one or more of the defendants to the bill, such defendant or defendants may, without any leave of the Court, put in a plea, answer, or demurrer to the plaintiff's bill within the time now allowed to the defendant for demurring alone to a bill, or within such other time as shall be fixed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf; but after that time a defendant or defendants not required to answer the plaintiff's bill shall not be at liberty to put in a plea, answer, or demurrer to the bill, without leave of the Court; provided that the power of the Court to grant further time for pleading, answering, or demurring to any bill, upon the application of any defendant or defendants thereto, whether required to answer the bill or not, shall remain in full force, and shall not be in anywise prejudiced or affected; provided also, that if the Court shall grant any further time to any defendant for pleading, answering, or demurring to the bill, the plaintiff's right to move for a decree under the provisions hereinafter contained shall in the meantime be suspended.

14. Defendant's answer may contain not only answer to interrogatories, but statements material to his case.—The answer of the defendant to any bill of complaint in the said court may contain, not only the answer of the defendant to the interrogatories so filed as aforesaid, but such statements material to the case as the defendant may think it necessary or advisable to set forth therein, and such answer shall also be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, each paragraph containing as nearly as may be a separate and distinct statement or allegation.

15. Plaintiff may, on expiry of the time for answering, but before replication, move for a decree or decretal order—Affidavits may be filed.—The plaintiff in any suit commenced by bill shall be at liberty, at any time after the time allowed to the defendant for answering the same shall have expired (but before replication), to move the Court, upon such notice as shall in that behalf be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, for such decree or decretal order as he may think himself entitled to; and the plaintiff and defendant respectively shall be at liberty to file affidavits in support of and in opposition to the motion so to be made, and to use the same on the hearing of such motion; and if such motion shall be made after an answer filed in the cause, the answer shall, for the purposes of the motion, be treated as an affidavit.

16. Court may refuse or grant such motion, or make order for further prosecution, &c.—Upon any such motion for a decree or decretal order, it shall be discretionary with the Court to grant or refuse the motion, or to make an order giving such directions for or with respect to the further prosecution of the suit as the circumstances of the case may require, and to make such order as to costs as it may think right.

17. Practice of excepting to bills, answers, &c. for impertinence abolished—Proviso as to costs.—The practice of excepting to bills, answers, and other proceedings in the said court, for impertinence, shall be and the same is hereby abolished: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Court to direct the costs occasioned by any impertinent matter introduced into any proceeding in the said court to be paid by the party introducing the same, upon application being made to the Court for that purpose.

18. Court or judge may order defendant to produce documents, &c. on oath.—It shall be lawful for the Court, upon the application of the plaintiff in any suit in the said Court, whether commenced by bill or by claim, and as to a suit commenced by bill, whether the defendant may or may not have been required to answer the bill, or may or may not have been interrogated as to the possession of documents, to make an order for the production by any defendant, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to matters in question in the suit, as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just.

19. In certain cases defendant, after answer, may file interrogatories for examination of plaintiff.—Defendant may exhibit a cross bill instead of filing interrogatories.—It shall be lawful for any defendant in any suit, whether commenced by bill or by claim, but in suits commenced by bill which the defendant is required to answer, not until after he shall have put in a sufficient answer to the bill, and without filing any cross bill of discovery, to file in the Record-office of the said court interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiff, to which shall be prefixed a concise statement of the subjects on which a discovery is sought, and to deliver a copy of such interrogatories to the plaintiff or his solicitor; and such plaintiff shall be bound to answer such interrogatories, in like manner as if the same had been contained in a bill of discovery filed by the defendant against him on the day when such interrogatories shall have been filed and as if the defendant to such bill of discovery had on the same day duly appeared; and the practice of the Court, with reference to exceptions to answers for insufficiency, or otherwise, shall extend and be applicable to answers put in to such interrogatories; provided that in determining the materiality or relevancy of any such answer, or of any exception thereto, the Court is to have regard, in suits commenced by bill, to the statements contained in the original bill, and in the answer which may have been put in thereto by the defendant exhibiting such interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiff, and in suits commenced by claim, to the statements therein, and in any affidavits which may have been filed either in support thereof or in opposition thereto: provided also, that a defendant, if he shall think fit so to do, may exhibit a cross bill of discovery against the plaintiff, instead of filing interrogatories for his examination.

20. Upon application of defendant after answer, plaintiff may be required to produce documents on oath.—It shall be lawful for the Court, upon the application of any defendant in any suit, whether commenced by bill or by claim, but as to suits commenced by bill where the defendant is required to answer the plaintiff's bill, not until after he has put in a full and sufficient answer to the bill, unless the Court shall make any order to the contrary, to make an order for the production by the plaintiff in such suit, on oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit, as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just.

21. Practice of issuing commissions to take answers, &c. within the jurisdiction of the court abolished.—The practice of the said court, of issuing commissions to take pleas, answers, disclaimers, and examinations in causes and matters pending in the said court shall, with respect to pleas, answers, disclaimers, and examinations taken within the jurisdiction of the court, be and the same is hereby abolished; and any such plea, answer, disclaimer, or examination may be filed without any further or other formality than is required in the swearing and filing of an affidavit.

22. Pleas, declarations, &c. in Chancery, how to be sworn and taken in Scotland, Ireland, the Channel Islands, &c.—All pleas, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, declarations, affirmations, and attestations of honour in causes or matters depending in the High Court of Chancery, and also acknowledgments required for the purpose of enrolling any deed in the said court, shall and may be sworn and taken in Scotland or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any judge, court, notary public, or person lawfully authorised to administer oaths in such country, colony, island, plantation, or place respectively, or before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls in any foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions; and the judges and other officers of the said Court of Chancery shall take judicial notice of the seal or signature, as the case may be, of any such court, judge, notary public, person, consul, or vice-consul attached, appended, or subscribed to any such pleas, answers, disclaimers, examinations, affidavits, affirmations, attestations of honour, declarations, acknowledgments, or other documents to be used in the said court.

23. Penalty for falsely swearing, &c.—All persons swearing, declaring, affirming, or attesting before any person authorised by this Act to administer oaths and take declarations, affirmations, or attestations of honour shall be liable to all such penalties, punishments, and consequences for any wilful and corrupt false swearing, declaring, affirming, or attesting contained therein as if the matter sworn, declared, affirmed, or attested had been sworn, declared, affirmed, or attested before any Court or persons now by law authorised to administer oaths, and take declarations, affirmations, or attestations upon honour.

24. Penalty for forging signature or seal of judge, &c. empowered to administer oaths under this Act.—If any person shall forge the signature or the official seal of any such judge, notary public, or other person lawfully authorised to administer oaths under this Act, or shall tender in evidence any plea, answer, disclaimer, examination, affidavit, or other judicial or official document with a false or counterfeit signature or seal of any such judge, court, notary public, or other person authorised as aforesaid attached or appended thereto, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to the same punishment as any offender under an Act passed in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to facilitate the Admission in Evidence of certain official and other Documents."

25. Answers, &c. to be filed without oath of messenger.—Pleas, answers, disclaimers, or examinations, whether taken by commission out of the jurisdiction of the said Court or otherwise, may be filed without the oath of a messenger, and any alterations made therein previously to the taking thereof shall be authenticated according to the practice now in use with respect to affidavits.

26. Issue may be joined by filing replication as at present.—In suits in the said court commenced by bill, where notice of motion for a decree or decretal order shall not have been given, or, having been given, where a decree or decretal order shall not have been made thereon, issue shall be joined by filing a replication in the form or to the effect of the replication now in use in the said court; and where a defendant shall not have been required to answer and shall not have answered the plaintiff's bill, he shall be considered to have traversed the case made by the bill.

27. Defendant not having been required to answer, and not answering, may move for dismissal of bill for want of prosecution.—Where a defendant to a suit in the said court commenced by bill shall not have been required to answer the bill, and shall not have answered the same, such defendant shall be at liberty to move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, at such times, and under such circumstances, and subject to such restrictions as shall be in that behalf prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor.

28. Practice of Court as to mode of examining witnesses, abolished.—Court may order particular witnesses to be examined upon interrogatories as now practised.—The mode of examining witnesses in causes in the said court, and all the practice of the said Court in relation thereto, so far as such practice shall be inconsistent with the mode hereinafter prescribed of examining such witnesses, and the practice in relation thereto, shall, from and after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, be abolished: Provided always, that the Court may, if it shall think fit, order any particular witness or witnesses within the jurisdiction of the said Court, or any witness or witnesses out of the jurisdiction of the said Court, to be examined upon interrogatories in the mode now practised in the said court, and that with respect to such witness or witnesses the practice of the said Court in relation to the examination of witnesses shall continue in full force, save only so far as the same may be varied by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf, or by any order of the Court with reference to any particular case.

29. Plaintiff, where suits by bill at issue, may give notice to defendant to adduce evidence orally or by affidavit.—When any suit commenced by bill shall be at issue, the plaintiff shall, within such time thereafter as shall be prescribed in that behalf by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, give notice to the defendant that he desires that the evidence to be adduced in the cause shall be taken orally or upon affidavit, as the case may be; and if the plaintiff shall desire the evidence to be adduced upon affidavit, and the defendant, or some or one of the defendants, if more than one, shall not, within such time as shall be prescribed in that behalf by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, give notice to the plaintiff or his solicitor that he or they desire the evidence to be oral, the plaintiff and defendants respectively shall be at liberty to verify their respective cases by affidavit.

30. Evidence may be taken orally if required, but the Court may in certain cases make an order, &c.—When any of the parties to any suit commenced by bill desires that the evidence should be adduced orally, and gives notice thereof to the opposite party, as hereinbefore provided, the same shall be taken orally, in the manner hereinafter provided; provided, that if the evidence be required to be oral merely by a party without a sufficient interest in the matters in question, the Court may, upon application in a summary way, make such order as shall be just.

31. Witnesses to be examined by one of the examiners of the Court in the presence of the parties.—All witnesses to be examined orally under the provisions of this Act shall be so examined by or before one of the examiners of the court, or by or before an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court, the examiner being furnished by the plaintiff with a copy of the bill, and of the answer, if any, in the cause; and such examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses so examined orally shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination; and such examination, cross-examination, and re-examination shall be conducted as nearly as may be in the mode now in use in Courts of Common Law with respect to a witness about to go abroad, and not expected to be present at the trial of a cause.

32. Depositions to be taken down in writing and read over to witness, who shall sign the same in presence of the parties, but if he refuse to sign, examiner may, and state any special matter he may think fit.—The depositions taken upon any such oral examination as aforesaid shall be taken down in writing by the examiner, not ordinarily by question and answer, but in the form of a narrative, and when completed shall be read over to the witness, and signed by him in the presence of the parties, or such of them as may think fit to attend: provided always, that in case the witness shall refuse to sign the said depositions, then the examiner shall sign the same, and such examiner may, upon all examinations, state any special matter to the Court as he shall think fit: provided also, that it shall be in the discretion of the examiner to put down any particular question or answer, if there should appear any special reason for doing so; and any question or questions which may be objected to shall be noticed or referred to by the examiner in or upon the depositions, and he shall state his opinion thereon to the counsel, solicitors, or parties, and shall refer to such statement on the face of the depositions, but he shall not have power to decide upon the materiality or relevancy of any question or questions; and the Court shall have power to deal with the costs of immaterial or irrelevant depositions as may be just.

33. If parties refuse to be sworn or to answer any lawful questions, the same course to be pursued as is now adopted—Proviso as to witness demurring to questions.—If any person produced before any such examiner as a witness shall refuse to be sworn, or to answer any lawful question put to him by the examiner, or by either of the parties, or by his or their counsel, solicitor, or agent, the same course shall be adopted with respect to such witness as is now pursued in the case of a witness produced for examination before an examiner of the said court, upon written interrogatories, and refusing to be sworn, or to answer some lawful question: provided always, that if any witness shall demur or object to any question or questions which may be put to him, the question or questions so put, and the demurrer or objection of the witness thereto, shall be taken down by the examiner, and transmitted by him to the Record Office of the said court, to be there filed; and the validity of such demurrer or objection shall be decided by the Court; and the costs of and occasioned by such demurrer or objection shall be in the discretion of the Court.

34. Original depositions to be transmitted to the Record Office, and filed.—When the examination of witnesses before any examiner shall have been concluded, the original depositions, authenticated by the signature of such examiner, shall be transmitted by him to the Record Office of the said court, to be there filed, and any party to the suit may have a copy thereof or of any part or portion thereof, upon payment for the same in such manner as shall be provided by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf.

35. Commission for examination of witnesses dispensed with, and examiner empowered to administer oaths.—It shall not be necessary to sue out any commission for the examination of any witnesses within the jurisdiction of the said Court; and any examiner appointed by any order of the Court shall have the like power of administering oaths as commissioners now have under commissions issued by the Court for the examination of witnesses.

36. Affidavits as to particular facts, &c. may be used.—Notwithstanding that the plaintiff or the defendant in any suit in the said court may have elected that the evidence in the cause should be taken orally, affidavits by particular witnesses, or affidavits as to particular facts or circumstances, may, by consent, or by leave of the Court obtained upon notice, be used on the hearing of any cause; and such consent, with the approbation of the Court, may be given by or on the part of married women or infants or other persons under disability.

37. Affidavits to be divided into paragraphs numbered.—Every affidavit to be used in the said Court shall be divided into paragraphs, and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively, and, as nearly as may be, shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject.

38. Evidence oral or by affidavit, on both sides, to be closed within time prescribed by general order—Witnesses by affidavit to be subject to oral cross-examination, and afterwards to re-examination—Witnesses bound to attend—As to expenses attending cross-examinations, &c.—The evidence on both sides in any suit in the said court, whether taken orally or upon affidavit, shall be closed within such time or respective times after issue joined as shall in that behalf be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, but with power to the Court to enlarge the same as it may see fit; and after the time fixed for closing the evidence no further evidence, whether oral or by affidavit, shall be receivable, without special leave of the Court previously obtained for that purpose: provided always, that any witness who has made an affidavit filed by any party to a cause shall be subject to oral cross-examination within such time after the time fixed for closing the evidence as shall be prescribed in that behalf by any order of the Lord Chancellor, by or before an examiner, in the same manner as if the evidence given by him in his affidavit had been given by him orally before the examiner, and after such cross-examination may be re-examined orally by or on the part of the party by whom such affidavit was filed; and such witness shall be bound to attend before such examiner to be so cross-examined and re-examined, upon receiving due and proper notice, and payment of his reasonable expenses, in like manner as if he had been duly served with a writ of subpœna ad testificandum before such examiner; and the expenses attending such cross-examination and re-examination shall be paid by the parties respectively, in like manner as if the witness so to be cross-examined were the witness of the party cross-examining, and shall be deemed costs in the cause of such parties respectively, unless the Court shall think fit otherwise to direct.

39. Court may require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness, &c. and determine payment of the costs.—Upon the hearing of any cause depending in the said court, whether commenced by bill or by claim, the Court, if it shall see fit so to do, may require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause, and may direct the costs of and attending the production and examination of such witness or party, to be paid by such of the parties to the suit or in such manner as it may think fit.

40. Any party in a cause may by subpœna require attendance of any witness before an examiner.—Any party in any cause or matter depending in the said court may, by a writ of subpœna ad testificandum or duces tecum, require the attendance of any witness before an examiner of the said court, or before an examiner specially appointed for the purpose, and examine such witness orally, for the purpose of using his evidence upon any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court, in like manner as such witness would be bound to attend and be examined with a view to the hearing of a cause; and any party having made an affidavit to be used or which shall be used on any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the Court shall be bound on being served with such writ to attend before an examiner, for the purpose of being cross-examined: provided always, that the Court shall always have a discretionary power of acting upon such evidence as may be before it at the time, and of making such interim orders, or otherwise, as may appear necessary to meet the justice of the case.

41. Evidence subsequent to hearing to be taken the same as prior to hearing.—In cases where it shall be necessary for any party to any cause depending in the said court to go into evidence subsequently to the hearing of such cause, such evidence shal be taken as nearly as may be in the manner hereinbefore provided with reference to the taking of evidence with a view to such hearing.

42. Defendant not to take objection for want of parties in any case to which rules herein set forth shall extend.—It shall not be competent to any defendant in any suit in the said court to take any objection for want of parties to such suit, in any case to which the rules next hereinafter set forth extend: and such rules shall be deemed and taken as part of the law and practice of the said court, and any law or practice of the said court inconsistent therewith shall be and is hereby abrogated and annulled.

Rule 1. Any residuary legatee or next of kin may, without serving the remaining residuary legatees or next of kin, have a decree for the administration of the personal estate of a deceased person.

Rule 2. Any legatee interested in a legacy charged upon real estate, and any person interested in the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold, may, without serving any other legatee or person interested in the proceeds of the estate, have a decree for the administration of the estate of a deceased person.

Rule 3. Any residuary devisee or heir may, without serving any co-residuary devisee or co-heir, have the like decree.

Rule 4. Any one of several cestuis que trust under any deed or instrument may, without serving any other of such cestuis que trust, have a decree for the execution of the trusts of the deed or instrument.

Rule 5. In all cases of suits for the protection of property pending litigation, and in all cases in the nature of waste, one person may sue on behalf of himself and of all persons having the same interest.

Rule 6. Any executor, administrator, or trustee may obtain a decree against any one legatee, next of kin, or cestuique trust for the administration of the estate, or the execution of the trusts.

Rule 7. In all the above cases the Court, if it shall see fit, may require any other person or persons to be made a party or parties to the suit, and may, if it shall see fit, give the conduct of the suit to such person as it may deem proper, and may make such order in any particular case as it may deem just for placing the defendant on the record on the same footing in regard to costs as other parties having a common interest with him in the matters in question.

Rule 8. In all the above cases the persons who, according to the present practice of the Court, would be necessary parties to the suit, shall be served with notice of the decree, and after such notice they shall be bound by the proceedings in the same manner as if they had been originally made parties to the suit, and they may by an order of course have liberty to attend the proceedings under the decree; and any party so served may, within such time as shall in that behalf be prescribed by the general order of the Lord Chancellor, apply to the Court to add to the decree.

Rule 9. In all suits concerning real or personal estate which is vested in trustees under a will, settlement, or otherwise, such trustees shall represent the persons beneficially interested under the trust, in the same manner and to the same extent as the executors or administrators in suits concerning personal estate represent the persons beneficially interested in such personal estate; and in such cases it shall not be necessary to make the persons beneficially interested under the trusts parties to the suit; but the Court may, upon consideration of the matter, on the hearing, if it shall so think fit, order such persons, or any of them, to be made parties.

43. Practice of setting down a cause on objection for want of parties abolished.—The practice of the said Court of setting down a cause merely on an objection for want of parties to the suit shall be abolished.

44. Court may proceed in any suit, &c. without representative of deceased person, or may appoint one.—If in any suit or other proceeding before the Court it shall appear to the Court that any deceased person who was interested in the matters in question has no legal personal representative, it shall be lawful for the Court either to proceed in the absence of any person representing the estate of such deceased person, or to appoint some person to represent such estate for all the purposes of the suit or other proceeding, on such notice to such person or persons, if any, as the Court shall think fit, either specially or generally by public advertisements; and the order so made by the said Court, and any orders consequent thereon, shall bind the estate of such deceased person in the same manner in every respect as if there had been a duly constituted legal personal representative of such deceased person, and such legal personal representative had been a party to the suit or proceeding, and had duly appeared and submitted his rights and interests to the protection of the Court.

45. Creditor, &c. may summon executor, &c. to show cause why an order for administration of personal estate should not be granted—Power to judge to order administration of such estate.—It shall be lawful for any person claiming to be a creditor, or a specific pecuniary or residuary legatee, or the next of kin, or some or one of the next of kin, of a deceased person, to apply for and obtain as of course, without bill or claim filed, or any other preliminary proceedings, a summons from the Master of the Rolls or any of the Vice-Chancellors requiring the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of such deceased person, to attend before him at chambers, for the purpose of showing cause why an order for the administration of the personal estate of the deceased should not be granted; and upon proof by affidavit of the due service of such summons, or on the appearance in person or by his solicitor or counsel of such executor or administrator, and upon proof by affidavit of such other matters, if any, as such judge shall require, it shall be lawful for such judge, if in his discretion he shall think fit so to do, to make the usual order for the administration of the estate of the deceased, with such variations, if any, as the circumstances of the case may require; and the order so made shall have the force and effect of a decree to the like effect made on the hearing of a cause or claim between the same parties; provided that such judge shall have full discretionary power to grant or refuse such order, or to give any special directions touching the carriage or execution of such order, and in the case of applications for any such order by two or more different persons or classes of persons, to grant the same to such one or more of the claimants or of the classes of claimants as he may think fit; and if the judge shall think proper, the carriage of the order may subsequently be given to such party interested, and upon such terms as the judge may direct.

46. Copy of summons to be filed in Record Office of Court.—A duplicate copy of such summons shall, previously to the service thereof, be filed in the Record Office of the said Court; and no service thereof upon any executor or administrator shall be of any validity unless the copy so served shall be stamped with a stamp of such office indicating the filing thereof; and the filing of such summons shall have the same effect with respect to lis pendens as the filing of a bill or claim.

47. Creditor, &c. may obtain an order.—It shall be lawful for any person claiming to be a creditor of any deceased person, or interested under his will, to apply for and obtain in a summary way, in the manner hereinbefore provided with respect to the personal estate of the deceased person, an order for the administration of the real estate of a deceased person where the whole of such real estate is by devise vested in trustees who are by the will empowered to sell such real estate, and authorised to give receipts for the rents and profits thereof, and for the produce of the sale of such real estate; and all the provisions hereinbefore contained with respect to the application for such order in relation to the personal estate of a deceased person, and consequent thereon, shall extend and be applicable to an application for such order as last hereinbefore mentioned with respect to real estate.

48. Court may direct sale of mortgaged property instead of a foreclosure on such terms as it may think fit.—It shall be lawful for the Court in any suit for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption in any mortgaged property, upon the request of the mortgagee, or of any subsequent incumbrancer, or of the mortgagor, or any person claiming under them respectively, to direct a sale of such property, instead of a foreclosure of such equity of redemption, on such terms as the Court may think fit to direct, and if the Court shall so think fit, without previously determining the priorities of incumbrances, or giving the usual or any time to redeem; provided that if such request shall be made by any such subsequent incumbrancer, or by the mortgagor, or by any person claiming under them respectively, the Court shall not direct any such sale, without the consent of the mortgagee or the persons claiming under him, unless the party making such request shall deposit in court a reasonable sum of money, to be fixed by the Court, for the purpose of securing the performance of such terms as the Court may think fit to impose on the party making such request.

49. Suit not to be dismissed for misjoinder of plaintiffs, but Court may modify its decree according to special circumstances.—No suit in the said court shall be dismissed by reason only of the misjoinder of persons as plaintiffs therein; but wherever it shall appear to the Court that, notwithstanding the conflict of interest in the co-plaintiffs, or the want of interest in some of the plaintiffs, or the existence of some ground of defence affecting some or one of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs, or some or one of them, are or is entitled to relief, the Court shall have power to grant such relief, and to modify its decree, according to the special circumstances of the case, and for that purpose to direct such amendments, if any, as may be necessary, and at the hearing, before such amendments are made, to treat any one or more of the plaintiffs as if he or they was or were a defendant or defendants in the suit, and the remaining or other plaintiff or plaintiffs was or were the only plaintiff or plaintiffs on the record; and where there is a misjoinder of plaintiffs, and the plaintiff having an interest shall have died leaving a plaintiff on the record without an interest, the Court may, at the hearing of the cause, order the cause to stand revived as may appear just, and proceed to a decision of the cause, if it shall see fit, and to give such directions as to costs or otherwise as may appear just and expedient.

50. No suit to be objected to because only declaratory order sought.—No suit in the said court shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for the Court to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief.

51. Court may decide between some of the parties without making others interested parties to the suit —Proviso.—It shall be lawful for the Court to adjudicate on questions arising between parties notwithstanding that they may be some only of the parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen, or that the property in question is comprised with other property in the same settlement, will, or other instrument, without making the other parties interested in the property respecting which the question may have arisen, or interested under the same settlement, will, or other instrument, parties to the suit, and without requiring the whole trusts and purposes of the settlement, will, or other instrument to be executed under the direction of the Court, and without taking the accounts of the trustees or other accounting parties, or ascertaining the particulars or amount of the property touching which the question or questions may have arisen: Provided always, that if the Court shall be of opinion that the application is fraudulent or collusive, or for some other reason ought not to be entertained, it shall have power to refuse to make the order prayed.

52. In case of abatement, &c. of suit, an order may be made, which shall have same effect as a bill of revivor.—Upon any suit in the said court becoming abated by death, marriage, or otherwise, or defective by reason of some change or transmission of interest or liability, it shall not be necessary to exhibit any bill of revivor or supplemental bill in order to obtain the usual order to revive such suit, or the usual or necessary decree or order to carry on the proceedings; but in order to the effect of the usual order to revive or of the usual supplemental decree, may be obtained as of course upon an allegation of the abatement of such suit, or of the same having become defective, and of the change or transmission of interest or liability; and an order so obtained, when served upon the party or parties who according to the present practice of the said Court would be defendant or defendants to the bill of revivor or supplemental bill, shall from the time of such service be binding on such party or parties in the same manner in every respect as if such order had been regularly obtained according to the existing practice of the said court; and such party or parties shall thenceforth become a party or parties to the suit, and shall be bound to enter an appearance thereto in the office of the clerks of records and writs, within such time and in like manner as if he or they had been duly served with process to appear to a bill of revivor or supplemental bill filed against him; provided that it shall be open to the party or parties so served, within such time after service as shall be in that behalf prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor, to apply to the Court by motion or petition to discharge such order on any ground which would have been open to him on a bill of revivor or supplemental bill, stating the previous proceedings in the suit and the alleged change or transmission of interest or liability, and praying the usual relief consequent thereon: provided also, that if any party so served shall be under any disability other than coverture, such order shall be of no force or effect as against such party until a guardian or guardians ad litem shall have been duly appointed for such party, and such time shall have elapsed thereafter as shall be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf.

53. New facts, &c. after commencement of suit, to be introduced as amendments to bill, &c.—It shall not be necessary to exhibit any supplemental bill in the said court for the purpose only of stating or putting in issue facts or circumstances which may have occurred after the institution of any suit; but such facts or circumstances may be introduced by way of amendment into the original bill of complaint in the suit if the cause is otherwise in such a state as to allow of an amendment being made in the bill, and if not, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to state such facts or circumstances on the record, in such manner, and subject to such rules and regulations with respect to the proof thereof, and the affording the defendant leave and opportunity of answering and meeting the same as shall in that behalf be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor.

54. Where account required to be taken, Court may give special directions as to the mode of taking same.—It shall be lawful for the Court, in any case where any account is required to be taken, to give such special directions, if any, as it may think fit with respect to the mode in which the account should be taken or vouched, and such special directions may be given, either by the decree or order directing such account, or by any subsequent order or orders, upon its appearing to the Court that the circumstances of the case are such as to require such special directions; and particularly it shall be lawful for the Court, in cases where it shall think fit so to do, to direct that in taking the account the books of account in which the accounts required to be taken have been kept, or any of them, shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the parties interested to take such objections thereto as they may be advised.

55. Court may order real estate to be sold, if required.—If after a suit shall have been instituted in the said court in relation to any real estate it shall appear to the Court that it will be necessary or expedient that the said real estate or any part thereof should be sold for the purposes of such suit, it shall be lawful for the said Court to direct the same to be sold at any time after the institution thereof, and such sale shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if directed to be made by a decree or decretal order on the hearing of such cause; and any party to the suit in possession of such estate, or in receipt of the rents and profits thereof, shall be compelled to deliver up such possession or receipt to the purchaser or such other person as the Court shall direct.

56. Before sale of estate abstract of title to be laid before some conveyancing counsel.—Time for delivery of abstract to be specified in conditions of sale.—Before any estate or interest shall be put up for sale under a decree or order of the Court of for sale under a decree or order of the Court of Chancery, an abstract of the title thereto shall, with the approbation of the Court, be laid before some conveyancing counsel to be approved by the Court, for the opinion of such counsel thereon, to the intent that the said Court may be the better enabled to give such directions as may be necessary respecting the conditions of sale of such estate or interest, and other matters connected with the sale thereof; and when an estate or interest shall be so put up for sale, a time for the delivery of the abstract of title thereto to the purchaser or his solicitor shall be specified in the said conditions of sale.

57. Where real or personal property is the subject of proceedings, Court may allow to parties part or the whole of the annual income.—Where any real or personal property shall form the subject of any proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and the Court shall be satisfied that the same will be more than sufficient to answer all the claims thereon which ought to be provided for in such suit, it shall be lawful for the said Court at any time after the commencement of such proceedings to allow to the parties interested therein, or any one or more of them, the whole or part of the annual income of such real property, or a part of such personal property, or a part or the whole of the income thereof, up to such time as the said Court shall direct, and for that purpose to make such orders as may appear to the said Court necessary or expedient.

58. Practice as to injunctions to stay proceedings at law to be assimilated to practice as to special injunctions.—The practice of the Court of Chancery with respect to injunctions for the stay of proceedings at law shall, so far as the nature of the case will admit, be assimilated to the practice of such Court with respect to special injunctions generally, and such injunctions may be granted upon interlocutory applications supported by affidavit, in like manner as other special injunctions are granted by the said Court.

59. Answer of defendant on motion for injunction or receiver, &c. to be regarded as an affidavit.—Upon application by motion or petition to the Court in any suit depending therein for an injunction or a receiver, or to dissolve an injunction, or discharge an order appointing a receiver, the answer of the defendant shall, for the purpose of evidence on such motion or petition, be regarded merely as an affidavit of the defendant, and affidavits may be received and read in opposition thereto.

60. In case directions as to practice, &c. not followed, Court may make order and award costs.—In case any of the directions herein contained with respect to the practice and course of proceeding in the said Court of Chancery shall by mistake of parties fail to be followed in any suit or proceeding in the said Court, it shall be lawful for the said Court, if it shall think fit, upon payment of such costs as such Court shall direct, to make such order giving effect to, and rectifying such proceedings as may be justified by the merits of the case.

61. Court of Chancery not to direct cases to be stated for opinions of Court of Common Law, but to decide the same.—It shall not be lawful for the said Court of Chancery, in any cause or matter, to direct a case to be stated for the opinion of any Court of Common Law, but the said Court of Chancery shall have full power to determine any questions of law, which in the judgment of the said Court of Chancery shall be necessary to be decided previously to the decision of the equitable question at issue between the parties.

62. Court may determine legal title of party seeking relief without requiring parties to proceed to law.—In cases where, according to the present practice of the Court of Chancery, such Court declines to grant equitable relief until the legal title or right of the party or parties seeking such relief shall have been established in a proceeding at law, the said Court may itself determine such title or right without requiring the parties to proceed at law to establish the same.

63. Lord Chancellor and Judges to make general rules and orders for carrying purposes of this Act into effect.—The Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and the Vice Chancelors, or any three of them, may and they are hereby required from time to time to make general rules and orders for carrying the purposes of this Act into effect, and for regulating the times and form and mode of procedure, and generally the practice of the said Court, in respect of the matters to which this Act relates, and for regulating the fees and allowances to all officers of the said Court, and solicitors thereof, in respect to such matters, and, so far as may be found expedient for altering the course of proceeding herein-before prescribed in respect to the matters to which this Act relates, or any of them; and such rules and orders may from time to time be rescinded or altered by the like authority; and all such rules and orders shall take effect as general orders of the said Court.

64. Such general rules and orders to be laid before Parliament.—All general rules and orders of the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, shall immediately after the making and issuing thereof be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within five days after the next meeting thereof: provided always, that if either of the Houses of Parliament shall, by any resolution passed within thirty-six days after such rules or orders have been laid before such Houses of Parliament, resolve that the whole or any part of such rules or orders ought not to continue in force, such rules or orders ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole, or such part thereof as shall be so included in such resolution, shall, from and after such resolution, cease to be binding.

65. Power to Lord Chancellor to increase salaries of examiners—If examiner decline to continue, Lord Chancellor may order a certain annuity to be paid to him.—And whereas the present examiners of the court have been heretofore appointed for the purpose only of taking the depositions of witnesses in private, and upon written interrogatories prepared by counsel: and whereas the public examination of witnesses orally, under the provisions of this Act, will materially alter the nature of the duties and increase the responsibility of the said examiners: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor and he is hereby empowered to order and direct a sum to be paid to each of the said examiners, out of the fund intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund," from and after the first of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, such a sum as shall together with the sums now payable make up the annual sum of one thousand five hundred pounds: provided always, that if either of the present examiners should feel himself unable or should decline to continue his services in the same office upon the conditions provided under this Act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to order to be paid to such examiner retiring an annuity of an amount not exceeding three-fourths of the salary which he has hitherto received.

66. Construction of terms.—In the construction of this Act, the words "bill of complaint" shall mean also and include information; the word "affidavit" shall mean also and include affirmation; the expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being; and the expression "general order of the Lord Chancellor" shall mean general order of the Lord Chancellor with such advice and assistance as aforesaid.

67. Commencement of Act.—This Act shall commence and take effect from and after the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two; provided that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, to make and issue any such general rules or orders as aforesaid at any time after the passing of this Act, so as the same be not made to take effect before the time appointed for the commencement of this Act.

SCHEDULE.

Form of Indorsement on Bill of Complaint.

VICTORIA R.—To the within-named defendant C. D., greeting.

We command you ["and every of you," where there is more than one defendant], That within eight days after service hereof on you, exclusive of the day of such service, you cause an appearance to be entered for you in our High Court of Chancery to the within bill of complaint of the within-named A. B., and that you observe what our said Court shall direct. Witness ourself at Westminster, the day of in the year of our reign.

Summary.

ALTHOUGH the Health of Towns Act has been so long in operation, and is extensively adopted in all parts of the country, the Courts have been but rarely called upon to put a construction upon its provisions. Nevertheless, as we know, some practical difficulties have arisen in its application that would have led to litigation in former times, but which are now compromised by the parties concerned rather than have recourse to the Courts. A case reported from the Oxford Circuit (Edwards v. Lowndes, 20 Law T. Rep. 43) is remarkable for raising several questions upon the statute. It was an an action by an organist against the Board of Health of Burslem, to recover his salary, under the following circumstances. By a local Market Act, moneys received under it were to be applied, inter alia, to payment of the salary of an organist of a church. By a confirmed order, this Act was repealed, and the property held under it transferred to the local Board of Health, and it directed that all the debts, &c. of the one should be paid by the other. The Board had not appropriated any of the funds to payment of the organist, and upon the reading of the local Act, the Judge (CRESSWELL) was of opinion that the action would not lie. The 139th section of the Health of Towns Act provides for a month's notice of action against the local Board, or any of its officers, "for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Act;" but this was held not to be applicable under the above circumstances.

SMALL TENEMENTS RATING-ACT.

By the 6th section of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, it is enacted, "That every such owner so rated as aforesaid (vide the prior sections) shall have the same right of appeal (subject to the same conditions) against rates, and the same right to vote in vestry, as if he were an occupier duly rated in respect of the same tenement." Will any of your experienced legal correspondents inform me whether, according to the proper construction of this section, a landlord, supposing him to be the owner of—say—six cottages, let to six different tenants (each of whom before the passing of this Act paid the rates in respect of the cottage he occupies, and each cottage being assessed at or under 6*l.*) can give six votes for such six cottages (i. e. a vote for each cottage), or can he give but one vote for the whole six? And is his voting in vestry under this section exclusively restricted to matters relating to the relief of the poor? (vide the construction of the word vestry in section 9.) LEX.

NOTICES OF MEETING.

IN answer to "A Subscriber," wishing to know the practice as to giving notice by advertisement of meetings, &c. under Act of Parliament, I beg to say, that it is my opinion that the Act in every such case, when requiring a certain number of days' advertisement, does not require a repetition of the advertisement daily or weekly (unless specially enacted), but means that the advertisement shall be published the stated time before the meeting, &c. as the case may be.

My practice, when advertising turnpike meetings under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, ss. 55, 69, is to insert the notice of meeting in the newspaper once only, the requisite time beforehand. W.

A JUVENILE FORGER.—John Hildeth, an intelligent-looking lad, about fourteen years of age, was committed for trial at the Liverpool police-court on Wednesday, on a charge of forgery. In the afternoon of Tuesday, the prisoner, who held the situation of errand-boy in the office of Mr. Charles Kreitmair, called at the Royal Bank, where his employer had business transactions, and presented a cheque for 5*l.* 2s. which was paid him. Suspecting that something was wrong, one of the bank clerks sent notice of the fact to Mr. Kreitmair, who found that the boy had forged his signature very cleverly. He said nothing to the prisoner about the forgery, but sent him with a note to the Royal Bank, where he was given into custody. The prisoner made no defence.

PROVINCIAL CEMETERIES.—The following letter has been received from the General Board of Health by the mayor of Newport, from which it appears that some measures are in contemplation with respect to public cemeteries in the forthcoming session:—

"Sir,—I am directed by the General Board of Health to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th inst., pressing upon the board the importance of providing in the ensuing session a legislative remedy for the evils arising from the inability of local boards of health to close noxious burial places, and to establish new public cemeteries; and in reply, I am to inform you that the board are authorised to state that her Majesty's Government entertain a hope of being able to introduce into Parliament during the approaching session a measure to facilitate the creation of provincial cemeteries.

THE REVISING BARRISTERS.—For the last three years, as appears by a return to the House of Commons, the expense incurred on account of the barristers appointed to revise the lists of voters was 17,850*l.* a-year.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

THE rule is that an assignee of a lease cannot, by assigning over, get rid of his liabilities for breaches of covenant committed during the period of his own occupation. Where A. by will gave B. leaseholds absolutely, subject to the rent and covenants contained in the lease, and gave her residuary estate to C. subject to payment of her debts, &c. and the lease contained covenants for repair, and at A.'s death there had been dilapidations, but it did not appear whether they had taken place during her tenancy or during the previous one after which she had taken it under a will, B. was held so to take the leaseholds cum onere, and that C.'s executors were not liable to repair under the covenant. (Hickling v. Boyer, 20 Law T. Rep. 33.)

It will be observed, and should be noted in the practitioner's text-book, that Lord ST. LEONARDS has decided in The Dean and Chapter of Ely v. Bliss, 20 Law T. Rep. 35, that the right to tithes as against an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate is not barred under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, by non-payment for twenty years. The whole of this judgment should be read with attention as a masterly specimen of the manner of construing doubtful statutes. His Lordship expressed strong disapproval of the modern introduction of "the interpretation clause," which he considers produces more doubts and difficulties than it clears.

A husband cannot effectually charge the reversionary interest of his wife in a leasehold, limited to her only if she survives. In Duberly v. Day, 20 Law T. Rep. 38, a renewable leasehold of the wife was settled in trust for her separate use during their joint lives, if the wife survived, subject to a trust to raise portions for her only; if the husband survived, to him for life, with remainder to the issue. They joined in charging the whole property. The wife survived, and the charge was held to be invalid as against her.

A point in the Law of Vendors and Purchasers was decided in Kinder v. Streeter, 20 Law T. Rep. 40, namely, that where a suit is rendered necessary by the death of the vendor, who had sold, but delayed the conveyance at the request of the purchaser, the costs of such suit must be borne by the purchaser.

Some Wills Cases are worth noting. In Waite v. Combes, 20 Law T. Rep. 40, the word "moneys" was held to pass stock in the public funds. In Blunn v. Bell, 20 Law T. Rep. 40, the tenant for life of the residue of an estate was held to be entitled to enjoy the leasehold property in specie, but not any other personal estate of the testator.

A case of some interest in the Law of Executors is reported from Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY. It was there laid down that an executor may deal with the assets of his testator to raise money for the purposes of the estate. "But," said the VICE-CHANCELLOR, "this principle does not apply when, having obtained money without security, he afterwards gives security on the testator's property for the antecedent loans." As a general rule, also, the lender of money to an executor is not required to see to its application; but if he first advances money on the mere personal security of the executor, and afterwards takes a security on the property, the onus of proof is upon the lender to shew that the money was really applied to the purposes of the estate. Nor will the Court assume that it was properly applied, but will direct an inquiry if it was so in fact. (Miles v. Durnford, 20 Law T. Rep. 41.)

MORTGAGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have been in practice fourteen years, during which I have drawn mortgages continually so as to include in about twenty-four folios a power of sale and covenant to insure; if necessary, an assignment of a policy, with power of attorney, can easily be comprised in thirty folios. I have sold under the power of sale in such a mortgage, and found no difficulty.

If it were necessary to omit any provision from a mortgage, the covenant to insure, or any other of the covenants, except that for payment, had better be omitted, than the power of sale, which is most wanted in small mortgages, the premiums comprised in which, being also small, will not bear the expense of a foreclosure.

If attorneys will only do what is necessary, and charge for that, the complaints about their bills in conveyancing matters will be very much reduced; but if they will draw abstracts where none are wanted, or load their drafts with useless verbiage, they cannot wonder if the public think, that there must be something wrong in the total, though they do not understand the details of their costs.

The best remedy for the great expense of conveyancing will be, I think, first, that lawyers should not think of their bills, whilst they are transacting their client's business: secondly, that there should be a cheap and easy mode of taxing bills; and, thirdly, that attorneys should encourage their clients to tax them. At any rate, I think that these should be tried before an important part of an instrument is omitted to make it cheap; this proposal makes one think of the saying "cheap and nasty."

CONVEYANCING CHARGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—It gives me great pleasure to see this subject once more discussed in your paper. The time has come when the question of professional remuneration must be placed on a better basis, and there cannot be any system of remuneration more satisfactory, both to the attorney and his client, than a commission on the amount of the consideration money mentioned in the deed, in all cases where the consideration is more than nominal. Have you any friend who will undertake to introduce a measure of this nature into Parliament? It is not likely to encounter any opposition; and, if it be passed into a law, you will earn for yourself the gratitude of the whole Profession.

FORECLOSURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I should say your contributor, or the writer of the article "Foreclosure," in the last number of the Law Times, cannot have a practical knowledge of mortgage transactions and deeds. I am at a loss to conceive how the remedy by "claim" and "foreclosure" should be speedier and cheaper than the ordinary one by power of sale entered in the mortgage-deed; and also how it should be less expensive, for at the outside the additional expense caused by the introduction of a power of sale is not more than the cost of one skin, and if the progressive duty be only 5s. the expense would not be more than 25s. to 30s. and you cannot shew that the proceeding by "claim" and "foreclosure" under the New Procedure Act would be attended with as little expense.

And besides, who shall say what the expenses may be under the new practice, either at law or in equity, till the system has worked a little? See what correspondence, what trouble and attendance must attend the obtaining of a decree of foreclosure and order of sale. There is a great attempt to parade the new Chancery procedure and Chancery reform as something beneficial, but the public and Profession in the country first wish to see how it works.

FORECLOSURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I fully concur in your suggestion that powers of sale may now be omitted from mortgage deeds; in fact, this had occurred to me before I saw your observations, and I think such deed might be further improved, and a mortgagor's expenses very much reduced by returning to the former custom of making mortgages for a long term of years, instead of in fee, for, by so doing, the mortgagor would not have to obtain a reconveyance from the mortgagee, or the person in whom the legal estate was vested, upon his paying off the mortgage-money; this is always attended with considerable trouble and expense, and often with uncertainty; for in the case of a mortgage in fee, who dies intestate, without any direct lineal heirs, it is frequently doubtful whether the person in whom the legal estate is considered to be vested is that person or not, in consequence of the mortgagor not being able to obtain legal proof of his being so. In a case which recently came under my notice, where the mortgagor had mortgaged a small estate for a small amount in fee, and the mortgagee had died intestate, without any direct heirs, it cost the mortgagor nearly 10*l.* to obtain proof that the person who claimed to be the mortgagee's heir-at-law was so; and, after all, the proof that he did obtain was not legal evidence of the fact, though, under the circumstances, it was the best he could obtain.

COUNTERPART LEASES.

Can any of your readers inform me whether it is absolutely necessary to have the denoting-stamp impressed upon counterpart leases where the duty is above 5s? For instance, the other day I had a counterpart of a lease engrossed. The duty on the lease was 10s. To save the trouble and expense of sending to London to have the denoting-stamp impressed, I had it engrossed on 10s. ad val. and 10s. follower. Are the stamps sufficient without the denoting mark?

STAMPS.

In reply to the point mooted by "W. T." in your publication of the 25th September last, I think that as the share of A. is certainly conveyed, though not like the shares of B. and C. for a valuable consideration, an ordinary 35s. deed stamp should be impressed on the instrument in addition to the ad valorem duty on the purchase-money of B. and C.'s shares. The rule in practice is, that no ad valorem duty is payable in respect of a sum not paid to or for the benefit of the person who conveys or directs the conveyance of the estate. (Manifold v. Diamond, 4 B. & C. 243; Massey v. Nanney, 3 Bing. N.C. 478; Re Kerrey Glazier, 3 Ir. Cir. Rep. 396; Blandy v. Herbert, 9 B. & C. 396; and Wigmore v. Joyce, 13 Ir. L. R. 164.) As the share, therefore, of A. may be treated as a conveyance of it coming under this rule, I think the instrument in question ought to be stamped in the way above stated.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.

I think that, in regard to the point mooted by Mr. Mewburn on "Building Societies," the deed of transfer would require to be stamped, unless the securities in the first instance were taken in the names of the trustees of the society, and the survivors and survivor of them, and other the trustees to be appointed, when the incapacity to act, &c. if the then present trustees required such. As respects the law of vesting of securities in trustees of Building Societies, I would refer your correspondent to the case of Morrison v. Gover, 19 Law J. 20, Ex.

COUNTY COURTS.

Two insolvency cases were last week reported from Dublin. In Re Lazenbys, 20 Law T. Rep. 42, where an insolvent had made an untrue statement in his schedule, and taken false credits in his balance sheet, he was not allowed to swear to his schedule, and his petition was dismissed, although the opposing creditor failed to prove such concealment aliunde, and although such false statements and credits were held not to be any evidence of concealment of property. In Re Maxwell, 20 Law T. Rep. 42, it was held that the rule in bankruptcy, which allows a mortgagee to sell the mortgaged premises for his debt, and prove for the deficiency, does not apply in insolvency. This is very important, and should be carefully noted by the practitioner.

An extremely interesting discussion on the practice under the Advocates' clause in the County Courts Improvement Act, was last week reported from Liverpool. It illustrates the difficulties which we had anticipated as certain to arise when it came into practical operation. The question turned upon the words "being an Attorney acting generally in the action for such party, but not an Attorney retained as an Advocate by such last-mentioned Attorney." In this case, it appeared that the Attorney had been instructed by the party who had previously employed no other Attorney in the action, and therefore there was no doubt as to his right to appear. But it raised a discussion, and called forth an expression of opinion from the Judge, which is of great interest. He stated his impression to be, that the Attorney who appears should be the Attorney acting bonâ fide generally throughout the action, and that it was not competent to a party to go to one Attorney up to a certain point, and then to go to another Attorney merely to take the case into Court. This would not be "acting generally" in the action. It would be an evasion of the Act of Parliament. It is evident from this report, that the real difficulty arises from there being no means of ascertaining who is the Attorney originally employed. It would be removed by adopting the practice of the Superior Courts, and requiring that, in all cases where a plaint is entered, the name of the Attorney (if any) should be entered with the other particulars, and Attorneys should be allowed a fee for entering a plaint. If this were done, the great majority of plaints would be entered by Attorneys, and in other cases the party has the right to employ whom he pleases at any period of the suit, and the Attorney so employed is entitled to appear. A rule to this effect might be framed by the Judges. The Liverpool Judge suggested that the Attorney should not be changed without an application to the Court; but this would involve needless delay and cost. Altogether, it is a difficult question, and at present we can discover no perfectly practical method of removing it, for it arises from this, that in nineteen cases out of twenty in the County Courts, an Attorney is not employed until the last moment, because no fee is allowed to him for entering the plaint, nor for doing anything in the case before it comes into court. Let the committee that is now engaged in framing the scale of costs cure this defect, by giving reasonable costs to the Attorney for his trouble in conducting a suit, and requiring that his name should be entered with the plaint, and the difficulties now raised will be almost wholly removed.

ROCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

Whatever might have been the causes which led to the postponement of the judgment in the case of Dorrett v. Patten, on Wednesday sen'night, it is quite certain they were speedily removed, for on Tuesday last, Mr. Patten was dismissed from his office as Clerk of the Court, by an order of the Judge, confirmed by that of the Lord Chancellor. We do not profess to understand the niceties and punctilios of professional etiquette, but as the charge was a public one, the investigation public, and above all as the public interests were deeply concerned in the results, we cannot help thinking the judgment and the dismissal, to give them proper effect, should have been equally public. We are farthest from having any personal feelings whatever against Mr. Patten, and had he adopted the suggestion to "withdraw," which we understand was conveyed to him from a very high authority, it is possible we should have recorded the fact without comment; but Mr. Patten has thought proper to reject the advice of his friends, and has, apparently, set at defiance public opinion, with one of the clearest cases against him that was probably ever investigated in a court of justice. Mr. Patten clung to his office with a pertinacity that required the strongest measures to remove him from his hold. Had there been one redeeming clause in the case, one solitary symptom of not-guiltiness, we should have applauded the firmness of a man who, with a perfect consciousness of innocence, would assume a gallant bearing, and present a manly front to maligners and traducers. Such a procedure on the part of an innocent man would have been most becoming, but with his knowledge of the facts, could he for one moment think to hoodwink the public, or even his friends, by an outward manifestation, or even a declaration that he was not guilty. The extraordinary and sudden disappearance of the rough cashbooks, spoke trumpet-like for the guilt of the accused party, and that fact of itself was considered to be most damnatory evidence, even by Mr. Patten's personal friends. It may seem harsh to insinuate suspicion upon this part of the case—but let any one read the evidence and say if they can credit that the loss of those books was purely accidental? As Mr. Lewis most justly remarked, the very gist of the case depended upon their production; they would have clearly proved the complaint made, or they would have triumphantly rebutted the serious and quasi criminal charges brought against the defendant. To what motive, then, can this mysterious disappearance be attributed? Can there be two opinions upon the subject? If the entries in those books could have established Mr. Patten's innocence, would they not have been forthcoming? We confess again, that in every point of view, we think it would be desirable to have had the judgment pronounced in open court, that the public might have had the opportunity of hearing his Honour's opinion, not only upon the several points of the case, but upon the whole question itself. The principal line of defence appeared to resolve itself into two points, one was that all the charges were not proved, and the other that the several errors, to speak mildly, in the fees, were made by Mr. Patten's clerks. With respect to the first, it may be readily accounted for by the absence of a solicitor who did not appear upon his subpœna, and also the non-production of the rough cash-books. And, with regard to the second, Mr. Patten must have been too well versed in law not to know that qui facit per alium facit per se. We have not forgotten, certainly, that another ground of justification was, the difficulty of understanding the alterations in the table of fees; but, giving that its full weight, the "damned spot" was too deeply engrained to be eradicated. Whether other, and what consequences may follow his dismissal we will not inquire upon the present occasion, but we shall most assuredly remember the neglectful and slovenly manner in which the accounts had been audited. All their erasures and all their omissions are still before us, mentally, in all their worse than slovenliness and inaccuracies, and we shall certainly revert to them at some future opportunity. In the meantime, how are the heavy costs incurred by the high bailiff in his compulsory prosecution of these proceedings to be defrayed? Had the judgment been pronounced on Wednesday, they would have been applied for in the usual way, and no doubt granted as a matter of course; but now, in what manner or from whom will they be recovered? Perhaps the next proceedings will enlighten us upon the subject, and until then we are content to remain silent upon the subject, unless circumstances should arise that will compel us to draw the public attention to the whole of these most extraordinary proceedings from the commencement of them to the present time; for we consider that they are not yet come to a conclusion. —Rochester Journal.

ASSISTANT CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Within the last few weeks you have given insertion to several letters from assistant clerks of County Courts, complaining of inadequate remuneration: pray give me a corner to shew your readers how the system acts as regards executions.

The town I act in is the second in the county, and I have just made up my books for the half-year ending 30th September, 1852. I find the following result:—Executions issued, twenty-nine; amount sought to be levied, 149*l.* 0s. 1d.; Court fees, 1*l.* 2s. 10d. divisible as follows:—

High bailiff, 1-20	0 1 2
Judge, $\frac{1}{2}$ × 19-20	0 10 10
Chief clerk, $\frac{1}{2}$ 19-20	0 5 5
Assistant clerk, the like	0 5 5
	£1 2 10

The assistant clerk, who has to make all searches, to prepare the warrants, and to keep the execution books, being entitled to the sum of 5s. 5d. for his six months' work. Comment is unnecessary, except to observe that no number of processes issued could compensate the assistant clerk at the present rate of allowances, consequently this grievance applies to all County Courts.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

COMFORT IN STORE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Next Monday may justly be termed the "opening day" of the legal profession (after a very dreary long vacation), with a new babe to be nursed and nurtured, styled the "Common Law Procedure Act." Several legal authors have emptied the brains, and poured over works of the bygone, studded with their own suggestions as to the working thereof, and are apt to come to the conclusion that the infant that was rapidly growing to manhood (the County Court), will be so stunted in his growth, and thereby become, as it were, deformed, that instead of being the "pet" as hitherto, will be quite forsaken, for it is evident that the proceedings, under the new Act of Parliament will, for a debt above 5*l.* be much more expeditious and less expensive, added to which, it will confer more benefit upon the attorneys generally than the County Courts, as at present constituted, for it will grant them some more remuneration for their trouble, and will cause such complaints as appeared in your last week's number, to cease, of bad pay for fair work.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ATTORNEYS IN AUSTRALIA.

WILL any of your readers kindly inform me whether or not it is needful, in order to practise as an attorney and solicitor, or as a conveyancer only, in the Australian colonies, that the practitioner should have duly served under articles and been admitted in this country; and if not, whether a person would be eligible to start in such a profession without any local examination, or otherwise, and be received by his professional brethren accordingly. Also, whether any, and what (if any), local impost is levied upon him there, similar to the certificate duty here?

A CONVEYANCER'S CLERK.

SIGNED BILLS OF COSTS.

CAN any of your subscribers inform me what is the practice as regards serving signed bills of costs upon the executors of a deceased client to whom the account had been delivered previously to his death?

Note 1, p. 206, "Pulling on the Law of Attorneys and Solicitors," states that "it does not appear clear whether a delivery to one (provisional committee-man) will suffice to charge any of the others." —Nothing, however, is said about executors.

Where there are several executors, it takes up much valuable time to make a copy of a long bill of costs for each.

It appears to me that much trouble and time would be saved if all attorneys were to sign all their accounts or bills previously to delivery.

A PRACTITIONER.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT.

WOULD a copy of a will, certified by the Registrar or Deputy Registrar of the Ecclesiastical Court where such will is deposited, be admitted in evidence in a disputed title to land, without the necessity for the production of the original will? INQUIRER.

WILL any of your correspondents kindly inform me the name, &c. of any gentleman who can translate the "Anglicanum Monasticum," of which there are but three copies, I believe, extant?

ATTORNEYS TO BE ADMITTED.—As many as 183 persons have given notice of their intention to apply to be admitted attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench, in the ensuing Michaelmas Term, commencing on Tuesday next.

THE EXPENSE OF PUBLIC JUSTICE.—It is shewn, by a Parliamentary paper issued within the last few days, that, in the year ended the 5th of January last, the expense to the country for public justice was 2,335,956*l.*; of which 716,469*l.* was on account of courts of justice, 849,037*l.* for police and criminal prosecutions, and 779,450*l.* for correction.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE last number was rich in Bankruptcy Cases. Ex parte Orford, 20 Law T. Rep. 36, arose upon the construction of the Friendly Societies Act. The rules of such a society provided for the appointment of a treasurer, in whose hands the money was to be placed. The moneys were paid to a banker, who was not appointed treasurer. The 167th section of the Bankrupt Act requires moneys held by officers of Friendly Societies becoming bankrupt to be paid in full. In this case it was held that the bankers were not "employed" within the meaning of the Act, and, therefore, that payment in full could not be required.

In Ex parte Bean, 20 Law T. Rep. 36, it was held that a creditor may present a petition to annul an adjudication to the commissioner, and the appeal from that decision will be in due time if presented within twenty-one days from the time it was delivered, although much more time may have elapsed since the adjudication. Also, that it was not a sufficient ground for refusing to annul an adjudication, supported by legal requisites, that the order to annul will leave unimpeached an assignment of all the bankrupt's effects to the creditor applying for the order.

We have taken from the Scotch Reports, in consequence of its intrinsic interest, and the difference with the English Courts upon the point, a case that decides that a master will be held liable in damages for injuries done in the course of his employment to a workman in his service by a fellow-workman, also in his service. (Dixon v. Ranken, 20 Law T. Rep. 44.)

MANCHESTER BANKRUPTCY COURT.

WE regret to learn that Dr. Mackenzie, one of the official assignees in Mr. Commissioner Skirrow's court, has found himself unable to resume his official duties since the vacation, which came to a close three weeks ago, and that he finds it prudent to take up his residence for the present in Paris or Boulogne, in consequence of pecuniary difficulties, to meet which his means are inadequate.—On Thursday Mr. Sutton, solicitor, made an application in respect to the bankruptcy of Thomas Luke, of New Accrington, grocer, a fiat which is in Dr. Mackenzie's hands. Mr. Commissioner SKIRROW remarked: But the official assignee is not here, and I cannot go on with it in his absence. The official assignee is one of the officers of the court, whose duty it is to test all the accounts, and I cannot go on without him, to know whether the accounts are correct or not. I am sure the trade assignees will do their duty; but it is my duty, if necessary, to apply to the official assignee. — Mr. Sutton made a remark which seemed to intimate that Mr. Lee, the other official assignee, had rendered some valuable assistance to the assignees.—The COMMISSIONER: But has he authority to act for Dr. Mackenzie?—Mr. Lee: I shall be happy to do anything to facilitate the business of the court.—Mr. Sutton thought the presence of the official assignee was not important at the moment. The assignees had thought it desirable to employ an accountant in consequence of the state of the books.—The COMMISSIONER: Is not that a reason why I should require the assistance of the official assignee more on that account?—Mr. Sutton: The accountant is here.—The COMMISSIONER: The accountant is acting for the bankrupt, not for the assignees, for I made no order.—Mr. Sutton explained that his application had reference to certain property which the bankrupt and one of his relations had dealt with.—The COMMISSIONER: But how is it possible for me to go on without the official assignee?—Mr. Sutton: The official assignee has not attended personally; Mr. Bradley has attended to what is necessary.—The COMMISSIONER: Why has the official assignee not attended? If an officer of the Court is appointed, it is his duty to attend to the business of the Court.—Mr. Sutton said the accountant was necessary to perfect the books.—The COMMISSIONER: Then I must go into the account myself.—Mr. Sutton said he desired to ask the Commissioner to adjourn the case sine die.—The COMMISSIONER said he was most awkwardly placed without the assistance of the official assignee. The Court had entire control over all its officers, and he could deal with them exactly to the best of his judgment, and if they were dissatisfied with what he did, they had a right to appeal. He wished that to be distinctly understood; and that being so, the official assignee not being present, he might do that, unless the matter was explained, that might very much interfere with his appearing again; but as he had never complained of any of his officers unless they had imprudently complained of him, and he had felt bound, therefore, to state the circumstances; but he had thought it more prudent to wait sixteen days, after which he was compelled to represent the matter elsewhere, and he was now waiting the decision of the highest authority on the subject.—This ended the conversation on the subject. —Manchester Courier.

DISMISSAL OF DR. SHELTON MACKENZIE, THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE.

As we expected, Dr. Mackenzie has been dismissed from his post of official assignee in Mr. Commissioner Skirrow's court, the learned Commissioner having received the Lord Chancellor's order to that effect on Monday morning, we believe. This having become known, a good deal of anxiety has been manifested by the solicitors practising in the court, and having fiats in the hands of Dr. Mackenzie, to know what will be done in reference to them, the general wish appearing to be that they should pass without more delay into the hands of Mr. Lee, the other official assignee, and be carried on by him until wound up. The intentions of the commissioner, in reference to the matter, were tested by one or two solicitors on Tuesday morning.

Mr. Worthington, of the firm of Sale, Worthington, and Shipman, applied to Mr. Commissioner Skirrow, in the case of Samuel Padgett. He stated that he found from an account that there was upwards of 600*l.* in the hands of the accountant in bankruptcy, constituting the bulk of the estate, and leaving little to be got in except book debts. The creditors' assignee, Mr. Gray, therefore thought that his Honour should appoint an early audit-day.—The COMMISSIONER: It will be impossible for me to appoint an audit without the official assignee, who, as you are no doubt aware, is not here; and I will not transfer a single proceeding without the order of the Lord Chancellor. It is very true I have the power, but I shall not exercise it, excepting by instruction from the Lord Chancellor; I must know what he may desire. Dr. Mackenzie has ceased to be official assignee of this Court—he is no longer so. I say no more than that. Of course I could not act without the Lord Chancellor's instructions. But it shews exactly that my Lord Chancellor is anxious and ready to carry out the bankruptcy law in all its integrity.—Mr. Worthington: If I remember aright, is there not a clause in the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act, directing your Honour to act, in case an official dies or is removed?—The COMMISSIONER: There may be, but I shall not act on it, if I can help it, without direction from the Lord Chancellor. I will immediately write to the Lord Chancellor, and request the Lord Chancellor's assistance in the matter.—Mr. T. B. Bunting said he was going to apply in another and similar case.—The COMMISSIONER said he would look at the Act; but if he had the power, he would not exercise it, under the circumstances.—Mr. Worthington: It is the 42nd clause, your Honour,—"That on the death or removal of any official assignee who shall have been appointed to act in any bankruptcy, the Court shall have power to appoint another official assignee to act in such bankruptcy." The COMMISSIONER: I admit that, but I will not exercise the power without I have the advantage of knowing what my Lord Chancellor's views are on the subject; and by so doing I do not think I shall be injuring the interests of the creditors.—Mr. Bunting: I desire to point out to your Honour the propriety of ascertaining the Lord Chancellor's decision as soon as possible.—The COMMISSIONER said, Without suspecting any one, it is desirable, for the credit of all parties, to see that the accounts are correct, because, however vigilant the Commissioner may be, the official assignee may have recovered sums of money unknown to the trade assignees, not amounting to the sum of 500*l.* and not carry them to the credit of the estates; it has not occurred in this court, that I know of, but it has in other courts—and how are you to find that out? Very easily, you will say, because that will appear as a debt in the balance-sheet; but that does not always follow, because many have been the cases in which sums have been recovered to bankrupt estates, which have not appeared at all in the balance-sheet; and, therefore, there must be inquiry made as far as it can. With regard to the bygone estates, I have adopted a practice for which I am indebted to Mr. Commissioner Fane. By the rules, the official assignee is bound to send two days before the audit a duplicate account of his receipts and payments, so as to afford the trade assignees an opportunity of investigating them before the audit; but I carry out that order further, and require the gentlemen to sign the paper as an evidence that they have seen and looked it over. You may say that has taken from the Court considerable responsibility; and so it has; but it has given the trade assignees a full opportunity of looking into the accounts.

COURT PAPERS.

NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

The subjoined regulations in respect to the abolition of the office of the Master in Ordinary, and the method of conducting proceedings before the judge in chambers, were issued on Monday:—

ORDER OF COURT,
Saturday, the 16th day of October, 1852.

The Right Honourable Edward Burtonshaw, Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Honourable Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls, the Right Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir George James Turner, and the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Torin Kindersley, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to abolish the office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make provision for the more speedy and efficient despatch of business in the said Court," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct—

That all and every the orders, rules, and directions hereinafter set forth, shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, general orders and rules of the High Court of Chancery, viz.:—

SUMMONS.

1. The summons for the purpose of proceedings before the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively at chambers, whether originating in chambers or not, may be in a form similar to the form set forth in schedule (A) to these orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

2. The summons to be issued under section 30 of the Act of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, may be in a form similar to the form set forth in schedule (B) to these orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

3. A seal is forthwith to be provided for the chambers of the Master of the Rolls and each of the Vice-Chancellors, and summonses are to be prepared by the parties, and sealed by one of the clerks, at the chambers of the judge from whose chambers they are issued, and a copy of such summons is to be left at the judge's chambers by the party obtaining such summons.

4. In cases of applications under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45, applications for guardianship and maintenance of infants, originating in chambers, and of all other applications originating in chambers, a duplicate of the summons is to be filed in the Record and Writ-office, and in cases where service is required, the copies served are to be stamped in the manner provided by section 46 of the Act of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

5. In cases where proceedings originate in chambers, the original summons is to be served seven clear days before the return thereof. All other summonses, not being summonses referred to in order 2, are to be served two clear days before the return thereof.

6. In cases where proceedings originate in chambers, and where from any cause the summons may not have been served upon any party seven clear days before the return thereof, an endorsement may be made upon the summons, and upon a copy thereof stamped for service, appointing a new time for the parties not before served to attend at the chambers of the judge, and such endorsements are to be sealed at the judge's chambers, and the service of the copy so endorsed and sealed, is to have the same force and effect as the service of an original summons; and where any party has been served before such endorsement, the hearing thereof may upon the return of the summons be adjourned to the new time so appointed.

APPEARANCES.

7. In all cases where proceedings originate in chambers, the parties served are before they are heard in chambers to enter appearances in the Record and Writ-office, and give notice thereof.

ORDERS AND DIRECTIONS, APPLICABLE TO ALL CASES, WHETHER ORIGINATING IN CHAMBERS OR NOT.

8. In all cases in which by any order any accounts are directed to be taken, or inquiries to be made, each direction shall be numbered, so that as far as may be each distinct account and inquiry may be designated by a number, and such order may be in the form set forth in schedule (C) to these orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

9. Where an order is made directing an account of debts, claims, or liabilities, or an inquiry for next of kin or other unascertained persons, unless otherwise ordered, all persons who do not come in and prove their claims within the time which may be fixed for that purpose by advertisement, are to be excluded from the benefit of the order.

10. Where an order is made directing an account of the debts of a deceased person, unless otherwise ordered, interest is to be computed on such debts as to such of them as carry interest after the rate they respectively carry, and as to all others after the rate of four per cent. per annum, from the date of the order.

11. Where an order is made directing an account of legacies, unless otherwise ordered, interest is to be computed on such legacies after the rate of four per cent. per annum, from the end of one year after the deceased's death, unless any other time of payment or rate of interest is directed by the will, and in that case according to the will.

12. Where an order is made directing any property to be sold, unless otherwise ordered, the same is to be sold with the approbation of the judge to whose court the cause or matter is attached, to the best purchaser that can be got for the same, to be allowed by such judge, and all proper parties are to join therein as such judge shall direct.

13. Where an order is made directing a receiver to be appointed, unless otherwise ordered, the person to be appointed is first to give security, to be allowed by the judge to whose court the cause is attached, and taken before an officer or agent of the court in the country, if there shall be occasion, duly to account for what he shall receive on account of the rents and profits, for the receipt of which he is to be appointed, at such periods as such judge shall appoint, and to account for and pay the same as the Court shall direct; or, as the case may be, to be answerable for what he shall receive in respect of the personal estate, for the getting in and collection of which he is to be appointed, and to account for and pay the same as the Court shall direct; and the person so to be appointed is to be allowed a proper salary for his care and pains in receiving such rents and profits, or, as the case may be, to have an allowance made to him in respect of his collecting such personal estate.

14. The general orders of the Court with respect to receivers shall, mutatis mutandis, apply to receivers appointed under orders made after these rules and regulations come into operation.

15. Recognizances which have been heretofore given to the Master of the Rolls and the Senior Master in Ordinary, are hereafter to be given to the Master of the Rolls and the Senior Vice-Chancellor for the time being.

PROCEEDINGS IN CHAMBERS.

16. In all cases where matters, in respect of which summonses have been issued, are not disposed of upon the return of the summons, the parties are to attend from time to time without further summons, at such time or times as may be appointed for the consideration or further consideration of the matter.

17. In all cases of proceedings in chambers under any order, the solicitor prosecuting the same shall leave a copy of such order at the judge's chambers, and shall certify the same to be a true copy of the order as passed and entered.

18. Upon a copy of the order being left, a summons is to be issued to proceed with the accounts or inquiries directed, and upon the return of such summons, the judge is to be satisfied by proper evidence that all necessary parties have been served with notice of the order, and thereupon directions are to be given as to the manner in which each of the accounts and inquiries is to be prosecuted, the evidence to be adduced in support thereof, the parties who are to attend on the several accounts and inquiries, and the time within which each proceeding is to be taken; and a day or days may be appointed for the further attendance of the parties, and all such directions may afterwards be varied or added to as may be found necessary.

19. If upon the hearing of the summons, it shall appear to the judge that by reason of absence, or for any other sufficient cause, the service of notice of the order upon any party cannot be made, or ought to be dispensed with, the judge may, if he shall think fit, wholly dispense with such service, or may, at his discretion, order any substituted service, or notice by advertisement or otherwise, in lieu of such service.

20. If, in the prosecution of the order, it shall appear to the judge that it would be expedient that further accounts should be taken or further inquiries made, he may order the same to be taken or made accordingly, or, if desired by any party, may direct the same to be considered in open court.

21. At the time any summons or appointment is obtained, an entry thereof is to be made in a book, called "The Summons and Appointment Book," stating the date on which the summons is issued or appointment made, the name of the cause or matter, and by what party, and, shortly, for what purpose such summons or appointment is obtained, and at what time returnable.

22. Lists of matters appointed for each day are to be made out and affixed outside the doors of the chambers of the respective judges, and, subject to any special direction, such matters are to be heard in the order in which they appear in such list.

23. The course of proceeding in chambers is ordinarily to be the same as the course of proceeding in court upon motions. No states of facts, charges, or discharges are to be brought in. But when directed, copies, abstracts, or extracts of or from accounts, deeds, or other documents, and pedigrees and concise statements, are to be supplied for the use of the judge and his chief clerk, and, where so directed, copies are to be handed over to the other parties. But no copies to be made of deeds or documents where the originals can be brought in, without special direction.

24. The party intending to use any affidavit on any proceeding in chambers is to give notice to the other parties concerned of his intention in that behalf.

25. The practice of the court with respect to evidence before the hearing, when applied to evidence to be taken before an examiner in any case subsequently to the hearing, is to be subject to any special directions which may be given in any particular case.

26. Where a chief clerk is directed by the judge to examine any witness, the practice and mode of proceeding is to be the same as in the case of the examination of witnesses before the examiner, subject to any special directions which may be given in any particular case.

27. The original examinations and depositions of parties and witnesses taken by or before the chief clerk, authenticated by his signature, are to be transmitted by him to the Record and Writ Office, to be there filed, and any party to the suit or proceeding may have a copy thereof, or of any part or portion thereof, upon payment of the proper fee.

28. All orders made in chambers, and drawn up by the chief clerks or registrars, are to be entered in the same manner and in the same office as orders made in open court are entered.

29. Where any account is directed to be taken, the accounting party is, unless the judge shall otherwise direct, to make out his account and verify the same by affidavit. The items on each side of the account are to be numbered consecutively, and the account is to be referred to by the affidavit as an exhibit, and to be left at the judge's chambers.

30. Any party seeking to charge any accounting party beyond what he has by his account admitted to have received, is to give notice thereof to the accounting party, stating, as far as he is able, the amount sought to be charged, and the particulars thereof, in a short and succinct manner.

31. Upon the receiver's account being left in the judge's chambers to be passed, a summons to proceed thereon is to be taken out; and the account, when passed, is to be entered by the solicitor of the receiver in books, in the same manner as heretofore; but the affidavit verifying the account so passed is to refer to it as an exhibit, and not to be annexed to it.

32. When a receivership has been completed, the book containing the accounts is to be deposited in the Record and Writ Office.

33. Where advertisements are required for any purpose, a peremptory and only one is to be issued, unless for any special reason it may be thought necessary to issue a second advertisement or further advertisements; and any advertisement may be repeated as many times and in such papers as may be directed.

34. The advertisements are to be prepared by the solicitor, and submitted to the chief clerk for approval, and, when approved, are to be signed by him, and such signature is to be sufficient authority to the printer of the Gazette to insert same.

35. Advertisements for creditors or other claimants are to fix a time for the creditors or claimants to come in and prove their claims, and to appoint a day for the hearing and adjudicating thereon, and may be in a form similar to the form set forth in Schedule D to these orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require.

36. Claimants coming in pursuant to advertisement are to enter their claims at the chambers of the judge in the "summons and appointment book," for the day appointed for hearing by the advertisement, and are to give notice thereof, and of the affidavits filed, to the solicitors in the cause, within the time specified in the advertisement for bringing in claims.

37. The claimants filing affidavits are not to be required to take office copies; but the party prosecuting the cause or matter is to take office copies, and produce the same at the hearing, unless otherwise ordered in chambers.

38. If, on the day appointed for hearing the claims there are any not then disposed of, an adjournment day for hearing such claims is to be fixed; and where further evidence is to be adduced, a time may be named within which the evidence on both sides is to be closed, and directions may be given as to the mode in which such evidence is to be adduced.

39. Any claimant who has not before entered his claim may be heard on such adjournment day, provided he enters his claim and files his affidavit four clear days prior to such day, and no certificate of debts or claims shall in the meantime have been made.

40. Creditors claiming debts not exceeding 5*l.* need not attend on the day of hearing, unless required to do so by notice from some party.

41. After the time fixed by the advertisement, no claims are to be received except as before provided, in case of an adjournment, unless the judge at chambers shall think fit to give special leave, upon application made by summons, and then upon such terms and conditions as to costs and otherwise as the judge shall think fit.

42. A list of all claims allowed shall, when required by the judge, be made out and left in the judge's chambers by the party prosecuting the order.

43. In cases where the Court directs any computation of interest, or the apportionment of any fund, which is to be acted upon by the accountant-general or other person without any further order from the Court, the order to be made by the Court may direct such computation or apportionment to be made by one of the chief clerks attached to the court of such judge, and may direct the certificate thereof, signed by such chief clerk, to be acted upon accordingly, without the same being signed and adopted by the judge.

44. Where an account has been directed, the certificate or report is to state the result of such account, and not to set the same out by way of schedule, but is to refer to the account verified by the affidavit filed, and to specify by the numbers attached to the items in the account, which if any of such items have been disallowed or varied, and to state what additions, if any, have been made by way of surcharge. In any case in which the account verified by the affidavit has been so altered that it is necessary to have a fair transcript of the account as altered, such transcript may be required to be made by the solicitor prosecuting the order, and is then to be referred to by the certificate or report. The accounts and the transcripts, if any, referred to by certificates or reports, are to be filed therewith, but no copies thereof are to be required to be taken by any party.

45. The certificates or reports to be made by the chief clerk to the judge are not, except the special circumstances of the case shall render it necessary, to set out the order or any documents or evidence or reasons, but are to refer to the order, documents, and evidence, or particular paragraphs thereof, so that it may appear upon what the result stated in any such certificate or report is founded.

46. The certificate of the chief clerk to the judge may be in a form similar to the form set forth in schedule (E) to these orders, with such variations as the circumstances of the case may require, and, when prepared and settled, it is to be transcribed by the solicitor prosecuting the proceedings in such form and within such time as the chief clerk shall require, and is then to be signed by the chief clerk at an adjournment to be made for that purpose. But where, from the nature of the case, the certificate can be drawn and copied in chambers whilst the parties are present before the chief clerk, the same shall be then completed and signed by him without any adjournment.

47. The time within which any party is to be at liberty to take the opinion of the judge upon any proceeding which shall have been concluded, but as to which the certificate or report of a chief clerk shall not have been signed and adopted by the judge, is to be four clear days after the certificate or report shall have been signed by the chief clerk.

48. Any party desiring to take the opinion of the judge, as mentioned in the last preceding rule, is within four clear days after the certificate or report shall have been signed by the chief clerk, to obtain a summons for such purpose.

49. At the expiration of four clear days after the certificate or report shall have been signed by the chief clerk, if no party has in the mean time obtained a summons to take the opinion of the judge thereon, the chief clerk is to submit the certificate or report to the judge for his approval, and the judge may thereupon, if he approve the same, sign such certificate or report in testimony of his adoption thereof as follows: —"Approved this day of "

50. The certificate or report, when signed by the judge, with the accounts, if any, to be filed therewith, is to be transmitted by the chief clerk to the Report-office, to be there filed.

51. The time within which an application may be made by summons or motion to discharge or vary any certificate or report which has been signed and adopted by the judge sitting in chambers, is to be eight clear days after the filing of such certificate or report.

52. Certificates of the chief clerk made as mentioned in rule 53, and not required to be signed and adopted by the judge, are to be transmitted and filed in the same manner as those signed and adopted by the judge.

53. The Orders 47, 48, 49, and 51, are not to apply to certificates on passing receivers' accounts. Such certificates may be approved and signed by the judge without delay, and upon being so signed are to be filed and forthwith acted upon.

54. A register is to be kept of all proceedings in the judge's chambers, with proper dates, so that all the proceedings in each cause or matter may appear consecutively and in chronological order, with a short statement of the questions or points decided or ruled at any hearing.

55. Parties attending any proceeding in chambers, without having obtained the previous leave of the judge to attend the same, are not to be allowed any costs of such attendance, unless by special order of the Court.

56. The costs of counsel attending the judge in chambers are not in any case to be allowed, unless the judge certifies it to be a proper case for counsel to attend.

DEPOSIT OF DEEDS.

57. Where any deeds or other documents are ordered to be left or deposited, the same are to be left or deposited in the Record and Writ Office, and are to be subject to such directions as may be given for the production thereof.

POWER OF JUDGE.

58. Powers and authorities given to the Masters in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery by any general order or orders of the Court, may be exercised by the judge sitting in chambers.

59. The power of the Court and of the judge sitting in chambers to enlarge or abridge the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding, and to give any special direction as to the course of proceeding in any cause or matter, is unaffected by these orders.

COMMENCEMENT OF ORDERS.

60. These orders shall take effect and come into operation from and after the 1st day of Michaelmas Term, 1852.

INTERPRETATION.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

MEETING OF SOLICITORS AT DERBY.

ON Wednesday se'nnight, a large and influential meeting of solicitors was held in the Town Hall, in Derby, at which several members of the Metropolitan and Provincial law Society, from London, Manchester, Liverpool, Carlisle, Hull, Leeds, Birmingham, Lichfield, Derby, and other places attended. The object for holding an aggregate meeting of the profession was, as stated in the society's circular, "for the purpose of taking into consideration the present position and prospects, and devising the best means of obtaining increased support for, and thus giving increased efficiency to, the Association." The following gentlemen were present:—

Derby: Mr. W. E. Mousley, Mr. Barber, Mr. J. Moss, Mr. Mozley, Mr. Kahrs, Mr. Gadsby, Mr. C. B. Portmore, Mr. J. Huish, and Mr. F. Baker. London: Mr. W. H. Palmer, Mr. C. J. Palmer, Mr. E. S. Bailey, Mr. E. W. Field, Mr. J. Beaumont, and Mr. W. Shaen. Manchester: Mr. J. Street (a deputation from the Manchester Law Association), and Mr. W. H. Partington (Hon. Sec. of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Society for the Northern District). Newcastle: Mr. Glyn (Vice-President of the Newcastle and Gateshead Law Society), and Mr. Wm. Chater (Under-Sheriff of Newcastle). Carlisle: Mr. Hanson. Liverpool: Mr. Avison. Lincoln: Mr. Carlyon and Mr. Broomhead. Nottingham: Mr. Richard Enfield. Castle Donington: Mr. John Towle. Lichfield: Mr. Birch and Mr. Dyott, jun. Burton-on-Trent: Mr. Bass, Mr. Drewry, and Mr. Brooks. Ashby-de-la-Zouch: Mr. Brown. Deputation from the Leeds Law Society: Mr. Barr, Mr. Bulmer, Mr. Eddison, Mr. Shaw, and Mr. Sangster (Hon. Sec.) Birstal, near Leeds: Mr. Firth. Leeds: Mr. Webster. Birmingham: Mr. Ryland. Deputation from the Hull Law Society: Mr. Thompson, Mr. Moss, and Mr. Shackles. Belper: Mr. Ingle and Mr. Wm. Ingle. Maidstone: Mr. Case (a deputation from the Kent Law Society). Stoke: Mr. Keary. Chesterfield: Mr. Busby. The President in the chair.

THE CHAIRMAN, in opening the business of the meeting, expressed the gratification he experienced on seeing so influential an assemblage of gentlemen from all parts of the kingdom,—a fact which rendered the meeting one of considerable importance. The circular which had been addressed to the Profession generally would explain the object of the meeting; it was, in short, to obtain a more complete unity in the Profession by calling upon them to join the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Society, which includes in its membership gentlemen from all parts of the kingdom. Without going over the list of all the association has accomplished since its formation, he might state generally that constant attention had been paid by the committee to every Bill introduced into Parliament, and to every proposal for an alteration of the laws; and no less than 267 petitions were obtained by the committee upon the certificate duty alone. (Hear.) On all other matters interesting to the Profession, this association was one through whom their interests, and the interests of the public at large, can be provided for. The attorneys and solicitors were a large body, comprising about 10,000 individuals, and, if united, they might be very powerful; but, unfortunately, it had always been said that no body in the country is so disunited as the solicitors. It was high time they united for their own protection as well as the protection of the public—because in protecting themselves they protected the public from falling into the hands of an unadmitted and low class of persons, who would be a curse to society. (Hear.) Perhaps it would be said that the association was designed to protect their own interests and nothing more. But it was not so; on the contrary, he felt assured that their objects only required to be better understood to be thoroughly appreciated by the public, and he trusted that every gentleman present had come prepared to give to them their earnest co-operation and support. (Loud applause.)

Mr. W. Eaton Mousley said, it would be right to observe that there were two law societies existing—one the Incorporated Law Society, of which he (Mr. Mousley) had long been a humble member, and whose rules and regulations were prescribed by its charter, and to which the judges of the land had paid much respect, and from which much benefit to the profession and to the public had been derived; the other was the Metropolitan Provincial Law Association, the extension of which he apprehended was the immediate object of the meeting that day; and stated that he believed it would be the means of bringing the profession more in unison together, and of correcting abuses, so far as regards unnecessary and expensive forms in legal proceedings, and be the means of protecting the more humble practitioners. (Applause.) There had been an assumption of power by the junior members of the bar which they had no right to assume, and although it had been said by some of them that a practising attorney and solicitor fell short of the information possessed by the barrister, he (Mr. M.) begged to dissent from that opinion. It ought to be recollected that some of the most learned and influential judges who had ever sat upon the bench were men who had been brought up as attorneys and solicitors. The instances were numerous, but he would only advert to modern times. Lord Kenyon, Lord Macclesfield, Lord Giffard, Lord Chancellor Truro, Lord Chief Justice Tindal, and others; and he would ask whether the working up of principles as regarded both law and equity from day to day at an attorney's table was not much more beneficial in point of legal education than an individual eating a number of dinners, as his qualification, at one of the inns of court. In his opinion, notwithstanding the large sweeping reforms both in law and equity, there were still other reforms which required to be carried out. Those reforms were the payment of fees to persons who held useless places, and which taxed the suitor unfairly, and could not be of the least possible benefit to any other portion of the community. He moved "That with a view to promote the welfare of the legal profession, and to assist its members to discharge their duties to their clients and to the public, it is highly expedient that the practising attorneys and solicitors of England and Wales should be united in an association."

Mr. Glynn, of Newcastle, seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. Beaumont, of London, moved the second resolution. He entirely agreed with the gentleman who had spoken as to the importance of occasionally holding meetings like the present. At first sight it might seem a useless and absurd proceeding, but it was a fact that they as a Profession had not been so united as they ought to be, and this weakness in their position had consequently oftentimes invited aggression. (Hear.) Considering their numbers, and the improved standard of education now existing, there were not many bodies in the country who could exert so much influence as attorneys and solicitors if they were but united. (Hear.) But let it be understood that they were not now assembled to maintain abuses merely because they ministered to their interests. (Hear.) The "good old times" when, as Lord Eldon remarked, a bankrupt's estate used to be divided between attorney and commissioner and assignee,—those times and their evil fruit were happily gone, and he for one rejoiced that such was the case. (Applause.) Their object was to assist all well-considered plans for improving the law, especially such as related to the practice of the Courts, and to maintain a high standard of education, and a correct and honourable feeling among themselves. (Applause.) To effect this, union was necessary, and union on such a basis would make them strong. It was indispensable that they should use their own strength in their own cause, since they could not reckon upon external aid. Will the heads of our Profession—will the Bar—do battle for us? They will not, it appears, disdain to enter our ranks. Government solicitorships, town-clerkships, manorial stewardships, these attorneys' offices it is not, it seems, inconsistent with the etiquette of the Bar to fill. But I am afraid it must be recognised that the Bar do not hold the Solicitors in very especial regard. I hold in my hand a pamphlet written by a gentleman of honourable name, one Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, a barrister, in which he is so good as to communicate to us his notion of the proper relative position of the Barristers and the Attorneys. The Attorney should, according to this gentleman, be the servant of the Barrister! I am persuaded that if we would impress our views upon the Legislature or the Ministry, it is not to be done by approaching the Bar with timid and mincing phraseology, but it is to be accomplished only by trusting to ourselves; by shewing that we have the power to maintain our own cause, and that we intend to use it. It must not be forgotten, however, that position is power. Adam Smith said the army and navy were in some degree compensated for their small pay by their position; but if Parliament reduced Attorneys to the starvation point, and let in a class of men who would be a pest and a scourge to the community, their position would be destroyed, and the interest of the public would suffer. (Hear.) It was, then, a right and a duty which they owed to themselves to make every legitimate use of the influence they at present retained, and insist on being treated as gentlemen. (Hear.) The resolution was as follows:—"That the objects of such an association should be to assist all well-considered plans for improving the law, especially as relating to the practice of the Courts, and to maintain an honourable position and character for the Profession."

Mr. Rylands, of Birmingham, seconded the resolution.

Mr. Shaw, of Leeds, moved the third resolution, as follows:—"That the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association having been founded in 1847, and conducted from that time upon the principles expressed in the foregoing resolution, deserves the cordial support of every member of the Profession; and this meeting accordingly pledges itself actively to endeavour to increase its power and usefulness by procuring a large accession to its number of members." He said, after what had been already said, it was unnecessary to add anything in proof of the usefulness of this institution. It only required that attorneys should use rightly those elements of strength which they possessed, in order to effect all that was proper or desirable; unfortunately, however, from apathy or disunion, or both, they had become one of the weakest bodies in the country. It was time that most of the large towns had their own local associations; but for want of union with others, their efforts, however useful in their own immediate neighbourhood, were powerless for good, as regarded the general interests of the Profession. (Hear.) It was for the purpose of cementing an union of the Profession, that the Metropolitan and Provincial Association was instituted; and every reader of their reports must know that by the unostentatious labours of the central committee—labours that he hoped would be better known and appreciated hereafter—the society had already contributed greatly to the protection and honour of the Profession, and the public advantage. (Applause.) He did not, in saying this, mean to underrate the great value of the "Incorporated Law Society," of which he was a member, and which had for several years been acting with a degree of energy as well as judgment that amply entitled it to the respect and confidence of the Profession. (Hear.) But though equally open to all, it must practically, from the nature of its constitution, consist chiefly of metropolitan, with comparatively few provincial solicitors, while the Metropolitan and Provincial Society was designed and calculated for the purpose of uniting the professional men of London with their brethren in the provinces. Both institutions had always co-operated with perfect cordiality, and many gentlemen present, as well as himself, were supporters of both; but he recommended the one whose claims they were now met to support, as that through which the Profession at large would best be united. (Hear.) He admitted,—and why should there be any reluctance to avow it?—that a due and adequate remuneration for those important services which the Profession rendered (a condition absolutely necessary, in order to retain in the body men of character and respectability), was one object, and a perfectly fair one, which they had associated to secure. So far from that being a disadvantage to the public, he maintained that, within proper limits, it was an advantage; for undoubtedly the public were interested in maintaining the position of a body of men in whom, from the nature of things, they had to repose great confidence. But it was, in his opinion, an object of far greater importance to effect that which was another and by far their principal aim; viz. to vindicate the honour and character of the Profession (Hear); and he hoped they would all unite in resisting to the uttermost every attempt to degrade it. (Hear.) It was with that view more particularly that the association was formed. In its first prospectus that subject was put prominently forward; and unless their attention was perseveringly and resolutely directed to the maintenance of their own character and honour as a profession, the time would assuredly arrive when they would sink into the position described in the pamphlet to which reference had been made. (Hear.) Now, in what way could they best accomplish this object? One means would be, more frequent communications between the committee and members, by a more frequent issue of the circulars. Another and still more important point was, that in this country almost everything was done by public opinion, and he could not entertain a doubt that the absurd but systematically instilled prejudices that prevailed with reference to their Profession, were another great cause why they did not at present possess the fair influence which not only their own interests, but the public good required. (Hear.) More frequent communication with the public, through the medium of the press, was therefore necessary to give effect to their efforts. (Hear.) It was not, however, by an occasional article on a particular question, but by continuous persevering efforts from quarter to quarter, from month to month, and from week to week, that useful impressions on public opinion were made, and he hoped they would for this purpose avail themselves much more frequently than they had hitherto done of the channels that were open to them. (Hear.) He referred to channels already open, because he believed that publications already established, and now perfectly accessible, might be made to answer every purpose they wished for. (Hear.) But this object also required expense, and therefore, in order to accomplish it, an extension of members was required. That effected, the committee would be enabled to act in every way upon a much larger scale. He would only add, that on all these grounds, while acknowledging and rejoicing at the great good the society had done, he was sure it would be able to effect a great deal more by extended numbers, funds, and efforts. (Applause.)

Mr. Field, of London, said that his object, principally, was to shew their successes and their failures; what they had tried, what had not succeeded, and why they had failed. A chief cause of failure would be found to be a want of active local co-operation on the part of the provincial members of the Profession. A previous speaker from Birmingham had said that the London committee ought to give some definite work to the country members. He (Mr. Field) would rather say that the country members must, of themselves, begin to work, and that they should make the London committee assist them. The matters that had engaged the attention of the society, and to which he alluded, were matters in which the public had a vastly greater interest than the Profession. He had always, in connection with the association, acted with the most perfect conviction that the true interests of the Solicitor were identical with those of the client; and he must add, that every member of the association with whom he had had to act had been actuated by the same feeling. (Applause.) It was true that at present, by the operation of Acts of Parliament, the pay of the Solicitor was made to depend upon various formal steps being taken in the course of a cause, in which the public had no interest, and which had no real bearing on its result. But to the abolition of all such regulations some of the main efforts of the association had been directed, regardless of their immediate effect upon the remuneration of the Profession. (Applause.) And by no body had all needless forms been ever denounced in more uncompromising terms than by this association. (Hear.) Its whole history was the history of one continued attack upon them. Counsel were of great value in their province; but there should be no law to compel their employment, and the suitor ought to go to them only when they are wanted. (Hear.) Unfortunately, the laws under which alone the Solicitor could receive his remuneration held out to him the strongest inducement to wink at these abuses, and to employ the Bar copiously and needlessly. In many cases where a man did a thing himself for 6s. 8d. and at great personal exertion and responsibility, he would by law be paid many guineas, and be saved almost all personal trouble and responsibility if he employed counsel. For the honour of this association they had always resisted the continuance of this temptation, and protested against all useless forms, and had desired to have their mode of remuneration put upon some sounder basis. In all the recent equity changes, all of which were unfortunately drawn up too much under a bar bias, this vicious principle was continued. It was a great question how far it was right to keep in the law any legislative tariff of prices at all. In every other branch of occupation, it is open to the employer and employed to arrange their own terms. In the law, this was still prohibited. Formerly everything was regulated by legislative tariff—the price of bread in the market and the rate of wages, as well as law charges. If it was right to abolish the tariff in all other cases, how far is it wise to continue it in the law? If you enact a tariff, the attorney must bring himself into the category of the tariff, whether it is for the interest of his client or not. This was a position which this association had always desired to avoid, as adverse to the interests of the public and dishonourable to the Profession. (Applause.) In none of the late changes, however, had the old vicious principle been abandoned. What had been the effect of this protective and regulative system of legislation on the solicitors' branch of the Profession? For the last ten years the number of men seeking admission into our branch of the Profession, that is to say, the articled clerks, had been annually decreasing. If in an open profession like the law, and in one which addresses itself to the first wants of civilised society, the body does not increase in proportion to the increase of the wealth and population of the country, there must be something radically wrong. Now it was a curious fact that from 1833 to 1839, the average annual number of articled clerks had been 528; in the next five years the average annual number had been only 478; and in the next two years, 1845 and 1846, it had been 483. (Hear.) If you enact by an arbitrary law that there shall be two branches of the Profession, and if part of every business must be done by the one and part by the other, each branch will be endeavouring to get as large a share as possible, and you would often be employing two men where one would be quite enough. The experience of America shewed that where there is no legislative separation of the Profession, a separation naturally takes place so far as the interest of the client requires it. Those who have a gift for advocacy confine themselves to advocacy, and are employed as advocates when the interests of the client require it, but not otherwise. Mr. D. D. Field, the author of the recent American Codes for the Consolidation of Law and Equity, had stated at a meeting of the Law Amendment Society last spring, that our system of arbitrary separation was, in his opinion, a very false one, and that while the text-books upon the Law of Nations and the conflict of laws used throughout Europe, and also many of our English text-books, had been written by Americans, they would not have been qualified to write those books but for their early experience in what we should call the attorney's branch of the profession. At any rate we cannot produce works written here by members of our bar of equal talent and value to those alluded to. Neither does the legal profession in America suffer for want of the protection and legislative regulation we bestow upon it here; for in no country are so many of the highest offices in the state filled by lawyers. The question of the respective rights of the two branches of the profession was much discussed in Parliament last session, and it was no use disguising the fact from ourselves that it must be settled, and settled on the sole basis of the public interest, which was all that the solicitors desired. With all its folly and insolence, unworthy of the name of Rann Kennedy, there was this basis of truth in the pamphlet from which Mr. Beaumont had quoted, that the attempt artificially to keep employed two distinct branches of the legal profession was in many cases detrimental to the public. If the public interest required the abolition of the solicitors' branch of the profession, be it so. But, then, give solicitors an opportunity of being called to the bar at once, or at least one equal to that enjoyed by the rest of the community. (Applause.) Until recently the bar (who were the sole regulators of admission to their own ranks) gave the solicitors such an equal opportunity, but now they required from the solicitors — the only body fitted by their previous education for the occupation—five years, while they admitted any one else in the world — a ticket porter, for instance — in three. (Laughter.) This subject must soon become one of prominent public importance. He could not avoid it here, especially after the reference to Mr. Kennedy's pamphlet. He (Mr. Field) had only yesterday an insolvent estate of about 150*l.* which could still be dealt with by bill alone, because there was a little real estate not devised to be sold. We tried to extend these clauses, and again, against our pecuniary interests, looking at them from a narrow point of view, but we failed, owing to a want of Parliamentary support. (Hear.) Take as a last instance of our efforts for important reform and their failure—the subject of the taxation of the suitors of the court for its maintenance. It is unjust to tax them at all; but how much more unjust is it to make the poor man who goes there for a legacy of 100*l.* pay as much as one who goes there for one of 10,000*l.* It would be just as reasonable at a turnpike-gate to make a poor man's donkey-cart pay the same toll as the peer's carriage and four. (Hear.) We obtained two reports from a select committee of the House of Commons in favour of a rateable taxation, and the Suitors' Relief Bill was originally prepared so, but the present Government struck out that provision; and, righteous as the case was, and strong as was the party that had originally drawn the Bill, the Association could not procure a debate upon the question. Why? For want of more efficient local support. Orders of course still most improperly retained, would afford another instance of a clear case in favour of the public defeated from the same cause. One word more as to the future doings of the Association. It must, of course, continue to try to rectify the various legislative miscarriages he had alluded to. It must also continue to agitate for additional judges in the Court of Chancery, and so for a fair trial of the new plan of working the court by judges instead of masters. And beyond the Chancery Court, though intimately connected with it, there was an important subject included in the prospectus, and often alluded to in the annual reports, which, though not yet dealt with by the Association, must shortly engage the public attention. He meant that monstrous fungus the Ecclesiastical Courts—that is to say, those courts when dealing with civil matters, and when civil rights are mixed up with ecclesiastical affairs, and transacted by a separate and expensive order of practitioners kept up exclusively for the purpose. It was clear that if the public interest was to be consulted, this anomalous state of things must be put an end to, and that the association must forthwith address itself to the work. The speaker concluded by seconding the resolution.

Mr. Moss, of Hull, suggested, as one mode of raising the funds of the Association, that the local societies should make a grant, and on his return home he would certainly make a proposition to that effect to the members of his own.

The Chairman said the suggestion that a donation should be thus made was a good one. It was originally recommended that the local societies should subscribe, but as those societies did not exist in every town, it was thought better to trust to individual exertion and co-operation; and this plan the committee adhered to. Donations, in addition to that exertion, would undoubtedly do great good.

After a vote of thanks to the Chairman, the meeting adjourned to the Royal Hotel, to dinner, at six o'clock.

About forty gentlemen sat down to dinner at six o'clock, provided by Mr. Huggins, at the Royal Hotel, and which gave universal satisfaction.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Fees in Chancery and Common Law.—Under the New Chancery and Common Law Acts, about to come into force, considerable alterations will be made in the mode of collection, and amount of fees to be charged in law and equity proceedings. At the Judges' Chambers and other law offices, it is expected that a great reduction will take place. By the 10th section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 73, it is stated that it is expedient that a new table or tables of fees proper to be taken in the Superior Courts and their several offices, and at the Judges' Chambers, and by the clerks of assize acting as associates on the circuit, should be prepared "with reference to the various changes and alterations which have been or may be made in the process, practice, and proceedings in these courts, and to the diminution of expense where practicable to the suitor." The Commissioners of the Treasury are required by the Act to prepare or cause to be prepared tables of fees, specifying what fees are proper to be demanded in the several offices, and what fees should be abolished, and such tables are to be laid before the judges, who are required to revise and settle the tables of fees, and from time to time to add to or reduce, alter, or amend the same as they may deem necessary and proper. The Commissioners of the Treasury are to cause the tables of fees to be published in the London Gazette, "and from and after such publication no other fees than those sanctioned and allowed as aforesaid shall on any pretence whatever be demanded, or taken by any officer or clerk of the said courts in respect of any duty or service to which such table or tables of fees may relate, provided that until the publication under the authority aforesaid, the fees now lawfully taken by the said officers and clerks shall and may continue to be taken."

Cheapness in the Court of Chancery.—Hitherto large sums have been charged for engrossing and copying bills filed in Chancery, in lieu of which printed bills are to be delivered; and by one of the new rules a considerable reduction is effected. It is ordered that "the payment to be made by the defendant to the plaintiff for printed copies of the bill or claim shall be at the rate of one halfpenny per folio.

Extensive Frauds in Law Offices.—The Lord Chancellor has directed an inquiry into a series of frauds of an extensive nature upon the "fee fund" of the suitors of the Court of Chancery, which are alleged to have been perpetrated.

The Common Law Procedure Act.—By some oversight peculiar to modern legislation, this Act is made to come into operation on a Sunday—namely, the 24th inst. A question has been raised upon the statute of Charles, whether it is not altogether a nullity—and the absence of any rules for the working of the statute, up to the present moment, affording insufficient time for a proper knowledge of the machinery by which it is to be worked out, favours the rumour that its operation will be suspended by order in council.

The Will of the late Mr. Neild.—The will of this gentleman, which has excited so much interest and curiosity, is now in Doctors' Commons. It is written by the deceased himself, in a clear bold round hand, and only occupies the front of a sheet of foolscap. The will begins by saying that he, James Camden Neild, of Lincoln's-inn and Chelsea, in the county of Middlesex, wished his body to be interred in Battersea Church, and in a vault as near as may be to his beloved father, James Neild. He bequeathed to his executors 100*l.* each, and directed them to pay all his just debts (which were very trifling), and thereafter he gave and bequeathed all "real and personal property to which I may be entitled at law or in equity unto her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, for her own private use and advantage, and her heirs, executors, and assignees." And he expresses a hope that her Majesty will be pleased to accept of the same. He appoints as his executors the hon. the keeper for the time being of her Majesty's privy purse, the Very Rev. Henry Tatton, Archdeacon of Bedford, and James Stevens, esq. of the county of Kent. The will is attested by Charles Shadwell, of Gray's-inn, and George Tatton, his clerk. The will was proved on the 21st inst. by the Hon. Charles Bowman Phipps, keeper of her Majesty's privy purse, the Archdeacon of Bedford, and Mr. Stevens, the executors appointed under it, and the estate sworn to as under 250,000*l.*—Globe.

Marriage of a Deceased Wife's Sister.—Amongst the various expedients to which parties desirous of contracting this sort of alliance are having recourse, the one most in favour is that of tying the nuptial bonds in Denmark, where the facilities are greatest. A trifling impediment, however, stands in the way of candidates for hymeneal honours. They must be provided with certificates of having been vaccinated, or the ceremony cannot be performed; such is the Danish law. Now, to the majority of middle-aged gentlemen and ladies, whose babyhood was spent in good old times, before vaccination came into fashion, the obtaining of this certificate is impossible, except they, in anticipation of the difficulty that will hereafter await them, cause the operation to be renewed. Some of the knowing ones, duly admonished of the necessity, make the necessary provision; but a far greater number on their arrival in Denmark learn for the first time the conditions on which alone they can be united and submit to the operation on the spot, thus furnishing an interesting case of ardent lovers bleeding for each other's sake.

The One Thousand Pounds Fraud at Hull.—At the Hull Quarter Sessions, last week, William Cooper Robinson, of Hull, solicitor, was tried and convicted of having endeavoured to obtain money by false pretences from Messrs. Charles Wells, of Hull, in August last. The case occupied some hours, and the evidence shewed that the prisoner applied to the prosecutors for a loan of 200*l.* on the title-deeds of a client named Pritchett, and the prosecutors being willing to make the advance on the I O U of the client, the prisoner went away, and shortly returned with an I O U for 1,000*l.* purporting to be signed by the client and himself, on which he asked for a loan of 500*l.* This aroused suspicion, and on application to the client, who lived in the town, the fraud was discovered, and the prisoner given into custody. The jury inquired if they could return a verdict of insanity, and being informed by the Recorder that his counsel had not put in any plea of insanity, the jury returned a verdict of guilty. The Recorder, in a feeling address to the prisoner on the disgrace he had brought on himself, sentenced him to eighteen months' imprisonment. The prisoner then requested permission to speak, and said, "I had no intention whatever to rob Mr. Pritchett or Mr. Wells. I fully intended and should have taken the whole to Mr. Pritchett. There would have been no fraud upon him, and Mr. Wells would have been no loser. I have that satisfaction and pleasing reflection."

The Lawyers in Ireland.—The Wexford Independent publishes the following singular and amusing letter from Mr. French, the father of the Bar in that county:—

"New Ross, Oct. 25, 1852.

"My dear Sir,—The civil business of our sessions, which commenced last Wednesday, terminated on Friday, and there being only 200 civil bills, with fourteen attorneys!! in attendance, the enclosed notice was circulated amongst the Bar, and my friend Mr. Howlett and myself have no objection to your making known the melancholy facts.

"Yours, &c.

"To John Green, esq." "A. F. French."

"To the Legal Profession.—Mr. Martin A. Howlett, of New Ross, solicitor, begs leave to inform his legal brethren that he has set apart a portion of his present farm, at Arnestown, for the purpose of imparting to them instruction in spade husbandry, and the use of the pickaxe, previous to their exodus to the diggings. A competent person will attend. The lectures will commence on the 2nd of November next, being the 1st day of Michaelmas Term, as the attendance of the Profession will not be required in Dublin.

The English, Irish, and Scottish Bars.—The English Bar embraces nearly 2,000 members, the Irish about 600, and the Scottish about 400. In each of the three countries one of the sons of every family of consequence among the gentry usually becomes a member of the Bar, and not a few of the younger scions of noble families also attach themselves to the same profession. There are about 600 actual practitioners out of the 2,000 members at the English Bar, including the Equity and Common Law departments; about 200 at the Irish Bar, out of the 600 members; and about 120 at the Scotch Bar, out of the 400 members; the proportion of men at each who settle down to positive practice being nearly the same in the several countries as compared with the whole actual number called.

Irish Law Reforms.—It is semi-officially stated, that the law officers have not been idle during the long vacation, but have prepared several comprehensive measures of legal reform. Among those measures will be one for the consolidation and reform of the law of landlord and tenant in all its branches, and the settlement of the landed interest in Ireland upon a more safe and satisfactory basis as to the respective rights, privileges, and duties of both classes. Another of the promised panaceas is a measure for the reform of common law procedure and pleading of the Superior Courts, in order to simplify and improve its forms, and render its administration more speedy, certain, and economical. All parties will heartily wish Mr. Napier a "safe deliverance."

Liability of Solicitors to give Evidence.—In a case in the Court of Bankruptcy, on Monday, Mr. Parsons, in opening a new petition, sought to establish an act of bankruptcy by examining Mr. Watts, the trader's own solicitor.—Mr. Watts said he did not refuse to be examined, but he objected on principle, as it would be a breach of professional confidence.—His Honour said an attorney ought not to disclose communications made to him professionally by his client.—Mr. Parsons believed that some of the commissioners had ruled that an attorney, under certain circumstances, might be examined. In this case Mr. Watts could give important evidence; and he was not the debtor's attorney.—His Honour (to Mr. Watts): Were you the debtor's attorney?—Mr. Watts: On the 28th of last month he consulted me about his affairs. I repeat, I have no objection to be examined, except as a matter of principle.—His Honour: It is your duty to take the objection; and I do not think you ought to be called on to give evidence.

The Visitor having heard the appeal of the Rev. Robert Whish, against the order of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester, for his removal from the head mastership of their school, made on the 19th day of October, 1849, declares that the appellant shall, on the 1st of January now next ensuing, be reinstated in his said office of head schoolmaster, with a caution not to repeat the offence contained in his pamphlet, and for which "he might be lawfully and justly punished under the Cathedral Statutes."

"Much Regretted." — Mr. Robert Jack Watts, an attorney, of 11, Furnival's-inn, Charles Perry, and Samuel D. N. Grissell, who were described as the sons of respectable parents, were finally committed for trial on Tuesday, at Lambeth, on a charge of obtaining money by means of false and fraudulent cheques. Amongst the papers found on Watts, was the following extraordinary document, in his own handwriting:—"Deaths.—On the 9th instant, accidentally drowned whilst fishing in the Thames below Henley, Robert Jack Watts, Esq. late of St. John's Wood and Furnival's-inn, and of Cranbrook, Kent, aged 24, much regretted."

Irish Law Reforms.—It is semi-officially stated that the law officers have not been idle during the long vacation, as some persons might imagine; on the contrary, several comprehensive measures of legal reform have been matured, and will be ready to be submitted to Parliament on its re-assembling. Among those measures will be one for the consolidation and reform of the law of landlord and tenant in all its branches, and the settlement of the landed interest in Ireland upon a more safe and satisfactory basis as to the respective rights, privileges, and duties of both classes. Another of the promised panaceas is a measure for the reform of common law procedure and pleading of the Superior Courts, in order to simplify and improve its forms, and render its administration more speedy, certain, and economical. All parties will heartily wish Mr. Napier a "safe deliverance."

Joint-Stock Enterprise.—The total capital required by the various Joint-Stock Companies, including gold, railway, banking, and mining undertakings, projected during the present year, is estimated to amount to 30,000,000*l.* independent of the usual supplies in the shape of calls and loans for established companies.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1852.

TO READERS.

VERY few points have yet arisen in the Courts upon the new practice. All of them will be found among the reports, and they will continue to be regularly reported. Particular attention will be given to them in a commentary next week.

The first of a series of articles familiarly explaining the proceedings in an action at law under the new practice will appear in our next.

LORD DENMAN'S LETTER—THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

LORD DENMAN has addressed the following letter to the Editor of the Law Review:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW REVIEW.

SIR,—Mr. COX has conferred an honour upon me by the dedication of his important work,(a) which I should have been eager to acknowledge had I not been informed that he is absent on a long continental tour. But he therein has also called upon me for an expression of my sentiments respecting some recent changes, anticipating a course which I am by no means satisfied that it would be right or expedient for me to take. For this reason I trouble you with a few observations, flowing from the anxious wish I have always felt to assist in the improvement of the law, and along with it the interest and honour of the Legal Profession.

At page 7 I find this sentence:—

"My Lord,—I much fear that the glory of the Bar of England has departed—that its sun is set—and that it is doomed to destruction, or to a change of character and position that will be more lamentable than destruction.

"The recent revolution in the manner of administering justice, by substituting local tribunals for the great central fountains of law in Westminster-hall, combined with the simplifications of procedure that annihilate all those minor fees by which the juniors of the Bar have been supported hitherto through the inevitable period of probation, will so reduce the amount of employment for Barristers, that their numbers—already too great—will be more than ever disproportioned to the business; and hundreds, nay thousands, must go out of the Profession, or be starved out, before demand and supply can be equalised, and there will be a prospect of even a moderate provision for a few."

Again, at p. 10, 11:—

"Many entertain sanguine expectations that the reforms now in progress in the Courts of Law will restore much of the lost business, and even increase it. I cannot share this hope.

"The attractions of the County Courts to suitors who have disputes to try are such as no reform in the Superior Courts could rival. The rapidity with which trials can be heard, the convenience of a hearing on the very day appointed, without the cost and trouble of conveyance of witnesses to a distant place; the satisfaction of knowing that, when a case is tried, it is settled, and cannot be disturbed again and again,—sources of vexation to suitors in the Superior Courts which more trouble them even than the bill of costs, that tells them that justice can be too dearly purchased—these are tangible benefits which suitors will not readily resign. Improve the Common Law Courts as we may, they will never compete successfully with the County Courts in these particulars, and therefore I entertain but faint hopes of any large revival of business in them; and certainly I despair of such as will compensate for the fees of the Bar that are swept away by the recent statute, and by which the juniors subsisted, or were much assisted to subsist, while acquiring the experience necessary for leadership. If juniors cannot now live by the Bar, whence are to come our future leaders—whence our judges?"

The inference is drawn in page 11:—

"I trust, therefore, that if it should come to a question whether the rule as to taking briefs in the County Courts should be rescinded, your lordship's influential voice will be lifted up against it."

No juster or livelier description of the benefits that were reasonably expected, and have actually been proved to arise, from the establishment of County Courts has ever been given. It will, indeed, be unfortunate if their utility should be found incompatible with the honour and interests of the English Bar. I do not share these fears, nor believe that the glory of that illustrious body depended on such causes, or that the same qualities which have raised its character hitherto will at any time fail to command equal estimation with that which it now deservedly enjoys.

It must, however, I think, be confessed that a considerable change is sure to be effected, and that those who have been most laudably anxious to establish County Courts have been somewhat careless in considering their probable collateral effects. The present loss of emolument may certainly bear hard upon individuals; yet, when we consider the items of which it was composed, one cannot but feel some regret that this loss should have been made the subject of complaint. Nothing could be more invidious than for an old Barrister to revive the defunct catalogue of side-bar rules, of motions of course, and motions to oppose and justify bail, and motions for leave to plead several matters, and rules to shew cause why interest should not be computed on notes and bills, followed by motions that the Court would be pleased to make the said rules absolute.

Such was the description of business done contained in the bill of costs delivered to the client for his information. In fact, there was nothing to tell, except that the attorney had advanced the money to the barrister, and must be repaid by his client. For the most part no service whatever had been rendered.(b) The guineas and half-guineas were simply law taxes. Fees of court were another set of law taxes, for which some nominal service was done; but the question wherefore these were levied must have been answered by stating that their purpose was to enable the attorney, at the suitor's expense, to put a little money into the pocket of a barrister, his kinsman or his friend; and he had no small proportion of these profits. He made a charge for drawing the brief of instruction to do nothing, and another for waiting on his counsel with the aforesaid brief.

The relief administered to the suitor by repealing the tax is one great and direct advantage to the public; the simplification of procedure by which the repeal is effected may be described in the same language; but I doubt whether the indirect advantage is not far more valuable than either.

The "minor fees" were twofold, some paid by plaintiffs suing to enforce just claims, recoverable at law, but often not recovered in fact, from the debtors; many more paid by those debtors as the price of the "law's delay," which in general quickened and completed the ruin which it had been purchased to avert. If from these not very creditable sources a revenue was collected in the hands of attorneys for the benefit of poor barristers, I cannot help thinking the cessation of such patronage a great gain to the Bar. But I believe they were much oftener applied to the comforts or luxuries of private connections and friends among the barristers, with little care for the future prosperity of the Profession.

But there is a pressing difficulty of a practical nature arising from the constitution of County Courts. What course is the Bar to take? To insist on the intervention of an Attorney in every case, or to be free to accept a brief and instructions directly from the client? To adhere to the etiquette which has prevailed in the Superior Courts, and is tolerably well understood, or adopt some new one, whose working, whose effects, and, above all, whose consequences, are wholly matter of speculation?

To reduce the number of cases in which the question may arise does nothing towards its solution. But, if it be true that three-fourths of all the causes tried in County Courts are, on both sides, conducted by the parties, without assistance either from counsel or solicitor, here is matter for serious reflection. The disputes which grow out of ordinary transactions seldom involve legal doubts, or require the exertion of professional skill; and the diffusion of improved education has taught men in general a freer use of their own powers of narration and argument. What is called a legal understanding is rarely required, except for the discussion of the rules, unavoidably arbitrary, which regulate the descent and transmission of real property, and of those more recondite secrets in the art or mystery of special pleading, which the good sense of the late House of Commons virtually extinguished by putting an end to special demurrers.

Lord Mansfield advised the student of English law, with the intention of practising at the Bar, to begin with "Tully's Offices"—the title then given to Cicero's three books, "De Officiis." A clear understanding of the duties of men in society was considered by him as the true basis of legal science. I may cite one of the ablest lawyers of this century, who to strong natural sense united the largest experience, for a similar opinion,—my honoured master, the late Mr. Tidd. I well remember the advice he gave to a pupil, who was about to commence practice: "When you are called upon for your opinion, make yourself perfect master of the facts, and then consider what is right. You may be pretty sure that is the law, without looking much into cases."

When once the facts are well ascertained, few persons differ in opinion as to the result of a civil action. But this ascertainment of facts is no easy matter, and here the assistance of the Advocate may become all-important. Here is the point at which the question must be asked and answered,—"In what manner, and upon what condition, is the Advocate's assistance to be afforded?"

Occasionally, at least, eminent and experienced counsel must be called upon to act in County Courts. A rule prevailing in the Profession that Barristers should accept briefs in the Superior Courts from no hands but those of an Attorney was incorporated by Act of Parliament into the practice of the County Courts; but in the late session, when their jurisdiction was extended, a repeal of this provision was attempted in the House of Lords, but failed; a clause having that object was added by the Commons, who probably detected something absurd in the enforcement of professional etiquette by Queen, Lords, and Commons; and, besides, might doubt the propriety of maintaining an etiquette which would have necessitated a double outlay by the suitor, and so have run the risk of denying justice to the injured.

If the etiquette cannot be made matter of law, can it be expected to establish itself in this new state of things by virtue of an agreement, either express or implied, among the members of the bar? I do not hesitate to declare my opinion, founded on ex-

(a) "The Advocate, his Training, Practice, Rights, and Duties." By Edward W. Cox, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Vol. I.

(b) "The opposition to persons tendered as bail was, however, no sinecure. Counsel were employed to protect plaintiffs against being defrauded of a security to which the law entitled them, by what were called 'Sham Bail.' Such persons frequented the courts and the judges' chambers, and were hired for that office. Counsel examined them severely as to their means of paying all their just debts, as well as those sought to be recovered in the several actions in which they became bail, but were bound by their answers. They generally passed, even when every hearer was convinced of their insolvency. The scene was a lively one, and formerly was acted before the whole court; afterwards a single judge presided, and the three others had a holyday on the great bail day. There was then a separate court established for this drama, during the performance of which before one of the learned judges the other three went through the ordinary routine of duty. This change could not be effected without an Act of Parliament. Finally, came the abolition of arrest on mesne process in 1838, and the total extinction of this branch of business. A respectable elderly practitioner, dying soon after, is said to have met his death from a suppression of bail."

perience as well as reflection, that it cannot, and, therefore, feel it to be unnecessary to enter on that difficult inquiry, "What practice ought to be agreed on?"

I am sorry to find my answer so unsatisfactory to Mr. Cox's appeal. It is not for want of careful consideration. But the affairs of the world do not stand still while they are under discussion. Pending the controversy respecting the best possible practice, some practice has been actually adopted. What it is, or whether it has been uniform, I have no means of knowing; but I believe we may safely lay this down as a truth:—That all interference of authority with the freedom of actions not in themselves wrong is to be avoided as an evil, and one that most commonly aggravates whatever evil it was designed to correct. The forum domesticum, to which the Profession paid allegiance, as a band of brothers, can hardly maintain its authority over a family so widely diffused, so indefinitely multiplied. Without rules the honourable man will act correctly, and none will restrain those of opposite character.

"But I will not yet despair of the fortunes of Westminster-hall, which rose with intellectual energy and moral worth, and will not fall by the failure of some accidental but problematical advantages. The numerous seats of judicature in the County Courts are added to the existing rewards of industry and learning, likely, we may hope, to be rendered more attractive by occasional promotions from them to the higher judicial rank. The numerous legal establishments in the colonies greatly multiply the prospects of a respectable position and comfortable competency. The aspirant must still support himself during the tedious but inevitable time of waiting for business by some expenditure of capital, if he possess it, by the aid of friends, or by some of the numerous employments that are constantly demanding and remunerating intellectual labour. A greater number of treatises on jurisprudence, with more philosophic views than have been usual among us, may be expected, and we may confidently predict that regular attendance at those practical lectures which the Superior Courts at Westminster are constantly reading will be one of the highest recommendations to this and various other offices. All these causes will conspire to preserve that supremacy of character which has induced the Legislature to lodge the supremacy of power with the old-established tribunals of the realm.

Yours respectfully,

Sept. 20, 1852. DENMAN.

An authority so justly respected, on such a subject, will probably be deemed conclusive by all that section of the Junior Bar which has been for a long time burning to enter the lists against the Attorneys, believing, we think erroneously, that the blindness or the partiality of the Attorneys now stands between them and business, and in the hope, we suspect a vain one, that if this barrier were removed, and clients permitted to communicate with them in person, they would be preferred to the Attorneys.

Sanctioned by such an authority, which we admit to be a sufficient justification for them upon any question of professional etiquette that might be raised, we shall doubtless see trial made of the experiment, and a Bar in all the County Courts striving to subsist by half-guinea fees and dispensing with the Attorneys.

We confess the grief and alarm with which we have read Lord DENMAN'S approval of this projected revolution in the practice of the Profession; the more so as, we believe, he stands almost, if not quite, alone among the Judges in that opinion; because it will be enough to point to his venerated name when a justification is sought for the consequences involved in the change, as well as for the change itself which he has thus publicly approved; because it is an irrevocable step and the door once opened cannot again be closed, the landmarks once trodden over and erased cannot be restored.

For better, for worse, we fear the deed is done now; that remonstrance will come too late. Nevertheless, in justification of that call upon Lord DENMAN which evoked so unexpected a response, as a last and earnest protest against what we believe to be a fatal step, we will briefly repeat the reasons why we have been and are still so hostile to the practice of the Bar receiving clients without the intervention of an Attorney.

We admit their right to do so. We accept Lord DENMAN'S authority that it would not be a breach of professional etiquette. We assert only that in practice it will prove to be the destruction of the Bar.

Its inevitable effect will be to convert the Barrister into an Attorney, by mingling functions that, according to the present rule of practice, are perfectly defined and distinct.

If the Barrister is to take instructions from the suitor, he must see him: he cannot receive instructions without making some notes: if there are witnesses, he must see them also, for he cannot trust to the client's narrative of what they will prove. Nor can he trust to his own memory for their statements; he must take notes, and those notes will be his brief. In fact, he must perform the function of the Attorney in preparing his own brief.

This is the certain consequence to which all who so practise must submit. But can it be supposed that it will stop there—that the line that separates the functions of Advocate and Attorney being passed so far, there will be no further trespass? Remember, that by this step the Bar, which has hitherto been allied with the Attorneys, will be thrown into open and direct opposition to them; they will be rivals and competitors for business; where the competition is active, as it will be in the provincial towns, there is danger of a strife to catch clients, and in that strife what further mischiefs will not be done? The Bar in the provinces, thus exposed to the temptations of a direct conflict with rivals who have better opportunities than they to win the favour of the client, will be deserted by the best men, who will not engage in such a struggle; and if any wigs remain, they will be worn by men who are less scrupulous, and who will fight their opponents with their own weapons. If any proof were wanting, we have it in the case of Mr. KENNEDY, at Birmingham, who has already tried the experiment, who is in rivalry with the Attorneys there, and to outwit them, has established a cheap law society, to supply the subscribers with law at so much per annum. If that has been already done in Birmingham, by a man of Mr. KENNEDY'S undoubted ability, and of some standing and repute, what may not be anticipated when the provinces are flooded with juniors, who have not even the restraints which he had, and who will be exposed to the same rivalry and the same temptations?

Any hope that such a practice might be limited to the County Courts appears to us to be perfectly fallacious. If the Barrister is permitted to advise a client, or to take instructions without an Attorney, how will it be possible to assign any limits at which that advice shall stop? If, for instance, a client seeks advice on a claim he has for 50*l.*; he calls upon the Barrister and pays his fee. The case may be taken either into the Superior Court or into the County Court. In the one case, the Barrister is to be estopped from advising further; in the other, he may advise through the whole process, draw his own brief, and take the case into court without an Attorney. But will he be estopped in the former case? Will so impalpable a line be strictly drawn? At what precise point in the case are his functions to be suspended and those of the regular Attorney to be called in? If that moment be found, is he to recommend the Attorney, or, which is more pertinent, is he not to do so?

We might multiply instances without end to prove the impossibility of preserving any distinction between the functions of Advocate and Attorney, if the existing clearly defined and indisputable barrier be broken down. Indeed, a case does not suggest itself in which difficulties do not arise.

If such should be the consequences, the effect upon the position of the Bar cannot but be extremely injurious, socially and professionally. It will lose caste. The Barrister will cease to be the Advocate, "pure and simple;" he will be a sort of Attorney, without being quite an Attorney, and he will lose the respectability that attaches to either profession.

Nor do we believe that he will gain in actual business that which the sanguine promoters of the change are anticipating. The Bar cannot compete successfully with the Attorneys in their own province. The Attorney has opportunities for obtaining clients and securing them which the Barrister could not enjoy; and when they are rivals, those advantages will certainly be employed. Nor will the public be found so ready as is supposed to quit the Attorney, whom they must consult in many of their affairs, for the Barrister whom they could only want occasionally. And in very truth, for the vast majority of cases that come before the County Courts, a shrewd Attorney, accustomed to the business of life and conversant with accounts, is more competent than a young Barrister fresh from college and the Temple, however accomplished as a scholar, or primed with lectures on international law, or well read in the text-books, which cannot be brought to bear upon a cross-account between two tradesmen, or a dispute about the performance of a contract. Suitors feel this, and that is the true reason why, in the County Courts, having the power to employ Counsel, they are content to leave cases to their Attorneys.

Nor will this be prevented by the migration of the Bar now in progress, nor by half-guinea fees, nor by dispensing with the Attorneys. The ablest men, of course, will not go to the provinces, or be content with a County Court practice. And although suitors and Attorneys might be well satisfied to have the aid of the best men of the Bar, and the ablest Attorney would, doubtless, admit his inferiority as an Advocate to the ablest Barrister, who has made advocacy the business of his life, it is quite another matter with the men who must form the Bars of the County Courts; who must either be beginners, and, therefore, without experience; or, if "old stagers," must want the ability to go to something better.—The clever and experienced Attorney knows himself to be more apt than such—his clients know it, too—and they will give him the preference.

Therefore it is, we believe, that little is to be gained by the Bar in any departure from its practice in relation to the Attorneys, while it hazards its entire position and endangers its very existence.

Then comes the question, what is the Bar to do? It must do something, or die.

To this there is but one reply—it must submit to circumstances. The Bar is enormously overstocked: it must adapt its numbers to its needs. All the business that supported juniors, and a host of pleaders and learned lawyers, has been swept away. Soon no other than Advocates—Nisi Prius men—will survive in the Common Law Courts. They are necessarily few; but those few will be well rewarded. All the business beyond that of pure advocacy will be done by the Attorneys. That is the position to which we are coming and must come. It is, we believe, vain to hope that it can be prevented by sending down all the surplus host of Westminster Hall to the County Courts to do battle for business against the Attorneys, by help of relaxed rules and half-guinea fees. This desperate expedient will lower the status of the whole Bar, without providing the subsistence that is thus sought by those whom the changes in the law, in the constitution of the Profession, and in society, have, in fact, converted into supernumeraries.

THE MEETING OF THE SOLICITORS AT DERBY.

THE great meeting of Solicitors at Derby, reported last week, affords gratifying proof that the Profession in the provinces is awakening to a sense of the necessity for association and co-operation, if they would successfuly wield the great influence they individually possess for the promotion of their common welfare, in resistance to attacks made and meditated, and in the advancement of their professional and social status. Many years ago we ventured to prefer the claims of the Attorneys in the country to a very much higher position in the esteem of their metropolitan brethren than they had previously enjoyed; we reminded themselves, as well as our neighbours in London, of the large amount of intelligence, of independence, of wealth, of influence, possessed by the country solicitors, and we took the liberty of calling upon them to use these advantages for the general good of the Profession, and we told them that the only means of doing so was—association.

These exhortations were not in vain. An association was formed. We thought then, and we are still of opinion, that it would have been more prudent to have formed an association of the provincial Attorneys only, because the London Attorneys were already associated in the Law Institution, which amply protects their interests, and sufficiently and ably represents them; because the interests of the two classes are not always identical, and when they differed, an overwhelming advantage would be enjoyed by the metropolitans, in the entire command of the one society, and that sway in the counsels of the other which proximity would necessarily give them. It appeared to us that the desired object—the protection of the interests of all—would be best secured by two societies acting independently, but in friendly spirit, each representing and regarding a distinct interest, than by two societies, one of which was all on one side, and the other largely swayed by the same element that wholly governed that one.

This opinion as to what would be the true interest of the Provincial Attorneys, was not, however, shared by the promoters of the Association, and they resolved that the Society should be both Metropolitan and Provincial. At all events, the primary object, association of some kind, was gained, and it would have been folly to dispute as to the precise manner of doing it. The Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association was the result, and it has continued its useful labours from that time to the present, deserving and receiving the confidence of the Profession, upon whose interests it keeps a watchful eye.

The changes made and threatened in the Practice of the Law, and the rumours of contemplated invasions by one branch of the Profession upon the other, having made a union of its members more than ever needful, the Association resolved to renew its claims to support, and accordingly the meeting was summoned which was so fully reported last week.

The tone of that meeting was such as might have been anticipated from recent events. If some of the speakers were not so measured in their language as the reader might desire, their excuse is that they had received much provocation. For a long time past, there has been manifested in many quarters a desire, by a portion of the junior Bar, to invade the province of the Attorneys by advising or accepting briefs from clients in person, without the intervention of an Attorney. To prepare the way for this, a series of attacks were made in some of the newspapers against the Attorneys as a class; they were systematically abused by a portion of the daily press; a magazine, notorious only for its blackguardisms and personalities, devoted an article, under the the title of "Attorneydom," to their vilification. The Junior Bar commenced a publication purposely to support their scheme. Now it has passed from words to deeds. That which has been advocated is to be done. It is authoritatively announced by that same Junior Bar, through their organ, that they propose to put their projects into practice.

It is not, therefore, until it is needful, that the Attorneys have united for self-defence. The relationship that has hitherto existed between the two branches of the Profession is about to be abruptly dissolved; a totally new practice is to be introduced; they who have acted together are henceforth to be rivals; they are to compete for clients out of Court, and strive with one another in Court.

Circumstances may have made this revolution in the practice of the Profession a necessity for the Bar—that is a question which we cannot now pause to discuss: enough that, whether right or wrong, desirable or undesirable, it is a fact. Being thus invaded, the Attorneys are but following the natural instinct of self-preservation in uniting to resist the invasion; and they only shew themselves human in speaking severely of the invaders. Hence the tone of the meeting; hence, too, the importance at this moment of a more cordial union than has hitherto existed between the Attorneys in the provinces, who are only weak and open to attack, because the great influence which each enjoys as an individual has not been concentrated upon one focus, and directed to a common object by means of that modern lever of society —association.

For our own part, our course was taken long ago, and in the impending conflict we shall steadily adhere to it. We shall continue to oppose the invasion of one branch of the Profession by the other; we shall protest to the last against the severance of those ties of friendly relationship, advantageous to both, which have hitherto maintained the status alike of the Attorneys and of the Bar, and we shall do so because we believe the proposed changes cannot be accomplished without much present injury to the Attorneys and the not distant destruction of the Bar.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

We are glad to hear that the important subject of the Assimilation of the Commercial Laws of England, Ireland, and Scotland, is to be brought forward at a conference, which will be attended by deputations from various Chambers of Commerce, and other public bodies, and is to be held at the rooms of the Law Amendment Society, on the 16th of November. Our readers will also feel great satisfaction in learning that deputations have already promised to attend from the Incorporated Law Society, the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and the Manchester Law Society. We shall notice the subject at length next week.

SKETCH OF THE SCOTCH LAW COURTS.

ARTICLE NINE.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE—A PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

The result of the labours of the Commissioners appointed to digest the Criminal Law, and of the subsequent Commissioners appointed to revise and amend it, have now been buried in a three years' repose, and the vis inertiæ of succeeding Governments bids fair to put the seal of oblivion on the whole matter. Sanguine law reformers may wax indignant at this consummation, and continue to sneer at the disgraceful mass of patchwork which must in the meantime be called the mildest and most humane code of criminal law in existence, and Lord Brougham, indignant at the folly of wasting 60,000*l.* of the public money so fruitlessly, may offer from his own pocket to repay our penurious Chancellor of the Exchequer what little additional expenditure is required to complete the undertaking. There is, however, no immediate prospect of stirring up the sluggish torpor of official life, unless a better spirit may have now come over the dreams of our Lord Chancellors. It rather seems to be our fate to see the proposed complement of amendments extorted bit by bit and session by session in true English fashion; and we have lately had one or two of these instalments. Another may safely be expected in the course of the approaching session—the abolition of Grand Juries in certain cases at least within the metropolitan district; an experiment which must lead to further changes. The long-expected boon of a public prosecutor, which must also sooner or later be conceded, is probably a few years farther off. In the mean time we may consider with some advantage the criminal procedure of Scotland, which abounds in points of curious interest to the English Lawyer.

Whatever may be thought of the merits of the Scotch procedure in civil matters, as contrasted with our own, especially since its latest amendments, there can scarcely be two opinions as to our inferiority in many respects in the department of criminal procedure. When the Criminal Law Commissioners were engaged in 1844, in digesting that portion of our law, they took the opportunity of extensively sifting the leading opinions then prevalent in the Profession as to certain moot points. Amongst others were the questions,—Who ought to be intrusted with the duty of prosecution; whether a Grand Jury is in all cases, except in criminal informations and Coroners' Inquisitions, an indispensable access to justice; whether the verdict of the jury should in all cases be unanimous; whether there should not be a third verdict of "not proved?" On these and many other points, the law of Scotland throws light. There has been a Public Prosecutor there for nearly 300 years. There is no such thing as binding over private parties and their witnesses. No Grand Jury is needed to molest the city shopkeepers. Juries can acquit or convict by a majority, and they can find a verdict of "Not proved." The prisoner's counsel has always the last word, and every pauper prisoner has counsel and attorney assigned him as a matter of course. Other miscellaneous points will also bear mentioning. The chief, however, is, that relating to a Public Prosecutor.

We need not waste words in attempting to establish the superiority of the institution of a public prosecutor over the present practice prevailing here, of leaving so important a social duty in the hands of private individuals. Most of those who have considered the subject have condemned that practice as vicious, though the Criminal Law Commissioners admitted great caution would be necessary in effecting a change. The few adherents of our present system seem to cling to old traditions, chiefly because they labour under erroneous impressions as to what is implied in the change proposed, especially as that change is exemplified in Scotland. We shall accordingly proceed at once to describe the working of the whole machinery as it exists in that country.

The Supreme Criminal Court in Scotland is called the High Court of Justiciary, the Judges of which belong also to the Court of Session—the highest civil court. The Justiciary Court goes circuit twice a year, and in populous districts thrice. The chief public prosecutor for all Scotland is the Lord Advocate, who has a gradation of subordinates extending to each county. The Solicitor-General is second in rank, and acts in the necessary absence of his chief. The Lord Advocate, however, does not go circuit. He appoints four Depute-Advocates, who are always barristers of several years' standing, and they have each a salary of 500*l.* a-year. One Advocate-Depute goes each circuit for the purpose of conducting all the criminal prosecutions of the country, Scotland, for that purpose, being divided into three circuits. The Justiciary Court thus disposes of all the higher offences, as the Common Law Judges do in this country. The local Criminal Court, which corresponds to our Quarter Sessions, is that of the Sheriff or County Court Judge, whose extensive jurisdiction in civil matters we described in previous articles. It will be recollected that the sheriff is a barrister of several years' standing, and is the chief local judge in each county. His criminal jurisdiction coincides very nearly in point of extent with that exercised in our Quarter Sessions. Each sheriff appoints one or more attorneys to act as procurator fiscal in a certain district, and this functionary is the Crown Solicitor, or public official informer in all criminal offences within his district. He is not paid like the higher officers by a salary, but according to the work done, his bill of costs being sent in and taxed by the Exchequer-office in Scotland.

Whenever the procurator-fiscal of the district receives intelligence that a criminal offence has been committed, it is his duty forthwith to investigate it. If it is a minor offence falling within the Sheriff's or Quarter Sessions jurisdiction, or a petty offence, which is punishable in a summary way, he takes the exclusive management of it, and carries on all the proceedings from first to last in the local court. In all the heavier offences, however, such as would rank as felonies or select misdemeanours here (for our anomalous classification of offences into felonies and misdemeanours is not recognised in Scotland), the procurator fiscal reports the case to head quarters. Where he does not do this, he carries on the proceedings at the risk of an action for malicious prosecution where there is no probable cause. In order, therefore, to see fully the modus procedendi we shall suppose a serious crime to have been committed in the country.

The individual who is wronged, or any other person cognizant of the circumstances, goes at once to the procurator fiscal of the district, who acts forthwith on the intelligence by proceeding to the magistrate, and as the Sheriff is always an ex officio magistrate, it is generally the Sheriff he resorts to. The fiscal states verbally what he has heard, and from whom, and also signs a written information stating the charge, which information, however, is not made on oath in any case, the signature being sufficient. He then asks the magistrate for a warrant to arrest the accused. This is granted at once on the grounds stated verbally, all that the magistrate's duty require him to look to is, that the procurator fiscal has signed the information, the latter being responsible if the proceeding is groundless. The warrant is executed as it would be in this country, there being similar exceptional cases, where a private individual or constable may arrest without a warrant. The party, on being arrested, must be brought before the Sheriff without any unnecessary delay, when he is informed of the accusation, and if he is in a fit state to understand it, he is cautioned, that anything he may say may be used against him. If the prisoner thereupon make a statement, it is taken down in writing and signed by him or the magistrate and by witnesses present, and may be used at the trial. The prisoner is then by magistrate's warrant committed, as a matter of course for further examination, without hearing any evidence, and he is not entitled to bail till the depositions are finished, though sometimes he is allowed that favour; but on the other hand, the accused cannot be kept in prison beyond a few days on this warrant, and it has been decided that it is illegal to confine him seventeen days in these circumstances. It never happens, as it often does here, that a prisoner may be kept waiting six weeks, being remanded every five or six days to admit of the evidence being concluded. This is done in Scotland promptly and from day to day, and seldom occupies a week. We have supposed the accused to be apprehended immediately, but it is not necessary for the sheriff and procurator fiscal to wait for that event; they may and always do proceed to take the depositions at once. We have called them depositions, but in reality they are not depositions in our sense of the term. They are technically styled precognitions, and are mere declarations or statements of the witnesses as to what each knows of the matter, and they are not made on oath. But though not made on oath they are made in a solemn manner in presence of the magistrate, the procurator fiscal examining each witness and the evidence being taken down in writing. The whole inquiry is quite secret and ex parte: the accused and his friends are neither entitled to be present, and to cross-examine, nor are they entitled afterwards to have a copy; but, on the other hand, these declarations cannot be given in evidence at the trial. Each witness, on such occasions, is examined separately, and does not hear what is said by another. The examinations or precognitions being concluded in a few days, the magistrate then has the same discretion as a magistrate has here, after taking the depositions, viz. to discharge the prisoner, or commit for trial. If he commits for trial, he signs a warrant to that effect, and thereby detains the prisoner. The prisoner may then petition the magistrate to be admitted to bail, and the latter must decide in twenty-four hours at the peril of an action for false imprisonment, whether it is a bailable offence or not. This distinction depends on a statute of 1701, which divides offences into those not capital, where bail must be accepted, and those capital, where it must be refused, and the statute also specifies the amount of bail which is proper to be taken. Thus, 600*l.* for a landed proprietor, 300*l.* for a gentleman or householder, and 60*l.* for a private person: but in practice the magistrate accepts less amounts than these.

The moment the accused is committed for trial, a copy of the examinations or precognitions is forwarded to the Lord Advocate, who immediately either reads them himself or hands them over to the advocate depute, within whose circuit the offence was committed. One or other of these officials peruses the examinations with his practised eye, and at once makes up his mind as to whether there is a primâ facie case or not. If he thinks there is no case, he sends an order for the immediate discharge of the prisoner; if otherwise, for his detention. In either case the decision is arrived at in two or three days. If the examinations disclose a trifling or absurd case, the Advocate-depute reprimands the procurator fiscal where the latter is blameable; if the evidence is not quite full enough, he orders an additional examination. Thus a great number of prisoners against whom a practised lawyer can see no primâ facie case, are released at once after a short confinement. But though the Crown officer orders the accused to be discharged, the private relator or individual wronged may nevertheless then take the prosecution into his own hands, in which case he obtains the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, who cannot refuse to add his name. The private party, however, proceeds at his own expense and his own risk: if he fails, he may be liable to an action for malicious prosecution; if he succeeds, the professional character of the Crown officer who declined to prosecute suffers in consequence. Further, if the Crown officer thinks the charge is not without foundation, but that the result will be, that only a moderate punishment, such as a fine, will be inflicted, he remits the case to be proceeded with in the local or Sheriff's Court, where the procurator fiscal is the public prosecutor. But if otherwise, the case is reserved to be dealt with by the High Court of Justiciary, either in Edinburgh or on circuit.

The same Crown counsel who has previously read the examinations or precognitions, and advised the detention of the prisoner, forthwith proceeds to prepare the indictment, and he must also appear at the trial to conduct the prosecution. He has no pecuniary interest in the proceedings, for he is paid by salary. We shall then at this stage suppose that the indictment is prepared, and shall in the mean time glance at the facilities enjoyed by the prisoner for getting up his defence. In the first place he has the power of forcing on his trial to a greater degree than is practicable here; the Scotch Habeas Corpus Act being more favourable to him in this particular. By no possible combination of circumstances can he be detained in prison awaiting his trial beyond one hundred and forty days; if he is not tried within that period, he is ipso facto entitled to be unconditionally discharged, and he cannot be tried thereafter on a fresh indictment. But even this is only the extreme period, which can be shortened in the following way. Where he wishes to lose no time, he can immediately after being committed serve a notice on the procurator fiscal and Lord Advocate, calling upon them to bring him to trial within the statutory period, which is specified in the Habeas Corpus Act. This statute is peremptory in requiring that the indictment should be prepared, and a copy served on the prisoner within sixty days after the notice, and the trial itself must take place within forty days immediately following the service of the indictment—in all one hundred days from giving notice to the prosecutor. If either of these two events do not occur within their successive periods respectively, the prisoner must be discharged forthwith, and no fresh warrant can be issued by any magistrate to re-arrest him. The High Court of Justiciary, however, may in such a case issue a warrant to arrest, in which event he must be tried within forty days thereafter; otherwise he is again entitled to be discharged, and that for ever. If the prisoner has not availed himself of the above provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act, the Court will on application by the Crown prosecutor, postpone the trial, on cause shown, as for instance on the absence of a material witness, and the prisoner may have the same favour: in either case he is recommitted for trial. It thus must often happen, since there are only two circuits in the year, and yet the prisoner can force on his trial in three months, that these periods do not tally. When such is the case, the prisoner must be brought up, and the witnesses also, from whatever part of the country the offence was committed in, to the Justiciary Court in Edinburgh, which sits weekly, and there the trial takes place. The expenses of this step, as well as all the expenses attending the prosecution by Crown counsel in the High Court, are paid out of the public funds, under the head of "Expenses of Prosecutions," for which an annual vote of Parliament is made. The expenses of the trials for lighter offences, which take place in the local or Sheriff Courts, fall on the county rates, and are levied in the name of "rogue money."

The advantage of thus quickening his trial is not the only one the prisoner in Scotland possesses. For there are old statutes, which have been for centuries in force, which require that, fifteen days before trial, the accused must be personally served with a copy of the indictment, a notice of the day on which the trial is to take place, a list of all the witnesses (with their designations and residences) who are to be brought against him; and lastly, a list of the names of the panel of forty-five jurors, out of whom the jury which is to try him must be selected. Great accuracy must be observed in the copies thus served, as the misdescription or misnomer of a single witness will disqualify that witness from being admissible at the trial; and before the prisoner can be arraigned, the prosecutor must prove by written evidence that these documents were duly served. Every prisoner accused of the meanest offence is thus entitled to a privilege which we reserve to certain cases of high treason only.

The above is an outline of the procedure in all cases up to the day of trial. What then and thereafter takes place, together with statistics applicable to the subject, we reserve for our next article.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS OF 1851.

The criminal tables for the past year, which have just been published, afford pleasing evidence that the decrease of crime, as compared with the amount ten years ago, continues to be maintained. For, although the slight increase of 4·2 per cent. marks the returns of 1851 as compared with those of 1850, the increase of population may be most fairly adduced as a satisfactory cause for this increase. The commitments during the last ten years stand thus:—1842, 31,309; 1843, 29,591; 1844, 26,542; 1845, 24,303; 1846, 25,107; 1847, 28,833; 1848, 30,349; 1849, 27,816; 1850, 26,813; 1851, 27,960. Total, 278,623.

The increase of 4·2 per cent. during the past year has not been confined to any particular localities. It extends generally over England and Wales, including all the chief agricultural and the largest manufacturing and commercial counties. In 1841 the commitments were in the proportion of one in every 573 of the population, while, according to the last census returns, the proportion in 1851 is reduced to one in 641. Between these two periods the population increased 12·6 per cent. while the commitments remained as nearly as possible stationary, their increase amounting only to a fraction per cent. But the relative progress of population and crime has been very different in different parts of England. In the large manufacturing districts, where the working classes during the past year have been steadily employed, the proportion of commitments to the population has signally decreased. Thus, in Yorkshire and Lancashire, the population during the last ten years has increased 18·2 per cent. while the commitments have simultaneously decreased 4·3 per cent. In Cheshire, Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, and Leicestershire, where, mixed with a considerable agricultural population, the chief silk, lace, and other textile fabrics are produced, the proportion of the commitments decreased from 1 in 579 to 1 in 633, the population having increased 7 per cent. while the commitments decreased 2 per cent. In Staffordshire, Warwickshire, and Worcestershire, the seat of the chief manufactures in hardware, pottery, and glass, the commitments decreased from 1 in 435 of the population to 1 in 552, the population having increased 20·4 per cent. and the commitments decreased 5 per cent.

In the more purely agricultural counties the progress is lower, and the results less favourable. In the eastern district, comprising Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Lincoln, the proportion of the commitments to the population has increased from 1 in 589 to 1 in 604; the increase of the population being 6·8 per cent. and of the commitments 18·4 per cent. Of the seven chief midland agricultural counties, Cambridge, Northampton, Bedford, Hertford, Oxford, Bucks, and Berks, the proportion of commitments has decreased from 1 in 572 to 1 in 620; the increase of the population being 10·3 per cent. and of the commitments 1·8 per cent. only. In the counties in the south and south-west, Hants, Wilts, Dorset, and Somerset, the result proves more favourable than in any of the other agricultural districts. The proportion of the commitments to the population has decreased from 1 in 508 to 1 in 551; the population having increased 12·5 per cent. and the commitments decreased 12·1 per cent.

On a comparison of the offences upon which the increase of the commitments last year has arisen, it appears that the increase has extended to each of the classes of crime, with the exception of the sixth class, comprising miscellaneous offences. In the first class, offences against the person, the commitments for murder, attempts to murder, wounding, &c. remain stationary; unnatural offences, however, shew an increase, as do those under the head of lesser offences of assault. In the second class, offences against property committed with violence, the commitments have been without change, except the marked increase of robbery, the tendency of the whole class, on a more extended comparison, being to an increase. In the third class, offences against property committed without violence, which contains the great bulk of the commitments, there is an increase of three per cent. arising chiefly in the commitments for larceny from the person and for frauds. The fourth class, malicious offences against property, although comprising a very small comparative proportion of the commitments, yet exhibits a marked increase, particularly under the heads of incendiarism and obstructing railway carriages. In the fifth class, forging, and offences against the currency, there is a considerable increase, particularly under the head of uttering counterfeit coin, which offence has increased 36 per cent. on a comparison of the totals of the last two five years.

The foregoing analysis refers to the total number of commitments during the past year; the following table shews the result of the judicial proceedings. We place the return of 1850 in juxtaposition for more ready comparison:—

	1850.		1851.
Not prosecuted and admitted evidence...	141	...	181
No bills found against	1,458	...	1,484
Not guilty on trial	4,639	...	4,744
Acquitted and discharged	6,238	...	6,359
Acquitted on the ground of insanity	26	...	13
Found insane	12	...	9
Sentenced to death	49	...	70
" transportation.....	2,578	...	2,838
" imprisonment	17,602	...	18,418
" whipping, fine, &c.....	307	...	218
Pardoned without sentence	1	...	7
Total number convicted.....	20,537	...	21,579

The effect of the Act of Parliament passed in 1849 to repeal the punishment of transportation on a first conviction for simple larceny, is more fully exemplified by the returns of last year. The capital sentences in 1851 are above the yearly average since 1841, when the last alteration of the law abolishing capital punishments took place. This increase arises chiefly on the offences of burglary and robbery, attended with personal violence or injuries. Of the 70 persons capitally convicted last year the sentence was recorded against 53, sentence of death upon 17; and of these 17, 10 were executed, 2 of them being females. The proportion of crime among females has shewn a slight tendency to increase on the last three years. The proportions are as follow:—1848, 23·4 females to 100 males; 1849, 24·1; 1850, 24·4; and 1851, 24·8. In the offences against the person the proportion of females last year was 13·4 to 100 males. In murder the large and increasing proportion of females, arising from the many cases of poisoning, has been much remarked. The number last year was, 41 females to 33 males.

It would be extremely interesting to compare the amount of crime with the extent of education in each county, and to be enabled to mark the extinction of the former by the growth of the latter. A remarkable instance has lately shewn that crime is rife where education is neglected. In the borough of Stockport, possessing a population of 85,000, which has just made itself conspicuous for its atrocities, the reports of the school inspector state that only 300 children were at school in the whole borough.

We do not mean to say that education would blot out crime, but there can be no doubt of its beneficial nature; and we have hope that our Legislature is beginning to discover that education is less expensive and more honourable to a nation, than huge machinery in the shape of prisons, transport ships, and penal colonies, for the punishment of crime.

CRIME IN SOMERSETSHIRE.—Mr. W. Miles, M.P. in his charge to the grand jury at the Somersetshire Michaelmas sessions, held at the Castle of Taunton, observed that he had to lament the number of prisoners that appeared in the present calendar, for when he looked to the calendar of the same period last year, he found there were nearly twenty more persons charged with offences now than there were this time last year, and he, having looked at reports from various counties, must say it did seem singular to him that in a district like this, where labour had latterly been most abundant, an excess of crime should arise which should increase the number of persons to be tried at the present quarter sessions to such an extent. At the same time, on looking over the offences, by far the greater proportion of them appeared to him to be of the most trivial nature. Literally, there were only two offences which might be called at all of a grave character—one, an assault with intent to rob; and the other, breaking and entering a dwelling-house. He had to congratulate the county on one thing—it appeared that the majority of the prisoners whose names were placed on the calendar had generally received a much better education than he had observed in any previous calendar.

HIRING CABS AT RAILWAYS.—Mr. A'Beckett has given judgment against the authority claimed by the railway managements. The magistrate remarked: "If a cabman could not be punished for refusing to take a fare at a terminus, neither could he be punished for abusive language, extortion, or other misconduct at a railway station. The railway officials have no right to assume an authority over hackney carriages, or to lay down regulations inconsistent with the law; and those drivers who act under this improperly assumed authority must take the consequences of the illegality of their actions. There has been put into my hands, by the solicitor of the defendant, a printed copy of rules and regulations for the government of owners and drivers of cabs standing for hire at the station of the London, Brighton, and South-Coast Railway. These regulations confirm what I have said as to the illegal assumption of authority by the railway companies over hackney carriages. Among other things I find that the public are recommended to pay certain rates for luggage in addition to the ordinary fares, and the public are told that otherwise the charge is discretionary with the cab driver. Now this is an error which the public mind cannot be too speedily disabused of, as the cab drivers can make no charge at all, and the only discretion they have in the matter is that they may refuse to overload their cabs with an unreasonable amount of luggage. They are bound to carry any reasonable amount without any charge; and it is time that the railway companies should understand that they are not authorised in fixing cab fares, and that they are very improperly misleading the public by issuing such regulations as those just placed before me."

MUNICIPAL BOROUGHS.—From a Parliamentary paper it appears that the receipts by municipal boroughs in England and Wales in the year ended the 31st of August, 1851, amounted to (with the balances in hand) 1,254,483*l.* 1s. 1½d. and the expenditure (with balances due to treasurers) to 903,721*l.* 4s. 11½d.

We regret to learn the death of Capt. Thomas Wentworth Buller, one of the commissioners of the copyhold, tithe, and enclosure commission, who expired at Wimpole, his seat in Devonshire, on Saturday last, after a short illness from an internal disorder. The vacant appointment is vested in the First Lord of the Treasury.—Standard.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Two railways (A. and B.) were established by Act of Parliament, each of which incorporated the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act. They agreed that until an Act could be obtained A. should work the traffic of B. and pay tolls, after the expenses of B. were paid, equal to 4*l.* per cent. on the paid-up capital, and after the Act had to guarantee 4*l.* per cent. to the shareholders of B. and that A. should pay all the expenses of obtaining the Act. But the shareholders of A. objected and applied for an injunction to restrain the carrying out of the agreement and the application of their funds to the expenses of obtaining the Act. It was contended that the payments by A. were "tolls" within the meaning of the 87th section of the Consolidation Act. But the Court held otherwise, and granted the injunction. (Simpson v. Denison, 20 Law T. Rep. 46.)

DATE OF LIFE POLICY.

A. B. on the 20th March, 1852 (through J. N. a country agent to the C. Insurance Office), proposed an insurance of his life in that office.

A policy, dated the 25th March, in which payment of the premium is acknowledged in the usual form, was sent by the office to their agent, and by him forwarded to said A. B.

A. B. was in good health at the date of the policy, but, about the middle of the next month, insanity commenced, and on the 29th May he died.

At the time the policy was sent to him, it did not suit him to pay the premium; but after his illness commenced, namely, on the 3rd May, a friend paid it for him to the agent, who receipted the following bill, which he had delivered, viz.:—

"A. B.

"Dr. to J. N. (the agent's own name).

"1852. April.	Paid your life assurance..	£15	15 0
	Policy stamp	1	0 0
		£16	15 0

The Insurance Office refuses to pay the amount insured, contending that the policy must not be considered, in equity, as taking effect until the 3rd May, when the premium was paid, and at which time deceased's life was uninsurable; and that a perpetual injunction would lie against any proceedings at law on the policy.

On the other hand it is contended, that, from the circumstance of the policy having been sent to deceased, credit was given him for the premium; and the form of the agent's account shews that he had made himself debtor to the office in April.

With regard to deeds of conveyance, &c. the fact of non-payment of the consideration-money establishes a lien, but does not avoid the deed. Would not the same law apply to a policy of assurance? and would not the Insurance Office be bound by the acts of its agent?

I should be obliged to any of your readers who would kindly express their opinions, and point out any authorities bearing on the subject.

The information is sought on behalf of a poor widow, whose all is the expectancy under this policy.

A SUBSCRIBER.

[We give place to this case, because it illustrates some of the doings of some of the offices, and may tend to make the Profession more cautious in effecting assurances. But the question itself is properly within our limit of exclusion, for it is really one of law, and not of professional practice.—Ed. LAW T.]

WINDING UP.

THE DIRECT BIRMINGHAM, OXFORD, &c.—On Saturday and Monday, meetings in this matter were held before Master Brougham, for the purpose of considering the proposition of Mr. Hutton, the official manager, that a call should be declared upon the members of the provisional committee, who have been fixed as contributories; the amount to be at the rate of 500*l.* in respect to the losses and expenses of the company, and 250*l.* for costs of winding up, thus making the total amount of the call upon each member of the provisional committee 750*l.* Mr. Roxburgh, who appeared for the official manager, observed that a call had been already made upon the managing committee, and the debts of the company paid; consequently the 500*l.* each was now called for as the rateable proportion of each provisional committeeman to such expenses. If they were liable to a call for expenses, they were therefore liable to pay thire share of the expenses of winding up. Counsel on behalf of the provisional committeemen contended that by the recent decisions no call could be made upon his clients, who could not be made liable at Common Law. A long legal argument ensued, but ultimately, after consideration, the Master refused to make the call.

GAS-METER COMPANY.—Thursday a meeting of contributories and others interested in the winding-up of this company was held before Master Senior, to consider the proposal of Mr. Goodchap, the official manager, to make a call of 7*l.* per share on 408 shares, and which he estimated would produce 1,000*l.* in order to pay the costs and expenses. A contributory objected to so large a call for costs, the more so as the company was not liable for a single debt. The official manager said that it was the very parties who had presented the petition for winding up, and had urged him to litigate matters, that were now raising objections on the score of costs. A director observed that his colleagues and himself had presented the petition for dissolution upon the assurance of a solicitor that 100*l.* would cover the whole affair. The Master said he would make the call, but give directions that it should not be enforced until the 1st of December.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

AN impression has certainly prevailed that under no circumstances could a devise to children generally operate so as to permit illegitimate children to participate in the gift with legitimate children. But it appears from the case of Owen v. Bryant, 20 Law T. Rep. 45, that this is a mistake. Lord CRANWORTH said, "I think there is no invariable rule of that sort, but that in each case the question is one that depends upon the circumstances appearing upon the will, and that if, from the whole context of the will, it appears that illegitimate children are to be included with legitimate children in the benefit intended, illegitimate children may take." And this is a succinct statement of the law which the reader should note in his text-book, as it is of considerable importance. It is unnecessary to repeat the particular facts of the case in which this rule was applied, and the illegitimate children admitted to a participation in the devise.

From the Prerogative Court a very interesting case is reported, in which it was decided that where a wife died intestate whilst her husband was undergoing a sentence of transportation, her property accrued to the Crown and not to her next of kin. (Coombs v. The Queen's Proctor, 20 Law T. Rep. 48.)

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

CAN any of your readers kindly answer the following:—

A. by power of attorney appoints B. his attorney to take admittance to copyholds and then to surrender to C. C. by the same power appoints B. his attorney to take admittance for him of the same copyholds. Does the power require only one 30s. stamp? and if so, why? I am aware it may be said that a power of attorney to take admittance is not necessary, but the steward insists on the power, and the only question is as to the stamp.

COUNTERPART LEASES.

THE inquiry in your last number by "Lex," seems too simple to need an answer; of course, if he wish to avail himself of the boon granted by the Legislature of paying 5s. for a counterpart lease stamp, instead of an ad valorem stamp, and that counterpart to be available in evidence, he must have the denoting stamp. As to the trouble or expense in obtaining the denoting stamp, that is quite another thing, and, probably, most attorneys do as he did, and avoid the trouble, expense, and delay, by using the ad valorem stamp instead of the 5s. stamp, where so small a sum as 5s. (the ad valorem being only 10s. in his case) is involved. But I may mention that here the trouble, expense, and delay is very little, as, on leaving the lease and counterpart (duly executed) at our Stamp Office, we generally have them returned with counterpart denoted in about a week, and without any expense. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Liverpool, Nov. 2, 1852. A PRACTITIONER.

P.S.—I was a little amused to notice that "Lex" used a 10s. ad valorem stamp and a 10s. follower, as I had just read in the same page that mortgages should be comprised on one skin; but be that as it may, it is a long lease that requires a follower, and very little care, I think, would save that expense.

IN reply to "Lex," I take it to be absolutely necessary that the denoting stamp should be impressed on the counterpart he refers to. In the case he puts, however, the difficulty would be obviated by having both parts of the lease executed by both lessor and lessee, as each would then be a lease.

But it is quite clear to my mind that the counterpart (as such) of every lease, the proper stamp for which is 5s. or upwards, requires the denoting mark to render it admissible in evidence. L. C.

NEW WILLS ACT.

I CANNOT say I think the reply of "J. W. S." contained in your paper of the 2nd inst. to the doubts which appear to have arisen in the mind of "J. M. T" on the above Act, at all satisfactory; inasmuch as "J. W. S." supposes that the construction put upon the word "Will," in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, s. 3, by reference to the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 1, is intended to apply to the whole of the section in the last-named Act. But that such was not the intention of the Legislature is, I think, clear from the wording of the 3rd section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, which commences thus, "The word 'Will' shall," &c. Now, if it were not intended to confine that section to the interpretation of the word "Will," why not have said, "the words will, number, and gender shall be interpreted in like manner as in 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 1." I, therefore, think this last-mentioned Act does not remove the difficulty complained of by "J. M. T." Neither, as it happens, need its clauses be at all strained for the purpose; since a later Act of Parliament clearly supplied any supposed deficiency in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24. The Act I refer to is the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, entitled "An Act for shortening the Language used in Acts of Parliament," the 4th section of which inserts the number and gender clause in all future Acts.

STAMPS.

I CANNOT agree with Mr. Wilkinson as to the necessity of a 35s. stamp in respect of A.'s share, alluded to in "W. T.'s" letter, published on the 25th September last, for, on referring to the last Stamp Act, tit. "Conveyance," I find the ad val. duty, and no other duty, attaches "upon the sale of any lands or of any right, title, or interest, out of any lands, and such duty is charged upon the purchase or consideration money "therein or thereupon expressed."

Now, surely A.'s share is a right, title, or interest out of the land conveyed, and no further duty than upon the purchase-money therein expressed is payable.

COUNTY COURTS.

LATE CASES ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.(a)

VII. CASES ON THE QUESTION OF SUING FOR EXCESS.

THE power of a plaintiff in any action in a County Court to bring the subject of his suit within the jurisdiction of the Court, by suing for so much of it only as would be recoverable in a County Court, and abandoning the remainder of the debt, is conferred by the 63rd section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, which enacts, that any plaintiff having cause of action for more than 20*l.* (since extended to 50*l.*), for which a plaint might be entered under this Act, if not for more than 20*l.* may abandon the excess, and thereupon the plaintiff shall, on proving his case, recover to an amount not exceeding 20*l.*; and the judgment of the Court upon such plaint shall be in full discharge of all demands in respect of such cause of action, and entry of the judgment shall be made accordingly.

In the following case the plaintiff claimed from the defendant a sum of 22*7l.*; against this he gave him credit, by set-off, for 116*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* and a payment of 70*l.* of the remainder, he abandoned 20*l.* 3*s.* 3*d.* so as to reduce his demand to 20*l.* and thus to bring it within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and sued there for that sum. It was held, on a motion for prohibition, that the case came within the principle in Woodhams v. Newman, 1 Cox & Mac. 231, adverted to in our article on the question of set-off; and that the County Court had no jurisdiction. (Beswick v. Capper, 1 Cox & Mac. 243.)

A plaint was entered in a County Court to recover 20*l.* penalty for practising as an apothecary. The particulars stated the cause of action thus:—"Action to recover 20*l.* for that on and on divers other days and times the defendant did act and practise as an apothecary, &c. at A. in the county of C., A. in the county of N., B. in the county of C., and B. in the county of M., by then and there attending on E., F., G. and H. whereby he has forfeited 20*l.*" &c. It was held that such particulars did not disclose a cause of action exceeding 20*l.* and that, therefore, the County Court had jurisdiction. (The Apothecaries Company v. Burt, 1 Cox & Mac. 281.) POLLOCK, C.B. in delivering his judgment in this case, observed that the plaintiff's claim was limited to 20*l.* and no more could be recovered under that plaint. The particulars of the claim are certainly ambiguous, and might give rise to a question on which it will be unnecessary to pronounce a decision, viz. whether the illegal acts done by the defendant at different days and places may be made the subject of one or more penalties. The present claim is limited to 20*l.*; more cannot be recovered; and the County Court has jurisdiction to that amount, whether the claim be originally within that sum, or the plaintiff be willing to reduce his demand to that amount, and abandon the surplus. ALDERSON, B. observed, I do not see that the plaintiffs have a cause of action above 20*l.* consequently there can be no abandonment of excess. The particulars may be ambiguous, and open to special demurrer, but that is for the judge of the County Court, who would do well at the trial to make them elect on which of the four cases they mean to go, and use the others as evidence.

In the case of Vines v. Arnold, 1 Cox & Mac. 320, it was held that where a plaintiff had a cause of action exceeding 20*l.* but nevertheless sued in a County Court for part only of his demand, and recovered such part, and it did not appear at the trial in the County Court that the claim was part of a debt exceeding 20*l.* or that the plaintiff had done anything to shew that he abandoned the excess beyond 20*l.* such plaintiff might still sue in the Superior Court for the excess, if above 20*l.* MAULE, J. in delivering the judgment of the Court, said that there must be something done by the plaintiff to shew that he abandons the excess beyond 20*l.*; and that without this is done, he ought to be non-suited in the County Court. It is a good defence in the County Court that the plaintiff has paid a debt which the defendant has shewn to be parcel of a larger debt, exceeding 20*l.*; and the defendant is thereupon entitled to the judgment of the Court, unless the plaintiff abandons the excess. But the plaintiff ought to have the option of saying that he abandons the excess, or to be nonsuited, that he may sue for the whole in the Superior Court.

This case is one of considerable importance to those who practice in the County Courts, and both the principle of the law and the practice to be pursued are so clearly laid down in Mr. Justice MAULE'S judgment, that it is unnecessary to dwell upon them here. We may remark, however, that this case is distinguishable from that of Grimbly v. Aykroyd, 1 Ex. 479, which was alluded to in the argument, inasmuch as that applies to the case of different items in a tradesman's bill being divided into different causes of action, and all being sued for in the County Court. In the above case, the whole debt is sued for in the County Court, and after recovery here of the amount within the jurisdiction of that Court, the excess is sued for in one of the Superior Courts.

The above case is also distinguishable from that of Parker v. Elsby, 1 East, 352, where it was held that debts recoverable in a Court of Requests, were expressly prohibited from being sued for in the Superior Courts, by the Act of Parliament for creating the former. The County Courts Act, on the other hand, contains no such prohibitory clause. In Burroughs v. Hodgson, 9 Ad. & E. 499, 1 Per. & D. 329, it was decided, that where a Court of Requests had exclusive jurisdiction of debt to a certain amount, the plea must state in terms that the defendant was not indebted beyond that amount. It was not sufficient to allege that he was not indebted beyond a smaller sum which was specified. The County Courts, however, possess no exclusive jurisdiction of the nature here alluded to.

The question in what manner the abandonment of the excess should be made in the County Court, still remains to be decided; and it is doubtful whether this should be made to appear on the record, or whether it may be done viva voce during the progress of the trial. Talfourd, J. indeed, observed in Vines v. Arnold, while delivering his opinion,—"I think the Legislature intended that there should be some act of abandonment in Court, because a provision is made for an entry of the abandonment."

INTERPRETERS' FEES IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Having had some experience in the practice of these Courts in the principality of Wales, I feel a necessity, and venture to call your attention as a matter deserving the consideration of the committee on the scale of fees, to the allowance to interpreters, if it can legitimately be brought within the scope of their authority.

Scarcely a sitting passes in Welsh districts without an interpreter being required in several causes, and fees claimed and paid; while there is no provision for such fees being allowed in the taxation of costs against the losing party. The party requiring an interpreter (perhaps through the mere fact of an Englishman being employed for an advocate by his adversary), is invariably obliged to pay him out of his own pocket, though he win his cause; and such fees amount from one to five shillings, according to the importance of the case.

Very frequently, where an attorney is employed, he is obliged to advance at once, in order to be able to proceed; while in the case of a poor suitor, unable to retain an attorney, and unexpectedly called upon while unprepared for the interpreter's fee, he finds himself in an awkward position.

A very respected judge of one of the Welsh districts, entertains the very rational view,—"That every witness ought to be allowed to give his evidence in the language in which he thinks." I fully concur in that view,—not merely out of regard to the feelings of my fellow countrymen—the Welsh, but principally as it tends very materially to the due administration of justice. Even in cases where a Welsh witness is capable generally of expressing himself in English, he is very liable, unconsciously, to mis-state facts, or state them in a manner capable of being misrepresented; and his very embarrassments are susceptible of being misconstrued, and his veracity in consequence impeached, to the suitor's prejudice.

I cannot but feel that my countrymen have not been fairly dealt with in this matter. The proceedings ought to be conducted in their native language, or such a functionary as an interpreter ought to be attached to each court (as so much care has been taken to have everything done by officers), or rather an interpreter's fee ought to be fixed and allowable on taxation of costs against the losing party, as at Nisi Prius.

In the scale of fees submitted for approval in your last number, several frequent and necessary steps in County Court suits are altogether omitted, for which the profession ought to charge, and the losing party to pay; such as notices to admit, now rendered necessary as a preliminary to being allowed for proof of documents; notices to inspect by defendants; and attendances to give inspection in either of these cases; proceedings connected with confession of debt, and judgments by consent; proceedings on judgments more than a year old, and in the nature of a scire facias, and also mileage for services when not directed to be effected by an officer of the Court.

It is really unaccountable why the attorneys and the suitors generally so tamely submit to the services of process and subpœnas being performed by the officers, while the uniform mileage allowed would not only be remunerative but profitable; taking especially into consideration how more efficiently it would be done by the attorneys than it can reasonably be expected it should by the officer.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ADVOCACY OF ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—When so much discussion is going on relative to advocacy in the County Courts, I wonder that no mention is made of a class of cases which would be most affected by the adoption of a stringent rule prohibiting one attorney from appearing as an advocate in a case which had been managed by another attorney, viz. when the plaintiff and defendant reside in different districts, and the plaintiff is obliged to sue in the district where the defendant resides. Now, if one attorney must conduct the case throughout, the plaintiff must either employ an attorney who resides near and practises in the court where the action is brought, or he must take his own attorney along with him; and where the case presented any difficulties, and could not be properly prepared without an interview between plaintiff and his attorney, he would either have to go to the attorney (if he employed one where the case was to be heard), or the attorney must come to him, or if he employed an attorney in his own district there would be the attorney's special journey to attend the hearing, either of which courses would entail considerable expense, and could not be avoided, especially if the case was tried in a court where no counsel were in attendance.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

AN ATTORNEY'S CLERK.

ADVOCATES IN THE COUNTY COURTS.—In the course of Tuesday's proceedings in the County Court, Mr. Hime mentioned to his Honour that there was a case in which the defendant lived at Rochdale, and the defendant wished to leave Liverpool that afternoon. His attorney, Mr. Martin, engaged at the sessions, and had desired him (Mr. Hime) to appear for him.—The Judge: Oh, yes; and I may now state that I have had an opportunity of consulting other gentlemen on the subject of professional practice, which was mentioned some time since. I find they concur with me in my construction of the Act of Parliament, and they hold that the meaning of the provision is, that where a professional gentleman is engaged, he must conduct the cause throughout from the time the case is placed in his hands,—not that business may not be transferred from one professional man to another, but he must conduct the case throughout. The whole business may be transferred from one professional man to another. Some of the clauses of the Act of Parliament bear quite as hardly upon the judge as they do upon the Profession; but having looked again at the Act of Parliament, and having consulted with other gentlemen, I am of opinion that the intention is, that when a case is placed in the hands of a professional man, it must be entrusted to him throughout, —not placed in his hands for the purpose of conducting it in court and afterwards go back into the hands of another gentleman. He must be prepared to conduct the action generally throughout.—Mr. Hime said he thought it right to mention the circumstance to his Honour.—His Honour intimated that he should always be ready to accommodate professional gentlemen, so far as he could.—Liverpool Mercury.

NEW COUNTY COURT JUDGE.—We have much pleasure in announcing that the Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Pitt Taylor, of the Home Circuit, to be the judge of the Lambeth County Court of Surrey, and of the Greenwich County Court of Kent, in the room of the late Mr. Chilton, Q.C. We gladly welcome this judicious and well-merited appointment, which will be accepted as an earnest of his lordship's disposition to promote those principles with which Mr. Taylor's name is identified. That gentleman is well known by his able, enlightened, and persevering advocacy of law reform—a cause in which few men have laboured with equal zeal and efficiency. His work on the Law of Evidence has long been recognised in the Profession as a high authority on the subject of which it treats; and he has most powerfully contributed, both to the accomplishment of those amendments in the law which have been actually effected during the last few years, and to the work of preparing the public mind for the larger and more comprehensive legal reforms which yet remain to be achieved. His services in this field were, it may be remembered, emphatically recognised, not long since, by Lord Brougham and Lord Denman, in a published correspondence which passed between them on the subject of law reform—both of those noble lords acknowledging, in the strongest terms, the valuable aid which they had received from Mr. Taylor in the preparation of important legislative measures. In selecting him for the important judicial posts above mentioned, the Lord Chancellor has honourably marked his appreciation of distinguished professional attainments; and we can scarcely be mistaken in regarding this exercise of patronage as a distinct indication of his lordship's desire to further the cause which Mr. Taylor has so energetically and successfully promoted.—Morning Chronicle.

COSTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The 25th ult. passed over, and the Profession were quite in darkness as to what costs should be indorsed on their writs. In several instances within my own knowledge the issuing was delayed, so as to be on the safe side, and not liable to the penalty of the 6th being taken off. I do not think there could be any possible excuse for the authorities entrusted with the preparation of the scale of fees, it not being a weighty matter. The egg has at length been broken, and the result is as follows:—

Costs to judgment by default, in town	£3 8 0	£2 14 0
Ditto, country	£4 0 0	£3 2 0

Now, upon this shewing, the costs of the attorney are reduced more than half in all the four instances: surely the office fees ought to be reduced similarly; but the fee on issuing writ remains at the usual fee of 5s. The day of judgment not having yet arrived, it would no doubt be very beneficial to the Profession if a reduction was made in the fees for that important proceeding, under the circumstances of the case.

As you are always willing to assist with your advice and remonstrance the Profession,

I am, yours, &c LUDIV.

ARTICLED CLERKS.

A. is under articles to an Attorney, which will expire in December next, but he will not attain twenty-one years of age until August next. Since he was articled his circumstances have become very much limited by the death of his father, and he is anxious to get examined as soon as possible after his articles expire, and then take a clerkship.

I shall feel obliged by any of your readers referring me to an authority bearing upon the point, as to whether he can be examined (not admitted) before attaining twenty-one. J. W.

SIGNED BILLS OF COSTS.

THE usual practice in such a case as is stated by "A Practitioner," in your last paper, is, I believe, to deliver only one signed bill of costs, let there be ever so many executors. It has been ruled in several cases that the only object of requiring a signed bill to be delivered a month before an action is commenced, is to enable the person charged with the payment of such bill the opportunity of having it taxed. I feel quite satisfied that a bill of costs made out "The executors of the late ——, to A. B." and stating the work done for the deceased, &c. duly signed and delivered by A. B. to one of the executors, or to the attorney acting for them, one month before action brought, would be held a sufficient compliance with the statute.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT.

AN examined copy of, or extract from, a will proved to be so, or purporting to be signed and certified as such by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted, would clearly be admissible in evidence under the 14th section of the above Act.

NEW SEALS IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—The Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors are, by virtue of the new Acts, to dispose of business at chambers, under summonses issued in the same manner as at the judges' chambers, and by the new rules seals are provided by which the summonses are to be stamped. Further, it is ordered that a list of the matters to be heard is to be made out and exhibited. A copy of each summons is to be left at the judges' chambers by the party obtaining the same.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE following was held in Hankin v. Bennett, 20 Law T. Rep. 47, not to be a debt payable on a contingency, within the 66th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and therefore barred by the bankrupt's certificate. A. gave a bond conditioned that if he should pay B. such costs as B. should in due course of law be liable to pay in case a verdict should pass for the defendant in another action, the bond should be void. The action in question was tried at the Spring Assizes, 1848; in Easter Term a rule for a new trial was obtained; the fiat issued on Nov. 14; the rule for a new trial was discharged in Hilary Term, 1849; A. obtained his certificate on May 29; and on Aug. 22 costs were taxed and judgment signed against B.

RULES AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE NEW PATENT-LAW.—A second set of rules and regulations has just been issued by the new patent commissioners, in substitution of some others that have been cancelled or annulled, appointing the office of the director of Chancery in Scotland, and the Inrolment Office of the Court of Chancery in Dublin, to be the offices of the commissioners for the recording of transcripts of letters patent. No warrant under the new regulations is to be granted for the sealing of any letters patent that contain two or more distinct substantive inventions. The provisional specification is to state distinctly the whole nature of any invention, so that the law officers may be apprised of the improvement. Where letters patent are proposed to be extended to the colonies, the particular colony is to be specified. Every application to the Lord Chancellor against, or in relation to, any letters patent, is to be, by notice, left at the commissioners' office, containing particulars of the objections. The rules are signed—St. Leonards, C.; John Romilly, M. R.; Frederick Thesiger, A. G.; and Fitzroy Kelly, S.G.

COURT PAPERS.

FURTHER ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

THE subjoined Orders, dated respectively the 23rd and 25th Oct. were issued on Saturday, and form the Supplement to the "New Orders in Chancery," published in our last:—

ORDER OF COURT.

Saturday, the 23rd day of October, 1852.

The Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw, Lord St. Leonard's, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls; the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir George James Turner; and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Torin Kindersley, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the 15th and 16th years of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to abolish the office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make provision for the more speedy and efficient despatch of business in the said Court," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct as follows, viz.:—

1. The chief clerks of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively, are directed to take following fees:—

	£.	s.	d.
1. For every original summons for the purpose of proceedings originating in chambers	0	5	0
2. For every duplicate thereof	0	5	0
3. For every other summons	0	3	0
4. For every advertisement	1	0	0
5. For every certificate or report	1	0	0
6. For every certificate upon the passing of a receiver or consignee's account, a further fee in respect of each 100*l.* received of	0	10	0
7. For every order drawn up by the chief clerk made upon applications for time to plead, answer or demur, for leave to amend bills or claims, or for enlarging publication or the period for closing evidence, or for the production of documents, or applications relating to the conduct of suits or matters	0	5	0
8. For every other order drawn up by the chief clerk	1	0	0

11. The registrars are directed to take the following fees:—

For orders made by a judge in chambers, drawn up by the registrar, the like fees as before directed to be taken by the chief clerk for orders drawn up by him.

III. The record and writ clerks are directed to take the following fees:—

For office copies of original depositions and examinations, per folio	£0	0	4
For entering appearances to a judge's summons, same charge as for appearing to a bill.
For stamping every copy of a bill or claim for service	0	5	0
For stamping every copy of a judge's summons for service	0	5	0
For examining every copy or part of a copy of a set of interrogatories, and marking same as an office copy	0	5	0

IV. All fees received by the officers of the court, under the preceding orders, are to be accounted for and paid by them respectively, once in every month, into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General, to be placed to the account there intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account;" the amount so received and paid by such officers respectively to be verified by the affidavit of the accounting party.

V. Solicitors are entitled to charge and be allowed the following fees:—

For instructions to commence proceedings originating in chambers, or to defend the same	£0	13	4
For preparing an original summons for the purpose of proceedings originating in chambers, and the duplicate thereof	0	13	4
For attending at chambers to get such summons and duplicate examined and sealed	0	6	8
For attending at the Record and Writ Office to file duplicate and examine copies, and get same stamped	0	6	8
For endorsing a summons and the copies under Order VI. of 16th October, 1852, and attending to get same sealed	0	6	8
For entering the appearance for one or more defendants, if not exceeding three	0	6	8
If exceeding three, for every additional number, not exceeding three an additional sum of	0	6	8
In cases of proceedings originating in chambers the same term fee as in a suit.
For preparing every other summons and attending to get same filled up and sealed at chambers	0	6	8
For each copy of a summons to serve or leave at chambers	0	2	0
For attending on a summons or other appointment, each day, a fee of 6s. 8d., 13s. 4d., or 1*l.* 1s., according to circumstances; but the fee is to be 6s. 8d., unless a larger fee is allowed by the judge or his chief clerk.
Where from the length of the attendance, or from the difficulty of the case, the judge shall think the highest of the above fees an insufficient remuneration for the services performed, or where the preparation of the case to lay it before the judge shall have required skill and labour, for which no fee has been allowed, the judge may allow such further fee, not exceeding one guinea, as in his discretion he may think fit.
For preparing every advertisement	0	6	8
For attending to get same approved and signed	0	6	8
For attending for every order drawn up by the chief clerk, and at the registrar's office to get same entered	0	6	8
For attending to enter claim under Order XXXVI. of 16th October, 1852, and to file affidavit	0	6	8
For perusing the affidavits of claimants coming in under Order XXXVI. of 16th October, 1852, and attending in chambers at the time appointed by the advertisement, where the number of claims does not exceed five	1	1	0
Where the number exceeds five, for every additional number, not exceeding five, an additional sum of	1	1	0
For attending to bespeak and procure office copy of certificate or report	0	6	8

For all other business performed such fees as by the practice of the Court they are entitled to for similar business.

ORDER OF COURT.

Monday, the 25th day of October, 1852.

The Right Honourable Edward Burtenshaw, Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the 15th and 16th years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct that all and every the orders, rules, and directions hereinafter set forth shall henceforth be, and for all purposes be deemed and taken to be, "General Orders and Rules of the High Court of Chancery," viz.:—

I. In lieu of copies of pleadings and other proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and of the documents relating thereto, being made and delivered by officers of the Court, at the office in which they are filed or left, copies of such pleadings, proceedings, and documents (save as hereinafter excepted), are to be made, delivered, charged, and paid for according to the following regulations:—

1. The following copies are exempted from this order, that is to say—Office copies of proceedings filed in the Report-office; office copies of answers, pleas, and demurrers; office copies of depositions of witnesses, and examination of parties to be made for and taken by the party on whose behalf such depositions and examinations have been taken; office copies of affidavits to be made for and taken by the party filing the same: and office copies of affidavit to be taken under Orders XXXVII. of 16th October, 1852.

2. The party or his solicitor requiring any copy, save as hereinbefore excepted, is to make a written application to be delivered to the party by whom the copy is to be furnished, or his solicitor, with an undertaking to pay the proper charges.

3. Upon such requisition being made with such undertaking as aforesaid, copies of such pleadings, proceedings, or documents, are to be made by the party or his solicitor filing or leaving the same, or who under the first rule may have taken office copies thereof.

4. The copies are to be ready to be delivered at the expiration of forty-eight hours after the delivery of such request and undertaking, or within such other time as the Court may in any case direct, and are to be delivered accordingly upon demand and payment of the proper charges.

5. The charges for all such copies are to be at the rate of 4d. per folio.

6. Copies of bills of costs are to be made side for side, so as to correspond with the bills of costs left in the office.

7. The folios of all copies are to be numbered consecutively in the margin thereof, and the name and address of the party or solicitor, by whom the same is made, is to be endorsed thereon in like manner as upon the proceedings in the Court; and such party or solicitor is to be answerable for the same being true copies of the original, or of an office copy of the original pleadings, proceeding, or document of which it purports to be a copy, as the case may be.

8. In cases of ex parte applications for injunctions, or writs of ne exeat regno, the party making such application is to deliver copies of the affidavits upon which it is granted, upon payment of the proper charges immediately upon the receipt of such written request and undertaking as aforesaid, or within such time as may be specified in such request, or may have been directed by the Court.

9. Any party or solicitor who has taken any office copy mentioned in rule 2, is to produce the same in court, or at the judge's chambers, when required for the purpose of the proceedings to which the same relate.

II. That all office copies, and copies to be furnished by parties or their solicitors, shall be written on paper of a convenient size, with a sufficient margin, and in a neat and legible manner, similar to that which is usually adopted by law stationers; and in the case of copies to be furnished by parties or their solicitors, unless so written, the parties or solicitors furnishing them shall not be entitled to be paid for the same.

III. That in case any solicitor who shall be required to furnish any such copy as aforesaid shall either refuse, or for two clear days from the time when the application for such copy shall have been made shall neglect to furnish the same, the person by whom such application shall be made shall be at liberty to procure a copy from the office in which the original shall have been filed, in the same way as if no such application had been made to the solicitor, and in such case no costs shall be due or payable to the solicitor so making default in respect of the copy or copies so applied for.

IV. That in case any solicitor by whom any such copy ought to be furnished shall neglect to do so for such two clear days as aforesaid, or for one clear day, an addition of two clear days or one clear day, as the case may be, shall be made to the period within which any proceeding which may have to be taken after obtaining such copy ought to be so taken, so that the person requiring such copy may be as little prejudiced as possible by such neglect as aforesaid.

V. That the Taxing-Master shall not allow any costs in respect of any copy so taken as aforesaid, unless the same shall appear to him to have been requisite, and to have been made with due care both as regards the contents and the writing thereof.

VI. That from and after the 1st day of November next, all the fees now payable in relation to such proceedings in the said Court as are mentioned in the first part of the first schedule hereinafter contained shall be abolished; and the fees specified in the second part of such schedule shall be payable, and the same (save as provided by the seventh of these orders) shall be collected, not in money, but by means of stamps denoting the amount of such fees, stamped or affixed, at the expense of the parties liable to pay the fees, on or to the vellum, parchment, or paper on which the proceedings in respect whereof such fees are payable are written, or printed, or which may be otherwise used in reference to such proceeding.

And where any of the fees specified in the second part of the said first schedule shall be payable in respect of any matter or thing to be done by any officer, or in any office of the court, and it shall not have been customary to use any written or printed document or paper in reference to such matter or thing, whereon the stamp could be affixed, the party or his solicitor requiring such matter or thing to be so done, shall make application for the same, by a short note or memorandum in writing, and a stamp denoting the amount of the fee so payable shall be stamped on or affixed to such note or memorandum.

VII. That in all cases where the costs are directed to be paid out of a fund in court, the fees of taxation shall not be payable by means of stamps, but shall be carried over by the Accountant-General to the credit of the Suitors' Fee Fund; and, to that intent, the Taxing-Master shall in such cases certify the amount of such fees.

VIII. That from and after the 28th of October, 1852, the brokerage which shall or may from time time be received by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery shall be paid by him on the first day of every month, or as soon after as conveniently may be, into the Bank of England, to be there placed to his credit as such Accountant-General, to the account intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account."

IX. That, subject to the superintendence and direction of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, the first, second, and third clerks in each division of the Accountant-General's office, shall from and after the said 28th day of October, 1852, and until other order or provision shall be made in that behalf, continue to perform the acts or duties before performed by such clerks, and which are mentioned in the said second schedule, in addition to the duties prescribed by Act of Parliament as heretofore; and such fees as are specified in the second schedule shall be paid for such acts as aforesaid, to be accounted for in like manner as the other fees now received in the office of the said Accountant-General, and to be collected by means of stamps in like manner as provided by Order VI.; and from and after the said 28th day of October, 1852, no other person shall perform such acts or duties.

And in order to enable the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, from time to time to fix the amount of the yearly salaries to be paid to such clerks, the Accountant-General shall every six months make a return to the Lord Chancellor of the amount received during the preceding six months in respect of such fees.

The first schedule to which the foregoing orders refer.

The following was accidentally omitted:—

Goodman, Wm. Benjamin, King's Lynn, articled to Charles Rollings, Birmingham (since deceased).

PROCLAMATIONS OF OUTLAWRY.—On Thursday, at the Sheriffs' Court a County Court was held, when proclamations of outlawry were made in the following cases:—George Spiller, at the suit of Henry Curlewis; Frederick Angerstein, at the suit of Elizabeth Barker; Edward T. Dax, at the suit of David Carr; Eldred Addison, at the suit of Alfred Robinson; Algernon Massingberd, at the suit of George Bryer; B. B. C. Gilliess, at the suit of J. Bullock; H. Griffin, at the suit of B. Williams; John Harman, at the suit of James Walker; and H. Bradley, at the suit of John F. Fesenmayer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ASSURANCE OFFICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The old and respectable assurance office referred to in my letter is the Amicable Society, incorporated in 1706, and which pays no commissions to solicitors on the introduction of policies, and professes to divide the entire profits of the office amongst the assured.

A policy was effected by my client on the 9th of October, 1832, for ten shares, viz. 2,000*l.* at an annual premium of 161*l.* In the prospectus of the society, previously obtained, and which is now before me, I find the following paragraph:—

"Of the claims upon the society which became payable in respect of insurances on the lives of persons who died in the last year, fifty-three shares, having made fifteen yearly payments, or more, receive additions amounting to 140 per cent. Six shares having made eleven, three shares having made ten, and three shares eight, yearly payments, 100 per cent. and thirty-three shares having made seven, or a smaller number of yearly payments, receive eighty per cent. in addition to the sums originally insured."

The sums paid by my client on the policy were as follow:—

Entrance money, Oct. 1832, at 10s. per cent.	10
Fifteen annual premiums of 161*l.*	2,415
Total paid	£2,425
In July 1847, the policy became a claim for	2,000
The bonus received (11*l.* 7s. per cent.)....	227
Total received....	£2,227

Instead therefore of my client receiving a bonus of one hundred and forty per cent. (or 2,800*l.*) in addition to the sum assured, as he was led to expect by the society's prospectus, he received a bonus of eleven and three-eighths per cent. (or 227*l.*) only.

But the society must have been making some interest on the premiums, &c.; this, at the low rate of three per cent. compound interest, would be as under:—

On the entrance money.....	5	9	2
On the premiums	730	6	2
Total.....	£735	15	4

It appears from this that the total amount received upon the policy becoming a claim, including the bonus, was one hundred and ninety-eight pounds less than the entrance money and premiums paid by my client, without taking into account compound interest, which the society must have made by the use of the money paid during the fifteen years of the policy's existence.

The foregoing facts I beg to submit to the consideration of those professional men who still continue to patronise old offices in the hope that they will contrast the tables and advantages of both old and young respectable offices before they advise their clients to effect assurances in offices with their millions only to recommend them.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

London, Oct. 19, 1852. INVESTIGATOR.

THE IRISH BAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—A paragraph headed variously "Decline of the Irish Bar," "The Irish Bar," &c. having been copied from the Wexford Independent into the Times by its Irish correspondent, has made its way into the LAW TIMES; it refers to a letter to the Editor of the Wexford Independent from Mr. A. F. French, who is stated to be father of the Bar in that county, stating the decline of civil business at New Ross Quarter Sessions, there being only 200 civil bills amongst fourteen attorneys, and incloses a humorous notice suggesting the "Diggins" to his professional brethren, I should wish, with your permission to state, which I am able to do from having the advantage of being acquainted with Mr. A. F. French, that though a gentleman of great professional experience and skill, and possessed of a large stock of genial wit, and many agreeable social qualities, he is not father of "the Bar in that county;" he is a practising attorney—there is no such thing as a County Bar, and Barristers seldom, at any period, have attended the Sessions of the county of Wexford except previously engaged in particular cases, the business not affording a sufficient inducement. Though the Bar in Ireland have suffered a great diminution in their professional incomes, I doubt much that on the whole they have lost more than the English by the recent changes in various departments of the law.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Dublin, Nov. 3, 1852. AN IRISH BARRISTER.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Common Law Procedure Act, with numerous Notes and an Introductory Essay illustrative of the Tendency of the new measure to restore the ancient System of Pleading. By R. MORRIS, Esq. and W. F. FINLASON, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens and Norton.

The Common Law Procedure Act, with Introduction and explanatory Notes, and Index, &c. &c. By EDWARD WISE, Esq. Barristers-at-Law. London: Sweet.

The Common Law Procedure Act, with practical Notes, illustrated by Precedents of Pleadings and Forms of Affidavits, Notices, &c. and an Introduction containing an elementary View of the Proceedings in personal Actions and in Ejectment. By ROBERT MALCOLM KERR, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Crockford.

WHEN noticing, some time since, a batch of books that had been published, besides others that were promised, on the practice of the County Courts, it was remarked that there is among legal authors an unwise tendency to write books on subjects already written upon, instead of seeking new themes, and that the failures of so many adventures in the literature of the law were mainly due to this error of judgment. To read the announcements, it would appear as if the usual reason for publishing a law-book is, that it is not wanted, the Profession being already amply supplied with treatises on the same theme. It seems to be sufficient to rouse the scribblomania, that some other persons have already written successfully on the subject selected, as if that were not the very reason why the new aspirant should not succeed.

This objection, however, does not apply to the case of a new topic. If a new law-book is required on a new subject, any number of competitors may enter the field at the same moment, because none can tell who may be preferred, and each has an equal chance with either of his rivals. It may be regretted that so much time and type and paper should be wasted in producing six or eight books on any single subject, where two or three would amply supply the demand, thus making that a loss to all which would have been a reward to a few; but in the absence of any such pre-arrangement among the purveyors of legal literature, it is perfectly fair, and not imprudent, for as many to bring forward their claims to patronage as can find publishers willing to hazard the cost of printing, or who are of ability to pay the printer from their own resources.

The great alterations that have been effected in the procedure of the Common Law Courts, have naturally given birth to a number of new books, designed to convey to the Profession the altered law and practice, so far as the ingenuity of the various commentators can anticipate difficulties, or solve doubts. Whether the supply is greater than the demand, is a question that time only can solve, and it is one rather for the producers than for the consumers. Enough for the practitioner to know that there is already a large choice for him, as the volumes upon our table testify. Our present purpose is to introduce them to his notice.

But we shall not do so critically. We prefer to pass no opinion upon either of them. We desire to deal with them all with the most perfect fairness; and we could only do so by that which is, perhaps, the most satisfactory course for the reader, as well as the most agreeable to ourselves; namely, to describe the characteristic features of each one, leaving it to the reader to form his own judgment, from the description thus given, which of them is likely to suit his particular requirements, and; therefore, to deserve his patronage; and that there may be no suspicion of preference, we will take them in the order in which they have made their appearance.

The first that reached us is edited by Mr. MORRIS and Mr. FINLASON, both of them gentlemen known in legal literature. The volume commences with an elaborate introduction, giving a very full and learned history of the practice of pleading from the earliest times to its present period of decay, the editors contending that the simplified forms of pleading introduced by the new Act are in truth only a restoration of the ancient system. We would, however, suggest that, in a second edition, this introduction should be made somewhat more practical, by adding a sketch of the law as it is, which is much more interesting and useful to practitioners than the most learned history of the law as it was. This introduction is followed by the Act, which occupies the text, the commentary upon it being given in elaborate and learned foot-notes, partly critical, partly explanatory, partly suggestive,—citing a great number of cases; but no forms are given there, an omission which should also be supplied in the next edition. The index is extremely copious.

Mr. WISE's edition of the Act was the next in order of publication, and in its plan it is very much like its contemporaries, only that the notes, instead of being placed at the foot of the page, follow the sections in a different type, an arrangement that is certainly a great improvement in a law-book, where the eye should not be called upon to wander up and down the page to find the information it seeks; for thus confusion is created and time is lost, and especially, when the practitioner is in a hurry, is it difficult for him, after having referred to a foot-note, to return again in a moment to the place in the text at which his eye had left it. In this manner, Mr. WISE has annotated each section, pointing out its operation upon the previously existing law, and with great research collecting the cases that illustrate his propositions. He also has prefaced the Act itself with an introduction, considerably shorter than that of the volume last noticed, but in which he does not deem it necessary to go into the history of pleading, rather limiting himself to a clear and well-written sketch of the changes effected by the new law. He has not preserved the order of the sections in the statute, but has re-arranged them according to their subjects. His index also is copious and convenient.

Mr. KERR's volume was the latest that appeared, perhaps because it contains rather more of original matter than either of its predecessors. Its distinguishing features are threefold. It gives a useful sketch of an action at law as it now is, after the manner of the work of the late Mr. SMITH. It devotes a chapter to the new practice of "Inspection of Documents" under the new Evidence Act, citing all the cases that have been decided upon it, and it introduces all the forms that are likely to be required by the practitioner under the new practice, as those of the various affidavits, writs, declarations, pleas, &c. &c.; the greater portion of them being prepared specially for this volume; and these are not gathered together as an appendix, but placed in their proper order, following the sections of the Procedure Act to which they relate; so that the text of the law and the whole of the practice under it can be seen at a glance. Like Mr. WISE, Mr. KERR has placed his notes in the text, following each section in a distinctive type. His introduction, also, is not historical or speculative, but simply a succinct sketch of the practice as altered. Besides the numerous precedents contained in the notes, an appendix is given of forms less frequently required, for reference when occasion arises. The index appears to be as copious as that of the others; but we would recommend Mr. KERR to introduce two improvements into a future edition; namely, to print his Precedents of Forms in italic, so that they may the more readily catch the eye; and, for the same reason, to set each reference in the index in a single line, instead of running them on.

Having thus given a fair description of each of the editions of the Common Law Procedure Act that asks the patronage of the Profession, we leave it to the reader to form his own judgment which of them appears the best adapted to his requirements. All are learned, laborious, and creditable to their authors, and all will be found good. It is only a choice of merits.

The new number of the Law Magazine is very various and interesting. It opens with a paper on "Charitable Bequests," learnedly reviewing all the cases that bear upon the point raised in Tyye v. The Corporation of Gloucester. The law of rating of Literary Institutions is treated of at considerable length. Then there is an instructive essay on "The Peculiarities of Maritime Liens." "The Position of the Advocate," is the title of a paper reviewing at some length Mr. Cox's "Advocate." An extremely practical and useful essay on "The Law of Tolls and Exemptions to Dissenters," exhausts a subject often in request, but nowhere to be found lucidly handled. The article on "Marine Assurances," should be read by all who desire to master that difficult branch of the law. "The Common Law Procedure Act," is examined, and there is a short but valuable paper on "Mortgages by Executors."

Mr. Kennedy's Code of Chancery Practice.

THE notice of this volume having been written by a Common Law Practitioner, and his judgment being questioned, we deemed it to be due to the author to ask the opinion of an Equity Lawyer as to the merits of the book. As a matter of justice to Mr. KENNEDY we give his reply:—

You have rightly stated that it is not a practice: it is only a collection of the orders and statutes, arranged chronologically, with notes. It is, therefore, incorrectly called a "Code of Chancery Practice." But the notes are good and practical; and the old orders, although materially modified by the recent statutes and orders, are not, as you appear to suppose, altogether useless. If the title of the work did not promise something more than its contents yield,—if, in short, it had professed to be nothing more than an annotated collection of Chancery orders and statutes, it would deserve considerable approbation, for, as such, it is a book to be much commended.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS TO THE MAYOR'S COURT.

ON Tuesday the TOWN CLERK read the following resolution to the Court:—"Secondaries and City Courts Committee.—Resolved that the Court of Aldermen be requested to consider the propriety of admitting solicitors practising in the courts of law and equity at Westminster, to practise also in the Mayor's Court, and in the event of the Court of Aldermen appointing a committee to consider the question, that a deputation be appointed to confer with them thereon."

Alderman WIRE said the greatest advantage would arise to the citizens of London from opening the doors of the Mayor's Court to the solicitors of the Superior Courts of law and equity. He described the ineffectual exertions made some years ago upon the petition from Mr. Ashurst, to throw open the doors of the court, and stated that at that time Mr. Law, the Recorder, was strongly opposed to the proposition, and that the question had been in abeyance ever since. The necessity for extinguishing so absurd a monopoly became more palpable every day, and the present Recorder, who had looked with great attention and judgment into the question, was, he believed, decidedly of opinion that a vast deal of good would result from the adoption of the popular view of the subject.

Alderman SIDNEY intimated that the Court ought not, without a regular investigation, proceed to the demolition even of an ancient monopoly. He thought the whole subject of the Corporation Courts (the Mayor's Court, the Sheriffs' Court, and the Hustings Court), all of which might be converted to great use and advantage, should be taken into consideration by a committee.

The RECORDER said it was of immense importance to use despatch with respect to the throwing open the Mayor's Court. The question had been hung up for two years, and principally in consequence of the difficulty in making arrangements with those few persons who had purchased the privilege to practise. He would advise that immediate steps should be taken to accomplish the object. Eventually the Mayor's Court could, if despatch were used, be turned to great public good.

The motion was then referred to a committee, and a deputation was appointed to confer upon it with the Common Council deputation, so that the monopoly of the City courts is nearly at an end.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1852.

NEW RULES IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.

Upon authority, we have to inform the Profession that there is no truth in the paragraph which appeared in the newspapers, to the effect that the Judges were preparing a number of new Rules under the Procedure Act.

There is no intention to make new rules at present, nor until the Act has been tried for some time in practice, so that its requirements may be ascertained—certainly nothing more than perhaps two or three short rules to regulate any difficulty in practice, otherwise insurmountable, which may be found to arise from time to time.

VOL. IX. No. 502.

THE "JUNIOR BAR" v. THE ATTORNEYS.

We can assure our readers that "the movement" of the Junior Bar,—or rather, we should say, of a segment of it,—has not the approval of the Judges, of the leaders, of the seniors, nor of all the juniors. They protest equally against the half-guinea scheme and the project for the invasion of the Attorneys. They are desirous to continue the same friendly relationship which has hitherto existed between the two branches of the Profession: if it should appear that the public do not want them, they will retire altogether; but they will not consent to transform the Bar into a shape different from that which it has hitherto assumed, nor to become a sort of demi-Attorney demi-Advocate, as is found in some other countries, and notably in America; and such a transmutation must be the inevitable consequence of the new practice which has been proclaimed by a portion of the "Junior Bar."

A remarkable instance has just occurred of the danger to which Counsel would be exposed were they to adopt the practice of advising clients without the intervention of an Attorney. Last week, the notorious Mr. DUNN, the persecutor of Miss BURDETT COUTTS, was brought before one of the police magistrates, on a charge of having obtained money under false pretences from a person whom he had in fact advised professionally. It appeared that he had been consulted by a woman who supposed herself to have a claim to certain property. He had advised her in the matter, and it being necessary to make certain inquiries into facts, he had undertaken to do this—(illustrating the argument we used last week, that if once the client and the Counsel communicate personally, it will be impossible to prevent the latter from departing from his proper functions, and doing the work of an Attorney). For this Mr. DUNN made a charge of 7*l.* which she paid. But, upon investigation, he found that her claim could not be substantiated; whereupon, in great wrath, she charged him with cheating her of her 7*l.* by false pretences, and Mr. DUNN was actually brought before the magistrate upon this charge. He was, of course, immediately acquitted of the imputation, for in fact there was not the shadow of a complaint against him; he had done the work, for which he had been paid only a fair charge.

But this case is very valuable just now, as exhibiting in the most striking form the consequences that will result from "the movement" of the Junior Bar. Mr. DUNN has acted upon the advice given by their organ. He has received his client without the intervention of an Attorney; he not only advised, but he acted; he appears not merely to have received fees, but to have made a charge of 7*l.*—a sum which, it will be observed, could represent no number of recognised fees. These latter departures from the rule of the Profession were the necessary consequences of the first step,—the advising of the client personally. The same results would follow in nine cases out of ten, so far as respects acts done, as well as advice given, and charges made instead of fees offered.

At present the followers of the new practice are few. But there is danger in example. The severance of the Bar into two classes will be in itself a consequence to be deprecated. It will destroy the fraternity of feeling and the unanimity of action which have hitherto distinguished the Profession. We do not believe that the endeavour will be successful. But whether it succeeds or fails, we are anxious that it should be rightly understood by the Attorneys that the attack now made upon them is neither approved nor sanctioned by the vast majority of the leaders or seniors of the Profession, who have no desire to make any change in their relationship with the Attorneys, which has hitherto worked advantageously for both, and there is no reason why the same arrangements should not continue to be equally beneficial for the future.

GUINEAS OR HALF-GUINEAS.

It is lamentable to see the Bar severed into two sets—the guinea and the half-guinea men. The immediate consequences will be more inconvenient than "the juniors" may have anticipated.

Of course, the seniors and a section of the juniors will adhere to the established guinea. Thus there will be two branches of Barristers in the courts—the whole-price men and the half-price men.

An Attorney has a brief to deliver. To whom will he give it? That is the practical question. Should he prefer SMITH, who values himself at a guinea; or JONES, who deems half-a-guinea as much as his services are worth? Should the brief be presented to the former, the latter gains nothing by the reduction of his prices. If the brief is bestowed upon the latter, the former feels that he has been undersold, that JONES has stolen a march upon him, and there is war between them. The peace of the Bar is gone for ever.

Then at every counsel table, where the two prices are grouped, the question must be asked continually, "What is he, a guinea or a half-guinea man?" Should half-guineas find any favour with Solicitors or suitors, they must first inquire to which category the various wigs belong, before they can offer employment to any. But such a movement necessitates another—it must be announced somehow. It is of little use for an enterprising junior to resolve in his own mind that he will accept half-guinea fees, if those who employ Counsel are not made acquainted with his patriotism. There must be some means of proclaiming the fact out of court, and some sign by which it may be signified in court. Perhaps a separate Bar list would serve for the former; one tail instead of two to the wig for the latter. At all events, it will be due to the whole-price Bar, that they should not be mistaken for the half-price men, and they will insist upon some public sign of distinction, if the others do not. It will be due to both, as well as to those who require to know the difference between them, that they may have the benefit who desire it.

Then this distinction severs the Bar into two branches. There will be two classes of practitioners there. Is that likely to conduce to the advantage of either?

But we do not believe that the half-guinea movement will obtain the object desired by its promoters. It will not bring them the business they anticipate. They will still be undersold by the Attorneys who practise at the County Courts, who will not suffer themselves to be beaten out of the field in a competition of prices. "If the junior Bar," writes one of these, "offer to take half-a-guinea, I will take nine and sixpence. I am subject to no rule for charges, and whatever they accept I will do for less." That is precisely the sort of warfare to which the Bar has now subjected itself. But besides the impossibility of successful competition in price, there are other obstacles to the success of the movement. The junior Bar dispensing with Attorneys must procure their own clients. In this they will be beaten by their rivals, who have better opportunities and are better able to use them. Suitors, too, are not unlikely even at the same price to prefer an astute and experienced Attorney to the young Barrister fresh from his books, new to the business of life, and unpractised in the ways of men. Suitors are not so willing, as some suppose, that the juniors should acquire the wisdom of experience at their expense.

This is the truth, and it is better for all that the truth should be known. There is no chance of half-guineas tempting either Attorneys or suitors to retain the services of actual juniors, who must needs want experience; and men who have had the experience of practice will not accept half-a-guinea. Why should they? An Attorney of any capacity as an advocate will not accept less than a guinea, and he usually commands two.

Nor will the additional temptation of advice without an Attorney much mend the matter. It may bring a few stray clients in the course of a year, but nothing that will compensate for the certain mischiefs it must produce, and which we have already set before our readers.

THE NEW COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

The most important questions that have as yet arisen are precisely those which we had in a former commentary suggested as difficulties not to be readily solved. How far is the Act retrospective—or rather, how does it affect actions in progress? In ejectment it has been held not to be applicable to pending actions so far as to alter the process. But it will be seen by the reports of to-day, that a much more difficult question has arisen in the case of a demurrer, which had been regularly filed before the Act. By the statute, special demurrers are abolished, and judgment is to be given on all demurrers according to the very right of the cases. In the case in question there was a demurrer to an informal pleading—was the party who had taken advantage of this in the regular way to be deprived of it by what would be to him an ex post facto law? The statute makes no provision for such a possible injustice, and according to its plain construction it operates immediately, and affects the suit from the date of its coming into operation. The Judges felt the hardship of the case upon the party, but they could not see their way out of the statute. Ultimately, the case was decided upon another point, but the Court intimated that it would consult the other Judges upon the question that had been raised, so that they might adopt an uniform practice.

THE LAW REFORMS OF THE SESSION.

The Queen's speech promises a continuance of Law Reform, but names one only, to wit, that of the Ecclesiastical Courts, which we have already announced as being in preparation.

What are the other projected Reforms has not transpired. We are acquainted with some of them, but only confidentially, and therefore we cannot state them yet, but we believe that they will be of great practical advantage to the public, without being so injurious to the Profession as some recent experiments in that direction.

MERCANTILE LAW REFORM.

The gathering on Monday next of Merchants and Lawyers from all parts of the United Kingdom, to confer upon the best means for promoting the assimilation of the Mercantile Laws of England, Scotland, and Ireland, promises to be most influential and important. The call of the Society for the Amendment of the Law, under whose auspices the movement has been made, has been extensively responded to, and deputations are promised from the merchants of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Hull, Bradford, and some twelve or fourteen more of our principal towns. The Lawyers will be well represented by the Incorporated Law Society, the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Society, and the great Law Societies of Manchester and Liverpool, who will send deputations.

We are assured that the object of this conference is purely as avowed—to promote the assimilation and codification of the Mercantile Law of the three countries, which now in many particulars differs so widely, that a merchant or Lawyer in the one is ignorant of the law that prevails in the other, and that which is right in one place becomes wrong when a few miles of railway are passed. The inconveniences thence resulting are too obvious to need elaborate description.

Nor is codification less required. It will be a difficult and delicate task undoubtedly, but it must be done sooner or later, and the best time to do it will be, when a common code is introduced throughout the United Kingdom.

We trust, however, that the proceedings of the Conference will be strictly limited to this; that there is no covert purpose to introduce the scheme for establishing tribunals of commerce, and so superseding the Lawyers. If such a wild project should be proposed, it should be negatived at once; if any leanings that way are seen, let the Lawyers forthwith protest, and if the most satisfactory pledges are not given, let them withdraw. We are assured, by those who have most interested themselves in the Conference, that there is no danger of this,—that no such design lurks among the promoters, and that, if proposed, they would scout it. But we know also that it is a favourite scheme with many; that it is approved by some of those who will take part in the proceedings, and, therefore, we exhort the Lawyers who may be present to be upon their guard, and not to commit themselves to anything more than simple assimilation and codification of a branch of law that varies in various parts of what is really the same country. The project of lay tribunals is as objectionable as the other is desirable, and we hope that, in their approbation of the latter, none will be considered to give even a shew of support to the former. Let it be met with unqualified opposition at first, and it will not reappear to disturb the harmony of future proceedings for a great purpose, in which all agree.

LAW LECTURES.

We direct the attention of our readers to the Prospectus of the Lectures to be delivered at the Inns of Court during the present educational term, and which will be found to contain suggestions for a course of reading that may be worth preserving for future reference.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

EJECTMENT.

It was decided on Nov. 2, in the case of Doe dem. Smith v. Roe, 20 Law T. Rep. 53, that the Common Law Amendment Act does not affect existing actions of ejectment, and that the old forms can be used. The myths of Roe and Doe are therefore not "dead and buried," as the Times said; or, at all events, they have come to vigorous life again, but which, however, cannot last much over the present Term and ensuing Assizes, as by that time nearly all such actions will be cleared away, and those classic names will sink into oblivion, with their comrades "Special Demurrers" and "Unnecessary Averments."

APPEARANCE SEC STAT.

In all actions where writs were issued before the Amendment Act, and no declaration filed or appearance entered, before the plaintiff can file a declaration he must enter an appearance sec stat. the abolition of this process not applying to existing actions. See exceptions in section 26.

SHAM LAWYERS.

We have received the following:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—On the other half I send you copy of a lithographed circular received by a client. If space will permit, you will perhaps be good enough to insert it in your next. Mr. Midgley is an accountant and agent. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

An Attorney.

"11, Lime-street, Liverpool.

"Sir,—I am instructed by Mr. to apply for payment of the sum of l. due and owing from you to him. Unless that amount be paid at my office, or an arrangement entered into for the payment of the above sum before next, I shall immediately cause a County Court summons to be issued against you for the recovery of the same.

"I am, your obedient servant,

"William Midgley."

THE LEGISLATOR.

The Queen's speech has the following reference to Law Reforms for the Session. It will be seen that our announcement of a projected Ecclesiastical Courts Reform Bill was correct.

"The system of secondary punishments has usefully occupied the labours of successive Parliaments, and I shall rejoice if you shall find it possible to devise means by which, without giving encouragement to crime, transportation to Van Diemen's Land may at no distant period be altogether discontinued. The subject of legal reform continues to engage my anxious attention. The Acts passed in the last session of Parliament have been followed up by the orders necessary for putting them in operation; inquiries are in progress, by my direction, with a view of bringing into harmony the testamentary jurisdiction of my several courts; and Bills will be submitted to you for effecting further improvements in the administration of the law."

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW REFORM.

Friday, Nov. 12.—Lord Lyndhurst called the attention of their lordships to the returns in lunacy which had been moved for by him last session, in connection with which he wished to ask his noble and learned friend on the woolsack whether it was his intention to introduce any measure this session for the reduction of the expenses of proceedings in lunacy? If such were his noble friend's intention, he should leave the matter in his hands with the greatest satisfaction. He also wished to know whether it was intended to carry out the recommendation of the Common Law Commission?—The Lord Chancellor was understood to answer both questions in the affirmative. It was also his intention to introduce other measures of Law Reform, the details of which he should take the earliest opportunity of laying before the House.—Lord Brougham expressed his satisfaction at the announcement which had just been made.

NEW STATUTES.

15 Victoria, A.D. 1852.

[In this record of Legislation only the Statutes of practical utility are given at length. Of the others an abstract or the titles only are presented.]

Cap. LXXXVII.

An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery. (July 1, 1852.)

We give this statute entire.

Whereas several of the officers of the Court of Chancery have from time to time received and do now receive for their own use various fees and emoluments for business done and transacted by them in or by virtue of their respective offices: and whereas it is expedient that such officers should not henceforth retain such fees and emoluments for their own use, but that they should receive adequate salaries for the performance of their respective duties: and whereas it is expedient that for the relief of the suitors of the said Court further provision should be made with respect to the fees now payable by them, and that increased facilities should be afforded for the despatch of the business of the said Court, and that certain offices connected with the said Court should be abolished: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. No officer hereafter to receive fees for his own use; but all officers to be paid by salary.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, no officer of the Court of Chancery, or of any of the judges thereof, shall be entitled to receive and retain for his own use any fee or reward whatsoever, and all officers of the Court of Chancery and of the judges thereof now entitled to receive and retain any fees or other payments for their own use, which by virtue of this Act they will cease so to receive after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, and whose salaries are not fixed by this Act, shall, while they continue to hold their respective offices, receive in lieu of all fees or other payments whatsoever now received by or paid or payable to them for their own use such salary as, having regard to the emoluments heretofore received by them, and the nature and tenure of such offices, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think just, and upon the present holders of such offices respectively ceasing to hold the same, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall fix the salaries to be thereafter received in respect thereof, with reference to the nature and duties of such offices respectively.

2. Officers to continue to receive fees until Lord Chancellor shall otherwise direct, and pay them into the Suitors' Fee Fund.—It shall be lawful for all officers of the Court of Chancery and of the judges thereof, heretofore entitled to receive any fees or emoluments for their own use, and for their successors in their respective offices, and their several and respective clerks or agents, to continue to receive and take all and every the fees and emoluments which have been accustomed to be paid to them, until the Lord Chancellor shall, by any order or orders, otherwise direct, and all such fees and emoluments as shall accrue and be received by such officers respectively, from and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, shall be accounted for and paid by them respectively once in every month into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to the account there, intituled, "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," the amount so received and paid by such officers respectively to be verified by the affidavit of the accounting party.

3. Officers not to take gratuities.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, if any officer of the Court of Chancery or of any of the judges thereof shall, for anything done or pretended to be done relating to his office, situation, or employment, or under colour of doing anything relating to his office, situation, or employment, wilfully take, demand, receive, or accept, or appoint or allow any person whatsoever to take for him or on his account, or for or on account of any person by him named, any fee, gift, gratuity, or emolument, or anything of value, other than his salary and what is allowed or directed to be taken by him under this Act or any order to be made under this Act, the person so offending, when duly convicted, shall forfeit and pay a sum of five hundred pounds, and shall be removed from any office, situation, or employment he may hold in the said court, and shall be rendered and he is hereby rendered incapable for ever thereafter of holding any office, situation, or employment in the said court, or otherwise serving her Majesty, her heirs or successors.

4. How offenders to be prosecuted.—Any such offender may be prosecuted either by information at the suit of her Majesty's Attorney-General, or by criminal information before her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, or by indictment.

5. Allowances for copying to cease, and power to Lord Chancellor to make regulations as to copies.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the several allowances for copying provided for and directed to be paid to the clerk of reports, the clerks of entries, the assistant clerk of affidavits, the clerks of the examiners, and the copying or writing clerks of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, by any Act or Acts of Parliament now in force, shall cease; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be from time to time made by him, to make such regulations as to the making and delivering copies of the pleadings and other proceeding in the said court, and of the documents relating thereto, and the manner in which such copies should be paid for, and the amount of charge for the same, and by whom the amount to be so charged should be received, as may from time to time seem expedient.

6. Power to Lord Chancellor, by order, to vary, reduce, and abolish fees, and to provide for their collection by stamps.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be from time to time made by him, to vary, reduce, or abolish all or any of the fees payable in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and to substitute one or more fee or fees in lieu thereof, and to direct that all or any of such fees shall, from a day to be named in such order or orders and thenceforth, be collected by means of stamps to be provided and used in manner hereinafter mentioned.

7. After such order, fees not to be received in money, but by means of stamps.—From and after the day named in such order or orders, unless and until the Lord Chancellor shall otherwise direct, none of the fees mentioned in such orders respectively shall be received in money, but by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable; and where any fee shall be payable in respect of any document such stamp shall, at the expense of the party liable to pay the fee, and in such manner and under such regulations as shall by any order or orders be directed, be stamped or affixed on the vellum, parchment, or paper on which the proceeding in respect whereof such fee is payable is written, printed, or ingrossed, or which may be otherwise used in reference to such proceeding.

8. Commissioners of Inland Revenue to give the necessary directions as to the stamps, to keep separate accounts, and pay moneys into the Suitors' Fee Fund.—The Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall from time to time, upon the receipt of any order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf, give the necessary directions for carrying the same into effect, and shall provide every thing that is requisite for that purpose, and shall do or cause to be done every thing that is necessary for the receipt and collection of the money to be paid for such stamps; and the said commissioners shall cause separate and distinct accounts to be kept of all sums of money received or collected by them under the provisions of any such order or orders, and of all costs, charges, and expenses incurred by them or by their direction in carrying the same into effect, and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to pay and to deduct and retain out of such moneys all such costs, charges, and expenses, and also to deduct all sums of money repaid on allowances for spoiled stamps, as hereinafter provided for; and after such deduction they shall from time to time, and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct, pay the moneys so to be received and collected into the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to the account there, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account."

9. Provision for sale of stamps.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct any of the officers of the Court of Chancery whose duties may be diminished in consequence of the substitution of stamps for money payments, or otherwise, under this Act, to act under the directions of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in the sale and distribution of all or any of the stamps to be used under this Act: provided always, that in case it appear to the Lord Chancellor, having reference to the duties to be performed by such officers or any of them, that it is not convenient that they should act as aforesaid in the sale and distribution of stamps, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue to appoint persons for such sale and distribution, and to allow to such persons so appointed by them such discount or poundage as they may think fit.

10. Commissioners of Inland Revenue may make regulations as to allowance for spoiled stamps.—It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue from time to time to make such regulations as they shall think fit for the allowance of such stamps, issued under the provisions of this Act, as may have been spoiled or rendered useless or unfit for the purpose intended, or for which the owner may have no immediate use, or which through mistake or inadvertence may have been improperly or unnecessarily used, and such allowance shall be made either by giving other stamps in lieu of the stamps so allowed, or by repaying the amount or value to the owner or holder thereof, after deducting the discount or poundage (if any) allowed on the sale of the stamps of the like kind.

11. Provisions of former Acts relating to stamps to be applicable to stamps under this Act.—The provisions contained in the several Acts for the time being in force relating to stamps under the care or management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall (so far as the same are applicable and consistent with the provisions of this Act), in all cases not hereby expressly provided for, be of full force and effect with respect to the stamps to be provided under or by virtue of this Act, and to the vellum, parchment, or paper on or to which the same stamps shall be impressed or affixed, and be applied and put in execution for collecting and securing the sums of money denoted thereby, and for preventing, detecting, and punishing all frauds, forgeries, and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such provisions had been herein repeated and specially enacted with reference to the said last-mentioned stamps and sums of money respectively.

12. No document to be received or used unless stamped.—No document which by any order or orders to be respectively made as aforesaid shall be required to have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, shall be received or filed, or be used in relation to any proceeding in the Court of Chancery, or be of any validity for any purpose whatsoever, unless or until the same shall have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, in the manner directed by such order: provided always, that if at any time it shall appear that any such document which ought to have had a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto has, through mistake or inadvertence, been received or filed or used without having such stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he think fit, to order that such stamp shall be impressed thereon or affixed thereto, and thereupon, when a stamp shall have been impressed on such document or affixed thereto, in compliance with any such order, such document, and every proceeding in reference thereto, shall be as valid and effectual as if such stamp had been impressed thereon or affixed thereto in the first instance.

13. Officers guilty of fraud or wilful neglect in relation to stamps liable to be dismissed.—If any officer of the Court of Chancery, or other person, shall do or commit or connive at any fraudulent act or practice in relation to any stamp to be used under the provisions of this Act, or to any fee or sum of money to be collected, or which ought to be collected by means of any such stamp, or if any such officer or person shall be guilty of any wilful act, neglect, or omission in relation to any such stamp or fee as aforesaid, whereby any fee or sum of money which ought to be collected for the benefit of the said fee fund shall be lost to the said fee fund, or the payment thereof evaded, every such officer or person so offending shall be dismissed from his office or employment, if the Lord Chancellor shall think fit so to order.

14. Power to abolish fees in lunacy and to substitute a per-centage in lieu thereof.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, by any order or orders, to be from time to time made by the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, to abolish all or any of the fees payable in relation to proceedings in lunacy, and to direct that such of the fees as shall not be abolished, if any, shall be collected by means of stamps in the manner hereinbefore provided with respect to fees payable in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, and also to direct that in lieu of all or any of such fees a per-centage or ad valorem payment shall be paid on the clear annual incomes of the persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, and on the amount of the taxed costs incurred in proceedings in lunacy, or on such annual incomes only, or on the amount of such taxed costs only, the amount of such annual incomes as aforesaid, and the amount of the per-centage or ad valorem payment to be paid thereon and on such taxed costs to be from time to time ascertained and fixed in such manner, by such means, and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, shall by any order or orders direct, and the amount of such per-centage or ad valorem payment to be paid into the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to be placed to the account there, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," at such times and by such persons as the Lord Chancellor, intrusted as aforesaid, shall by order or orders direct: provided always, that the amount to be raised by such per-centage or ad valorem payment shall not exceed the amount which may from time to time be required to provide for the payment of the salaries, expenses, and sums of money payable under the Act of the session holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter eighty-four, or any other Acts or Act of Parliament for the time being in force with respect to lunatics; and that a statement of the amount of such per-centage or ad valorem payment shall from time to time, within fourteen days next after the same shall have been settled, be laid on the table of the House of Commons, if Parliament shall be then assembled, or if Parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of Parliament then next following.

15. Certain statutory jurisdiction given to Lord Chancellor, intrusted with care of lunatics, to be exercised by the persons for the time being so intrusted.—All the jurisdiction, and all the powers and authorities of a judicial nature, given by the Act of the session holden in the first year of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter sixty-five, by "The Trustee Act, 1850," and by any other Acts or Act of Parliament now in force, to the Lord Chancellor, intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, shall belong to and may be exercised by all or any of the persons or person for the time being intrusted as aforesaid.

16. Salaries of Lord Chancellor and judges of the Court of Chancery to be paid out of Consolidated Fund.—And whereas under certain Acts of Parliament now in force the salaries of the Master of the Rolls, and of the Vice-Chancellor appointed under the Act of the session holden in the fifty-third year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter twenty-four, are payable out of and charged upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, but the salary of the Lord Chancellor (except that portion thereof payable to him as Speaker of the House of Lords), and the salaries of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and of the other Vice-Chancellors, are payable out of the interest and dividends arising from the Government or parliamentary securities placed in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery which have been purchased from time to time with moneys taken out of the common and general cash belonging to the suitors of the Court of Chancery, and lying dead and unemployed in the Bank of England: and whereas it is expedient that the salaries of all the judges of the Court of Chancery should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, instead of out of the interest of the securities purchased with the cash of the suitors as aforesaid: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the tenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, there shall be issued and paid and payable out of and charged and chargeable upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, after paying or reserving sufficient to pay all such sums of money as by any Acts of Parliament now in force have been directed to be paid thereout, but with precedence to all other payments which shall hereafter be charged thereupon, the annual salaries hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, to the Lord Chancellor such yearly sum as, with the salary or sum payable to him as Speaker of the House of Lords, to be certified as directed by the Act of the session holden in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter eighty-three, shall be sufficient to make up the net yearly sum of ten thousand pounds; to each of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, six thousand pounds; to the Vice-Chancellor for the time being appointed under the Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, session one, chapter five, five thousand pounds; and to the Vice-Chancellor appointed under the Act of the session holden in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter four, five thousand pounds; all which salaries shall be in lieu of all salaries heretofore payable to such judges respectively, out of any fund whatsoever, under any Acts or Act of Parliament now in force, and shall be payable and paid quarterly, free and clear from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, on the four usual days of payment in the year; that is to say, the fifth day of January, the fifth day of April, the fifth day of July, and the tenth day of October in every year, by equal portions, the first payment to be made on the fifth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and a proportionate part of such salaries respectively to be paid for the quarter current at the death or resignation of any of the persons in the receipt of such salaries.

17. Repeal of sect. 61 of 5 Vict. c. 5.—So much of the Act of the first session holden in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter five, as enacts, that the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery shall, on or before the first day of September in every year, pay into the Bank, to an account, intituled "An Account of interest arising from securities carried to an account of money placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds, shall be repealed.

18. Brokerage heretofore received by Accountant-General to be paid by him into Suitors' Fee Fund.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the brokerage which shall or may from time to time be received by the present Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery shall be paid by him into the Bank of England, to be there placed to his credit as such Accountant-General to the account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," at such times and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct.

19. Salary to be paid to present Accountant-General in lieu of brokerage.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, there shall be paid to the present Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, in lieu of the brokerage heretofore received by him for his own benefit, and in addition to the salary and allowance for books and stationary now received by him as accountant-general, the net yearly salary of two thousand seven hundred pounds.

20. Nothing in Act to affect the rights as a Master in Ordinary.—Nothing herein contained shall affect the rights, privileges, or duties to which the present Accountant-General is entitled or which he is liable to perform as one of the Masters in ordinary of the Court of Chancery.

21. Power to treasury to make regulations as to brokerage.—It shall be lawful for the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury to make such regulations with respect to the broker to be employed in transacting the business relating to the funds of the Court of Chancery, and the amount of commission to be received by such broker, or the payment of such broker by salary or otherwise as they shall from time to time think fit.

22. Salary of all future Accountants - General to be 3,000l. per annum. — From and after the resignation or death of the present Accountant-General the salary provided for the Accountant-General of the said Court by the Act of the Session holden in the twelfth year of the reign of King George the Second, chapter twenty-four, and the Act of the session holden in the ninth year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter nineteen, shall cease, and there shall be paid to the Accountant-General of the said Court for the time being the net yearly salary of three thousand pounds.

23. Certain officers of Lord Chancellor removed, and their offices abolished.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the following officers shall be removed, and their respective offices shall cease and determine; that is to say, the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, the secretary of decrees and injunctions, one of the two gentlemen of the chamber attending the Great Seal, the chaff-wax, the deputy chaff-wax, the sealer, and the deputy sealer, and the duties theretofore performed by the secretary of degrees and injunctions shall thenceforth be performed by the clerks of records and writs, and the respective duties of the officers of the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper and of chaff wax and sealer shall thenceforth be performed by the clerk of the Crown in Chancery and the purse-bearer to the Lord Chancellor respectively, as directed by the Act of the session holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter eighty-four, upon such offices becoming vacant by the death, resignation, or removal of the then respective holders thereof, and such purse-bearer shall be thenceforth entitled to such yearly sums for the expenses of the offices of chaff wax and sealer as are by the said last-mentioned Act directed to be paid to him.

24. Certain officers of the Lord Chancellor to be paid by salary in lieu of fees.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, there shall be paid to the officers of the Lord Chancellor next hereinafter named, in lieu of all fees heretofore received by them respectively for their own use, the following yearly salaries; that is to say, to the principal secretary of the Lord Chancellor one thousand two hundred pounds, to the gentleman of the chamber attending the Great Seal five hundred pounds, to the purse-bearer to the Lord Chancellor five hundred pounds, and to the train-bearer to the Lord Chancellor two hundred pounds; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint a clerk to be employed in the office of such principal secretary, which clerk shall receive by way of salary such annual sum, not exceeding two hundred pounds, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct.

25. The secretary of presentations and the secretary of commissions of the peace to account for and pay fees into Consolidated Fund.—From and after the tenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the persons or person holding the offices of secretary of presentations and secretary of commissions of the peace shall account for all the fees and emoluments payable to and received by them or him by virtue of such offices, and shall pay such fees and emoluments once in every six months into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer, and the same, when so paid, shall be carried to and made part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, the amount so received and paid to be verified by the affidavit of the accounting party.

26. The persons or person holding such last-mentioned offices to receive the yearly sum of 800l.—From and after the tenth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, there shall be paid to the persons or person for the time being holding such last-mentioned offices the yearly sum of eight hundred pounds, to be divided between such persons, in case such offices should be held by different persons, in such proportions as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, and such yearly sum shall be issued and paid and payable out of and be charged and chargeable upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom (after paying or reserving sufficient to pay all such sums of money as by any Acts of Parliament now in force have been directed to be paid thereout, but with precedence to all other payments which shall hereafter be charged thereupon), and shall be payable and paid quarterly, free and clear from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, on the four usual days of payment in the year; that is to say, the fifth day of January, the fifth day of April, the fifth day July, and the tenth day of October in every year, by equal portions, the first payment to be made on the fifth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and a proportionate part thereof to be paid for the quarter current at the death or resignation of the persons or person in the receipt of such yearly sum.

27. Certain offices abolished.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the offices of the patentee of the Subpœna Office, the deputy of the patentee of the Subpœna Office, the clerk of affidavits, the assistant clerk of affidavits, the second assistant clerk of affidavits, the clerk of reports, the doorkeeper of the Court of Chancery, and the crier of the Court of Chancery, and the office of usher of the Court of Chancery, now held by Thomas Francis Le Dieu, shall be abolished.

28. Duties of Subpœna Office transferred to clerk of records and writs.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the execution of the duties of the Subpœna Office shall be transferred to the clerks of records and writs, and such duties shall be performed by them in such manner as they are directed to perform the same by the Act of the session holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and five, after the death, resignation, or removal from his office of the present patentee of the Subpœna Office.

29. Duties of Affidavit Office to be performed by clerks of records and writs.—From and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the duties of the Affidavit Office of the Court of Chancery shall be performed by the clerks of records and writs, but affidavits or affirmations may be sworn, affirmed, or attested upon honour and declarations made before the clerk of enrolments for the time being, as occasion may require, for the better despatch of business; and the duties of the clerk of reports shall be performed by such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint for that purpose, and such person or persons shall be entitled under this Act to such salary or salaries as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall by any order direct, provided that the whole amount of such salaries shall not in any one year exceed the sum of four hundred pounds.

30. Orders in lunacy, when drawn up and signed, to be entered by the registrar in lunacy, and office copies of such orders to be furnished and signed by him, and the Accountant-General to act upon such orders.—Every order made in matters in lunacy by the Lord Chancellor, or the person or persons intrusted as aforesaid, when drawn up by the secretary of lunatics, and signed by the Lord Chancellor, or the persons or person intrusted as aforesaid, shall be entered by such secretary, who shall be henceforth called the registrar in lunacy, in a proper book to be provided by him for that purpose; and he shall furnish to every person requiring the same office copies of such orders, or of such part thereof as may be required, which copies shall be signed by such registrar in lunacy, and he shall provide a seal for his office, and shall cause to be sealed or stamped therewith all such office copies as aforesaid; and every such office copy, purporting to be so signed, and sealed or stamped with such seal, shall at all times, and on behalf of all persons, and whether for the purposes of this Act or otherwise, be admitted as evidence of the order of which it purports to be a copy, without any further proof thereof.

31. Orders in lunacy in certain cases to be acted upon in the same manner as if drawn up by the registrar of the Court of Chancery.—Where any such order in lunacy relates to the payment, transfer, or carrying over of any cash, stock, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects, to or into the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the credit of the matter of any person or persons being idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, or to the payment, transfer, or carrying over, or other disposal by the said Accountant-General of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects which may be standing in his name to the credit of the matter of any person or persons being idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, the said Accountant-General, and all other persons, including the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all other companies and societies, shall act upon such order, signed by the Lord Chancellor, or the person or persons intrusted as aforesaid, after the same shall have been so entered as aforesaid, in the same manner as if such order had been also drawn up by the Registrar of the Court of Chancery, and passed and entered according to the mode heretofore in force; and the Registrar in Lunacy shall certify under his hand to the said Accountant-General what stocks or funds he is by virtue of any such order to transfer, and to whom, in the same manner as the Registrars of the Court of Chancery have been heretofore accustomed to do.

32. Certificates and reports of Masters in Lunacy to be only filed in the office of Registrar in Lunacy.—It shall not be necessary hereafter to file any certificate or report of the Masters in Lunacy in the Report Office of the Court of Chancery, but the said Accountant-General, and all other persons included as aforesaid, shall act upon all certificates and reports of the Masters in Lunacy, filed in the office of the Registrar in Lunacy, in the same manner as if such certificates and reports respectively had been also filed in the Report Office of the Court of Chancery according to the mode heretofore in force.

33. Forging the signature of Registrar of Lunacy, or of his seal, to be felony.—If any person shall forge the signature of the Registrar of Lunacy, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of his office, or knowingly concur in using any such forged or counterfeit signature or seal, or shall tender in evidence any document with a false or counterfeit signature of such registrar, or with a false or counterfeit seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to the same punishment as any offender under an Act of the session holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and thirteen.

34. Master of reports and entries to countersign cheques, &c.—And whereas all notes and cheques for the payment of money drawn by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery upon the Bank of England have been heretofore countersigned by the registrars of the said court, in pursuance of the provisions of the Act of the session holden in the twelfth year of the reign of King George the First, chapter thirty-two: and whereas all copies and extracts taken from the registrar's books deposited in the office of the Master of the reports and entries have been heretofore signed by the said registrars: and whereas the performance of such duties by the said registrars is attended with inconvenience, and interrupts them in the execution of their other duties; and it is expedient that the Master of reports and entries should be empowered to sign such documents as well as the said registrars: be it therefore enacted, That the duties relating to the countersigning the notes or cheques drawn by the Accountant-General of the said court upon the Bank of England, and to the signing the copies and extracts made in or issuing from the office of the Master of reports and entries, heretofore performed by the registrars of the said Court, so far as it shall be found necessary or expedient to continue such duties, shall be performed by the Master of reports and entries, or the registrars of the said Court, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct.

35. To perform other duties as Lord Chancellor may direct.—The Master of reports and entries shall also perform all such other duties as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct.

36. Account of moneys of the suitors of the court kept at the Report Office to be discontinued, and offices of clerks of accounts abolished.—And whereas under an order of the said Court, recited in the said last-mentioned Act, and thereby confirmed, an account of all moneys, securities, and effects belonging to the suitors of the said court, was directed to be kept at the Report Office; and whereas, since the passing of such Act, three accounts of such moneys, securities, and effects have been respectively kept, that is to say, one at the Report Office by the clerks of accounts, another in the office of the Accountant-General of the said court, and a third at the Bank of England: and whereas it is considered that the account so kept at the Report Office is no longer necessary, and may be discontinued: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, the account so kept at the Report Office as aforesaid shall be discontinued, and the offices of clerks of accounts shall be abolished, and so much of the said last-mentioned order as requires, that when any money belonging to the suitors of the said court should be directed to be paid, by order of the said Court, the note drawn for such money upon cheque-paper, as thereby directed, should be carried to the Report Office, and an entry made thereof there, and intratur written thereon, shall be repealed; and from and after the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, every note or cheque for the payment of money, under any order of the said Court, signed by the Accountant-General of the said court, and countersigned by the Master of reports and entries, or one of the registrars of the said court, as hereinbefore required, shall be sufficient authority to the Bank of England to pay the money mentioned in such note or cheque to the person named therein, or to such person as he or she, by indorsement, shall order to receive the same.

37. Lord Chancellor to make general orders for carrying Act into effect.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make and issue such general orders as he shall think fit, as well in relation to any matter connected with the offices by this Act abolished, and not hereby otherwise provided for, as for carrying the provisions of this Act into execution, and also all such other rules and orders as he shall think fit for altering and regulating the business of the several officer of the said court.

38. Orders under this Act may be varied.—Any order or orders for the time being made under this Act may from time to time be annulled, altered, or varied by the like authority by which any such order or orders shall have been made, and new orders may from time to time be made for any of the purposes of this Act by the authority by which orders are hereby authorised to be made.

39. Duties and salaries of clerks in Accountant-General's office.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall see fit, to authorize and direct the first, second, and third clerks in each division of the office of the said Accountant-General, from and after the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, to continue to perform the acts or duties hitherto performed by such clerks, in addition to the duties prescribed by Act of Parliament, as heretofore, in exclusion of any other person, and to direct them to be paid such yearly salaries as the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall think just; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to fix the fees to be paid for such acts as aforesaid, which shall be accounted for in like manner as the other fees now received in the office of the said Accountant-General.

40. Amount of salaries to clerks of Taxing Masters.—Instead of the salaries directed to be paid by the Act of the session, holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and three, to the clerks of the Taxing Masters of the Court of Chancery, every such clerk shall, from and after the third day of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, be entitled to a salary of three hundred and fifty pounds per annum.

41. Deposits on appeals to be paid into bank, and placed to "The Appeal Deposit Account."—The deposit now payable on setting down appeals and exceptions for hearing shall continue to be payable, and such deposits shall be paid to and received by the senior registrar of the Court of Chancery for the time being, who shall once in every three months pay all sums so received by him into the Bank of England, to the credit of the Accountant-General of the said court (the amount so received and paid by such registrar to be verified by affidavit), and the several sums when so paid in shall be from time to time placed to an account, to be intituled "The Appeal Deposit Account," and the moneys which shall from time to time be standing to such account shall be paid and applied as the Court of Chancery shall from time to time in that behalf order or direct.

42. Persons may sell by auction, under an order of the Court of Chancery, without being liable to duty imposed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15.—And whereas by the Act of the session holden in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter fifteen, a certain duty of excise is imposed upon every license to be taken out by every person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer in any part of the United Kingdom; and it is thereby enacted, that every person who exercises or carries on the business of an auctioneer, or who acts in such capacity at any sale or roup, and every person who sells or offers for sale any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein, at any sale or roup where any person or persons become the purchaser of the same by competition, and being the highest bidder, or by any other mode of sale by competition, shall, except as hereinafter mentioned, be deemed to carry on the trade or business of an auctioneer, and shall be required to take out such license as thereby directed; and that every person who carries on the trade or business of an auctioneer as aforesaid without taking out such license shall, except as thereinafter mentioned, forfeit one hundred pounds: and whereas doubts have arisen whether any sale or sales by way of auction can now be made under any order or decree of the Court of Chancery before any officer of the said court, or the persons by such officer in that behalf appointed, without rendering such officer or other person liable to take out such license as by the said last-mentioned Act is directed to be taken out by all persons acting as auctioneers; and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for any Master in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery, and for the chief clerk of any such Master, and for every other person appointed in that behalf by any such Master, to sell any goods or chattels, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interests therein, under any decree or order of the said Court, by auction or by any other mode of sale by competition, without any license as an auctioneer, and without being liable to the duty imposed by the said last-mentioned Act, or any other Act or Acts now in force.

43. Indemnity in respect of former sales.—The Masters in Ordinary of the Court of Chancery and their chief clerks shall be discharged and freed from all suits, prosecutions, liabilities, pains, and penalties to which they or any or either of them are or is or might be liable for or on account of any sale by or by way of auction or competition heretofore made or conducted by or before them or any or either of them.

44. Officers whose emoluments are diminished in consequence of this Act may make claim for compensation to Commissioners of Treasury.—It shall be lawful for the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, the patentee of the Subpœna Office, and for every officer of the Court of Chancery, and for every officer or person employed in the offices of the Masters in lunacy, or the registrar in lunacy, whose salary or emoluments shall be taken away or diminished by the operation of this Act, or by the rules and orders to be made thereunder, to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, and such commissioners are hereby required, within the space of six calendar months after any such claim shall have been made, by examination upon oath or otherwise (which oath they and each of them are and is hereby authorised to administer), to inquire whether any, and, if any, what compensation ought to be made to such clerk of the hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, patentee of the Subpœna Office, and to any officer or person claiming such compensation, the said commissioners having regard to the conditions on which the appointment of any such officer or person was made, or to any notice which at the time of such appointment may have been given to such officer or person that this office was to be holden subject to any provision by Parliament for the abolition or regulation thereof, but with full power for the said commissioners to investigate and determine whether, from the nature of the office or mode of accession thereunto, any such conditions or notice could have been properly made or given, and also having regard to the holding of any office, place, or situation in the said court by such officer or person; and in all cases in which it shall appear to the said commissioners that compensation ought to be granted, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by warrant under their hands, to order and direct that such annual compensation shall be made to the persons so claiming such compensation as aforesaid, or any of them, as to the said commissioners, in their discretion, shall seem just and reasonable; and all such compensations shall be paid and payable out of such funds and in such manner as is hereinafter in that behalf directed: Provided always, that an account of all such compensations shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, be laid upon the table of the House of Commons, if Parliament shall be then assembled, or, if Parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of the Parliament then next following.

45. Payments to be made to persons whose offices are abolished.—Every person now holding any freehold office, or office for life, or during good behaviour, which is abolished by this Act, and in respect of which any annual or other fixed salary is by virtue of any Act of Parliament or otherwise by law payable, shall be entitled to receive such salary during the residue of the term of his natural life, in the same manner and out of the same fund as if this Act had not been passed; and every person now holding any freehold office, or office for life, or during good behaviour, which is abolished by this Act, and in respect of which any fees of office are by law or custom payable, shall be entitled to receive from and after the passing of this Act, during his natural life, an annuity equal to the average annual amount of such fees of office during the three years next preceding the passing of this Act; and the amount of such annuity shall be determined by the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, in the same manner, and shall be paid out of such funds and in such manner, as is by this Act directed with respect to the compensations hereby provided to be given to officers whose salary or emoluments shall be taken away or diminished by the operation of this Act, or by the rules and orders to be thereunder made.

46. Lord Chancellor may order pensions for retiring officers—5 & 6 Vict. c. 103—4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24.—From and after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order made on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall think fit) to be paid to any person now or hereafter holding any office or appointment in the Court of Chancery, other than and except any clerk of enrolments, clerk of records and writs, or Taxing Master, to whom, subsequently to the passing of this Act, the Lord Chancellor, under the Act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of her Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery," shall have ordered a retiring allowance to be paid, and to any officer or person employed in the offices of the Masters in Lunacy, or the Registrar in Lunacy, who shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, or shall have continued in any office or offices for twenty years, and shall be desirous of resigning the same, a superannuation allowance under this Act, and thereupon such officer or person shall be entitled to receive such superannuation allowance as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall think proper to direct; and in ascertaining and awarding the amount of such superannuation allowance, the said Commissioners shall take into consideration the whole period during which any such officer or person shall have been permanently employed in any office or situation in the said courts or offices, and shall proceed according to the principles laid down by an Act passed in the session holden in the fourth and fifth years of King William the Fourth, chapter twenty-four, "To alter, amend, and consolidate the Laws for regulating the Pensions, Compensations, and Allowances to be made to Persons in respect of their having held Civil Offices in her Majesty's Service:" provided always, that the Lord Chancellor shall in every such order state the cause for making the same, and shall cause a copy of such order to be laid on the table of the House of Commons within fourteen days next after the making of the same if Parliament shall be then assembled, and if Parliament shall not be then sitting, then within fourteen days next after the assembling thereof.

47. Lord Chancellor may remove and give pensions to disabled officers.—From and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by order, to remove any officer of the Court of Chancery, or any officer or person employed in the offices of the Masters in Lunacy, or the Registrar in Lunacy, who shall be afflicted with any infirmity which shall disable him from the due execution of his office, and who shall refuse to resign, or become incapable of resigning the same, and upon such removal to order to be paid to any such officer or person so removed, an annuity or retiring allowance, not exceeding two-third parts of the yearly sum or salary to which he shall be entitled at the time of his removal, such annuity or retiring allowance to be paid out of the funds, and in the manner in which retiring allowances under this Act are hereinafter directed to be paid.

48. Salaries to grow due from day to day, but to be payable quarterly out of Suitors' Fee Fund.—Except as herein otherwise provided, all salaries under this Act shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable under an order of the Lord Chancellor on the third day of February, the third day of May, the third day of August, and the third day of November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct, and shall be paid to the parties entitled thereto, or their respective executors or administrators, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and other sums of money by any former Act or Acts now in force directed or authorised to be paid thereout.

49. Compensation to chaff wax, &c. to be paid out of Consolidated Fund.—The compensation to be made under this Act to the persons holding the offices of the keeper or clerk of her Majesty's hanaper, deputy clerk of the hanaper, chaff wax, deputy chaff wax, sealer, and deputy sealer, shall be issued and payable out of and charged and chargeable upon the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, after paying or reserving sufficient to pay all such sums of money as by any Acts of Parliament now in force have been directed to be paid thereout, but with precedence to all other payments which shall hereafter be charged thereupon, and such compensations shall be paid quarterly, free and clear from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, on the four usual quarterly days of payment in the year; that is to say, the fifth day of January, the fifth day of April, the fifth day of July, and the tenth day of October in every year by equal portions, the first payment to be computed from the twenty-eighth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, to be made on such of the same days of payment as shall happen next after the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall have issued their warrant for any such compensation, and a proportionate part thereof to be paid for the quarter current at the death of any of the persons in the receipt of such compensation.

50. All other compensations and superannuation or retiring allowances to grow due from day to day, but to be payable quarterly out of Suitors' Fund.—Except as herein otherwise provided, all compensations and superannuation or retiring allowances under this Act shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable on the third day of February, the third day of May, the third day of August, and the third day of November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct, and shall be paid to the parties entitled thereto, or their respective executors or administrators, out of the interest and dividends of the government or Parliamentary securities now or hereafter to be placed in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the two accounts, intituled "Account of moneys placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of securities purchased with surplus interest arising from securities carried to an account of moneys placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," or either of them, by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor, to be made from time to time for that purpose, without any draft from the Accountant-General, but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and other sums of money by any former Act or Acts now in force directed or authorised to be paid thereout.

51. Alteration of quarterly days of payment of certain salaries out of Suitors' Fee Fund.—All salaries payable under any Act or Acts now in force out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," by equal quarterly payments, on the twenty-fifth day of February, the twenty-fifth day of May, the twenty-fifth day of August, and the twenty-fifth day of November in every year, shall from and after the passing of this Act be respectively payable and paid by equal quarterly payments, on the third day of February, the third day of May, the third day of August, and the third day of November in every year, and a proportionate part of the first of such last-mentioned quarterly payments, to be computed from the last day of payment of such salaries, shall be made on the first of such quarterly days of payment hereby appointed which shall happen next after the passing of this Act, and upon the resignation, death, or removal from office of any person entitled to receive any such salary, such person, or his executors or administrators, as the case may be, shall be paid such proportionate part of the salary aforesaid as shall have accrued since the last quarterly payment thereof to the time of such resignation, death, or removal from office.

52. Provisions for expenses of the officers of the Court.—It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be from time to time made for that purpose, to order payment, at such times, and in such manner, and out of such of the funds hereby charged as he shall think fit, of all such sums as shall appear to him to be reasonable and proper to be paid for providing suitable courts, rooms, and buildings in which the business of the Court of Chancery may from time to time be carried on, and for keeping order in the several courts, and for the care and cleaning of all such courts, rooms, and buildings, and for the rent, taxes, rates, insurance from fire, and other outgoings charged upon or payable for or in respect thereof, and for the enlargement, alteration, or improvement, repairs, furnishing, and fitting up of the same, and for the books and stationery which may be required for the business of the said court and the offices thereof, and for the making, writing, printing, counting, and examining official documents and records of the said court, and office and other copies of such documents and records, and for coals and candles, and other necessary articles for the said courts and offices, and for all other necessary expenses relating thereto, and for the expenses of the pursebearer and the running porter to the great seal, and the messenger to the Lord Chancellor during his absence from town, and for the petty expenses now borne by the porters' fund; and it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls to appoint a clerk or clerks to be employed in the office of the secretary at the Rolls, which clerk or clerks shall receive by way of salary such annual sum or sums as the Master of the Rolls shall from time to time fix and determine; provided always, that such annual sum or sums shall not in the whole in any one year exceed the sum of three hundred pounds.

53. Surplus of Suitors' Fund to be from time to time carried over to and to become part of Suitors' Fee Fund.—And whereas many of the fees payable to the Suitors' Fee Fund have been lately abolished, and several of them have been reduced, and under the provisions of this Act there will be a further reduction of the fees payable to the said fund: and whereas, in order to effect such reduction, and at the same time to keep up the said fund to an amount sufficient to satisfy the charges thereon, as well under this Act as under any former Act, it is expedient to make such addition to the said fund as hereinafter provided: Be it therefore enacted, that so much of any Act or Acts now in force as directs that the surplus interest and annual produce which hath arisen and shall arise from the moneys placed out on the several accounts, intituled "Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," beyond what shall be sufficient to answer the purposes of the several Acts relating to such securities, and also the interest produced from the securities purchased with such surplus interest and annual produce, shall from time to time be placed out in the purchase of Government or Parliamentary securities in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, and placed to the credit of the said account, intituled "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Moneys placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," shall be repealed, and the surplus interest and annual produce hereafter to arise from the moneys placed out on the two several last-mentioned accounts, beyond what shall be sufficient to answer the purposes of this Act, and the several other Acts relating to such securities, shall be carried over by the said Accountant-General and be placed to the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," and shall thereupon become part of the fund standing to such account.

54. Provision in case of surplus or deficiency of Suitors' Fee Fund.—If at the end of any year there shall be a surplus standing to the credit of the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," after payment of the several salaries and sums of money charged thereon by this Act or any former Act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor by any order to direct that such surplus, or such part thereof as to the Lord Chancellor shall seem fit, shall be invested in the purchase of Parliamentary or Government securities in the name of the said Accountant-General, to be placed to the account, intituled "Account of Moneys placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor in like manner to direct the investment of the dividends or interest to accrue from time to time on the securities now or at any time hereafter under this Act or any former Act to be placed to the said last-mentioned account, or so much of such dividends and interest as he shall think fit, in the purchase of Parliamentary or Government securities in the names of the said Accountant-General, to be by him placed to the credit of the said last-mentioned account, and as often as there shall be a deficiency in the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," at any of the times appointed for payment of any of the salaries or sums of money charged thereon, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct the said Accountant-General to make good such deficiency by carrying over and placing to the said account, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," such sum as the Lord Chancellor may consider sufficient for that purpose, out of the interest and dividends to arise from the Government or Parliamentary securities standing to the said account, intitled "Account of Moneys placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," or by a sale of so much of the said securities as may be necessary for that purpose.

55. Interpretation of term "Lord Chancellor."—In the construction of this Act, unless such meaning be repugnant to or inconsistent with the context, the expression "Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, and the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the time being.

CAP. LXXXVIII.

An Act to remove doubts as to the Constitution of the Bishopric of Christchurch, in New Zealand, and to enable her Majesty to constitute such Bishopric, and to subdivide the Diocese of New Zealand. July 1, 1852.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE Q. B. has refused to bail persons charged with wilful murder, in a case of death by duelling. The Court drew a distinction between the Six Mile Bridge case, in Ireland,—where soldiers had been committed on a coroner's inquisition, and came to the Court protesting their innocence, and the Court, looking at the evidence, believed them to be innocent,—and this case, in which the parties confessed to having done an act which in law was murder, and for which they could only ask a mitigation of punishment. (Reg. v. Barronet, 20 Law T. Rep. 50.)

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Jones v. Price, 20 Law T. Rep. 49, is a case of unusual interest and importance, as a complete review of the law relating to the purchase of reversionary interests, and the principles upon which a Court of Equity will proceed in an application to set aside such a purchase, on the ground of inadequate value. The interest of the case is increased by the circumstance that the purchaser was the vendor's solicitor, so that it involved the further question, in what manner the Court would deal with a purchase by a solicitor from his client.

It was held by Lord ST. LEONARDS, first, that mere inadequacy of price would not be sufficient to set aside the purchase of a reversionary interest, unless there was also clear fraud. Secondly, that the value was to be ascertained, "not by the estimate of actuaries, but by what the property would really fetch in the market."

As to a purchase by a solicitor from his client, his Lordship said, "He did not intend to break in upon the rule that a solicitor might purchase from his client, if the client had the advice of another solicitor; but if a solicitor did enter into a contract with a person who is or was his client, he must at least be prepared to shew how the contract was entered into, who made the first offer, and what were the circumstances. If this transaction had been a bonâ fide transaction, he would have supported it."

INCUMBERED ESTATES COURT.—The following is a summary of the business done from the commencement:—2,389 petitions had been lodged, being an average of 70 for each month. The produce of the sales amounted to 7,215,000*l.* of which 935,318*l.* were the produce of private sales. The sales distributed among the different provinces amounted, in Leinster, to 1,969,000*l.*; Munster, 2,493,000*l.*; Ulster, 1,261,000*l.*; Connaught, 1,491,000*l.* in round numbers. The gross annual rental of the lots sold was 520,000*l.* the number of acres 1,293,573, of which 403,000 were bought by 114 English and Scotch purchasers, being the contents of 95 different estates, sold in separate lots. The purchase-money of these lots amounted to 1,100,000*l.* Of the 114 purchasers set down as English and Scotch, eight were Scotch, the remainder being English, with the exception of one American. A very interesting table is that which shows the amount of purchase-money invested by each of the 2,455 purchasers. Of purchasers under 1,000*l.* there were 1,040, of whom 21 were English or Scotch; from 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.* 447 purchasers, of whom 18 were English or Scotch; from 2,000*l.* to 5,000*l.* 549 purchasers, of whom 26 were English or Scotch; from 5,000*l.* to 10,000*l.* 314 purchasers, of whom 21 were English or Scotch; from 10,000*l.* to 20,000*l.* 83 purchasers, of whom 13 were English or Scotch; at 20,000*l.* and upwards, 22 purchasers, of whom 12 were English or Scotch; shewing an increase in the proportion of English and Scotch purchasers as the amount of purchase-money increased. The occupation of the English and Scotch purchasers is distributed thus—20 farmers, 6 land and insurance companies, 36 manufacturers and merchants, and 52 of the gentry class, including eight titled persons.

Queries.

CONVEYANCE—SITE FOR PARSONAGE-HOUSE.

A. is desirous to give to and invest in the vicar a piece of land as a site for a parsonage-house.

1. Can this be done under the 43 Geo. 3, c 108; or must it be under the Church Building Acts, or some or one of them?

2. It is presumed that if it is under any of the Church Building Acts the land must be conveyed to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and not to the vicar.

3. If it can be taken under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 108, must the conveyance be in duplicate, and with whom should the duplicate be lodged, and will any stamp be necessary on either of the deeds?

4. Does the last-mentioned Act authorise a corporation, such as the vicar of a parish, to purchase a piece of land for the above purpose? AMICUS.

Answers to Queries.

STAMPS.

I HAVE read the reply of Mr. Wilkinson in No. 500, and of "L. C." in No. 501, to "W. T.'s" query in No. 495. I agree with the former in the conclusion at which he has arrived, but not in his premises; and differ entirely from "L. C.'s" opinion. It seems to me that the deed operates as a settlement in respect of A.'s wife's share, and as such, is chargeable with the ordinary deed stamp, in addition to the ad val. duty on B. and C.'s shares. The following extract from the old Stamp Act (Rouse's ed. p. 53) seems to me conclusive on the point:—"Deeds containing matters not incidental, and where any deed or instrument operating as a conveyance on the sale of any property shall operate also as a conveyance of any other than the property sold by way of settlement, or for any other purpose, or shall also contain any other matter or thing besides what shall be incident to the sale and conveyance of the property sold, or relate to the title thereto, every such deed or instrument shall be charged, in addition to the duty to which it shall be liable as a conveyance on the sale of property, and to any progressive duty to which it may also be liable, with such further stamp duty as any separate deed containing the other matter would have been chargeable with, exclusive of the progressive duty. COUNTY COURTS.

THE death of Mr. CHILTON has enabled the LORD CHANCELLOR to perform a graceful act of recognition of personal and professional merit, in the appointment of Mr. PITT TAYLOR to the vacant Judgeship of the Lambeth and Greenwich Courts. Mr. TAYLOR is known to the Profession as the author of the best work on the Law of Evidence; as an energetic and able Law Reformer, an accomplished lawyer, and that which is still more necessary than either qualification for a County Court Judge, as a man of uncommonly sound common sense, versed in affairs, and having quick and keen perception. Such appointments are equally creditable to the Chancellor who makes, and the Barrister who receives, them. This is the way to make the County Courts both efficient and popular.

Already in the term a point has arisen on the Jurisdiction of the County Courts over a claim of right. The owner of a wharf brought an action against the owner of an adjoining wharf for obstructing his premises by permitting barges, &c. to overlap them. Defendant pleaded a custom of the river Thames to do this while unloading. This custom the plaintiff denied, and there was a new assignment that the obstruction was for an unreasonable time. Upon this a question arose, whether the case was within the jurisdiction of the County Court as being a claim of a right; but inasmuch as it was not a claim to an incorporeal hereditament or a franchise, the Court held that it was within the jurisdiction of the County Court. (Davis v. Walton, 20 Law T. Rep. 53.)

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—You are aware, as the organ of the Legal Profession, that in 1842 an Act of Parliament passed to enable traders owing debts not exceeding 300*l.* (or non-traders to any extent) to apply by petition to the Court of Bankruptcy for protection from arrest, and if their conduct had been without reproach, to eventually obtain a final protection from all process. Under this Act of Parliament, so administered, an immediate protection and an interim order was forthwith granted, i. e. on filing the petition and schedule.

In 1847 this great boon to the unfortunate was transferred, to be dealt with by the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors, where the same practice was carried out of obtaining the interim order and protection forthwith, upon an affidavit being made that the petitioner was in fear of arrest, or that his effects were liable to be taken in execution to benefit one creditor solely, and thereby prevent an equal division amongst the creditors generally (and in all cases this protection could be had on the day following the filing of the petition, &c.). A year or two after 1847 another Act of Parliament passed, which (inter alia) transferred, in all cases beyond twenty miles from the court-house in Portugal-street, the powers of that Court to the judges of the various County Courts, as heretofore established. Now the object of my complaint is, that the judges of the various County Courts do not grant this immediate protection to the petitioner, but he is delayed from obtaining his necessary protection (and which is the sum and substance of the Act of Parliament) until the court-day arrives (perhaps once a month). Thus the unfortunate petitioner is still at the mercy of his creditor, and in many instances has to be under the necessity of what is a generally-used term, "keep out of the way." Until the hoped-for day arrives, this is very inconvenient, to say the least of it, and it ought to be otherwise arranged. I have made inquiry of several of the Legal Profession attending to this department of the law, and find this delay to be the general practice (although I must except out of this rule the humane judge of the Margate and Ramsgate Courts, who invests his clerk with the power of granting immediate protection by affixing his signature to blank forms, as is the practice in the Superior Courts of Common Law, all the learned judges signing, as is well known, the various orders in blank, to be filled up as occasion may require; and in many instances their orders are only stamped with a fac simile of the judge's handwriting, or written by the clerks to the various judges. What I humbly suggest ought to be done is, that all the judges of the County Courts ought to follow the example of their brother at Margate Court, and not leave the petitioner at the mercy of the creditor for so long a period, for where the Legislature provides means to spare imprisonment, all who have a share in the administration of the law; ought to assist, and not block up the stream of humanity; for no doubt the law will, in a very few years, only cast into prison the fraudulent and dishonest, and not those whose "only crime is to be unfortunate."

I am, Sir, yours, &c. LUVID.

COUNTY COURTS CLERKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Amidst the numerous complaints daily brought before the public by both classes of the Profession, of their interests being affected by the law reforms of the last session, I am surprised that the older grievances which the clerks of the County Courts labour under should be overlooked. I allude to the miserable allowances which the clerks of single and small courts (issuing about a thousand summonses per annum) obtain for their services. We have been long waiting in the expectation that the Treasury would, ere this, have abolished the payment by fees, and have substituted salaries in lieu; but although we have now a Home Secretary and a Chancellor of the Exchequer whose views extend beyond the petty savings of their predecessors, our position is not likely to be improved so long as we remain quiescent; and the anxiety evinced by the late meeting of the solicitors at Derby to raise the status of the Profession, is poorly responded to, so long as we submit to be paid by fees, the total of which would not, in many instances, pay the salary of a clerk in an ordinary counting-house. The public will indeed think most meanly of us when told that for the daily performance of a portion of the duties of the office, we submit to receive a fee amounting to the nineteen-fortieth part of a penny.

Are we always to remain thus dormant? I shall be very glad to lend my assistance towards promoting a better state of things. Would not a general meeting at Birmingham, Derby, or Normanton be our first step? Unfortunately there are clashing interests amongst us. The clerks of the large courts, whose fees exceed the highest amount contemplated to be paid by a fixed salary, are naturally desirous to let the present system continue. Another class, who hold the clerkship of several courts, and employ deputies on the best terms they can, are equally opposed to any change, in the fear that if a fixed salary were attached to each court, the amount of pluralities held by one clerk would be too intolerable for the country to submit to. The Associated Society of County Court Clerks is composed principally of these two classes, and hence the stagnant state in which the courts are kept. The business of them might be increased with great advantage to the public, if a real effort were made to extend their utility.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE CLERK OF A SINGLE COURT.

Nov. 9, 1852.

BUSINESS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.—On Thursday the annual return (obtained by the late Mr. Grainger) of the business in the County Courts during the year 1851 was printed. The number of plaints entered was 441,584, and the amount for which they were entered was 1,624,916*l.* Judgment was obtained for 815,514*l.* and the costs were 191,075*l.* There were 100,194*l.* paid into court without proceeding to judgment. The total fees were 272,500*l.* The amount received to the credit of suitors was 618,468*l.* and the amount paid out 615,181*l.* The number of plaints entered in 1851 was 44,791 above the numbers entered in 1850; the amount sued for was 359,801*l.* above that sued for in 1850, and the average amount for which each plaint was entered was increased from 3*l.* to 3*l.* 13s. 6d.; the number above 20*l.* was 13,446, and the number of such tried 8,236, being 61 per cent. of the plaints entered; from these trials 38 appeals only were made, in 11 of which the decision of the County Court was confirmed, and in 8 reversed, while 15 appeals were not proceeded with. The number of causes tried by jury has not increased with the largeness of the demands, only 35 per 1,000 of the causes having been so tried in 1851, while in 1850 they were in the proportion of 37 per 1,000.

THE BROTHER OF THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, Mr. James Disraeli, has been appointed to the Treasurership of the County Courts of Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, and Lincolnshire, circuits 17, 18, and 19. The salary is stated to be 400*l.* a year, with 150*l.* a year for a clerk.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—The first week of term produced few points upon the new Procedure—indeed, up to the date of our last publication three cases only had come under the consideration of the Courts. Fiott v. Mullins, 20 Law T. Rep. 50, was in this wise. Notice of a motion had been given before the 2nd November (when the Act came into operation) for that day. Was such notice good, having reference to a law not yet in force? It was held to be so.

In the same case, under sec. 20 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, a defendant gave notice for production by plaintiff of all documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit. He did not specify, and there was no evidence to shew what documents were in plaintiff's possession. Vice-Chancellor STUART refused the motion with costs. "It was perfectly clear," he said, "that this Act of Parliament could not, by any reasonable construction of the words of it, be held to sanction an application of this kind. This was a motion for the production of all documents in the possession or power of the plaintiff. [The Court could never act upon an application of that kind without some clear and distinct evidence, and some clear and distinct statements of what the documents were."

In Jones v. Wood, 20 Law T. Rep. 50, it was decided that suits which have become abated before the passing of the recent statutes may be revived by an order of course under the 52nd section, and not, as heretofore, by bill of revivor.

Under the 44th section of c. 86, which empowers suits to be proceeded with in certain cases without bringing the personal representatives before the Court, it has been decided that where a decree had been made on a claim for administration by a residuary legatee against executors, who were also two of the residuary legatees, and one of the executors had died intestate, and no administration had been taken out of his estate, and he had not proved, nor possessed any of the assets, the suit might proceed without bringing his personal representative before the Court, and the Master might proceed under the decree in his absence. (Rogers v. Jones, 20 Law T. Rep. 50.)

COMMON LAW.—From these courts we have only to note one case upon the new procedure. In Doe dem. Smith v. Roe, 20 Law T. Rep. 53, the question was raised as to the operation of the statute upon a pending action of ejectment. A declaration in ejectment had been served before the 24th October. Could the lessor of the plaintiff proceed to judgment under the old practice, or according to the provisions of the new statute? The Court held without hesitation that he was entitled to move for judgment according to the practice before the new Act.

In the Law of Attorneys there is to be noted the case of Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 52. This was the notorious case in which the enormous charge was made for notices of action, and disallowed on taxation. It appears that at the taxation the plaintiff made no objection to certain items, expecting that the bill would be paid by the other side. But it turned out that he was compelled to pay a portion of his own costs, and now he came to the Court to object to the allowance of certain charges. But the Court properly held that he was bound by his own acquiescence in them at the taxation.

It will be observed that in the Exeter Bankruptcy Court the Commissioner has refused exclusive audience to the Bar, and has permitted an Attorney to conduct a case as agent for another Attorney, thus differing in this last point from the judgment of Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE, reported a short time since. (Anon. 20 Law T. Rep. 55.)

LAW LECTURES.

Prospectus of the Lectures to be delivered during the ensuing Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

THE Public Lectures to be delivered by the Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History, during Michaelmas Term, 1852, will include the following subjects:—

FIRST LECTURE.

The Genius of the English Constitution, Civil and Ecclesiastical, contrasted with that of France, during the Reign and at the Accession of Elizabeth.

SECOND AND THIRD LECTURES.

The Progress and Establishment of the Constitution during the Reigns of James the First and Charles the First, until the breaking out of the Civil Wars.

FOURTH AND FIFTH LECTURES.

Proceedings in Parliament and the Courts of Justice from the Restoration to the Revolution.

SIXTH LECTURE.

The Revolution of 1688.

In his Private Lectures the Reader proposes to tread the same ground, but to follow more in detail the history of the period from the accession of Elizabeth to the Revolution of 1688. He proposes, also, to illustrate the character of our institutions during that interval by a reference to those of France, to explain the causes which led to different results in the two countries.

The text-books for the Private Lectures will be:—Lord Clarendon's History; Lord Clarendon's Life; May's History of the Parliament; Hallam's Constitutional History; 1st and 4th volumes of Blackstone; State Trials from 1500 to 1688; Brodie's Constitutional History, vol. 1.; Millar's Constitutional History; Sullivan's Lectures; Montesquieu's Esprit des Lois, liv. 11, c. 6; Burnet's History of the Church; Hale's History of the Common Law; Ralph's History; Rapin.

The course of private tuition the Reader proposes to adopt is, to take the first volume of Hallam's Constitutional History, and Rapin's History of England from Elizabeth to William III. to read it with his students, and question them upon it. He will also expect the students to read the other books he has mentioned, as the groundwork of his class; and to be able to answer generally any question as to the outline of the facts and arguments which they contain, bearing upon the period he has fixed upon, before the termination of the course.

The Reader on Constitutional Law and Legal History will deliver his public Lectures at Lincoln's-inn-hall, on Wednesday in each week during the Educational Term, commencing at two o'clock. The Reader will receive his Private Classes on Tuesday and Saturday in each week, from two o'clock until four p.m. in the Benchers' Reading Room, at Lincoln's-inn.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Council regret, that in consequence of severe illness, the Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law is at present unable to enter upon his duties; but Mr. Phillimore will receive the Private Classes on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law at the Benchers' Reading Room, in Lincoln's-inn, at twelve o'clock, on Monday and Thursday in each week of the Educational Term.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to give, during the Educational Term, commencing on the 1st of November, 1852, Six Public Lectures on the History of the Court of Chancery; its Mode of Procedure, and the General Principles on which Justice is there administered.

LECTURE I.—The ancient office of Cancellarius; of Chancellor of England after the Norman Conquest. The Aula Regis. The Exchequer. Chancellor of the Exchequer. General View of the System on which Justice was administered. Share of the Chancellors and Influence of the Civil Law in the formation of this System. Its Advantages. The Power of the Council. How delegated to the Chancellor. The Subjects on which his Authority was usually exercised. Its great Extent and Importance. Alterations in the Constitution and Practice of the Court.

LECTURE II.—The Custody of the Great Seal. Its connection with the office of Chancellor. The Privy Seal and Court of Requests. The Court of Star Chamber. Common Law Jurisdiction of the Chancellor: his Jurisdiction over Charities and in Lunacy. Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords.

LECTURE III.—Procedure of the Court of Chancery, sitting as a Court of Equity. How related to that under the Civil Law. Bill of Complaint. Modes of compelling Appearance. Demurrer. Plea. Answer. Replication. Evidence. Decree.

LECTURE IV.—On the Nature of the Relief granted by the Court of Chancery. Specific Performance. Discovery. Injunction. Mode of enforcing Decrees of the Court.

LECTURE V.—Principles on which the Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery was established. Reference to the Rules of Conscience. Influence of the Study of Casuistry. The Jurisdiction of the Court gradually assumes a complete and settled form.

LECTURE VI.—General Division of the Cases in which Relief is afforded by Courts of Equity. Where Relief cannot be obtained at Law. Where less perfect Relief can be obtained at Law than in Equity. Where the Remedy at Law is inconsistent with Equity. Where a Court of Law requires the Assistance of a Court of Equity.

In addition to the Public Lectures, it is proposed that two classes shall be formed for the study of the Principles and Practice adopted by Courts of Equity; each class to meet for one hour three times a week. The Junior Class will read the 4th chapter of the 3rd Book of "Blackstone's Commentaries," and Gilbert's "Forum Romanum." The Senior Class will read "Mitford's Treatise on Pleading in Chancery," and the "Selection of Leading Cases in Chancery," by White and Tudor. Each Student will be expected, in the interval between the meetings of the class, to peruse portions of these and other works bearing on the same subject, pointed out by the Reader, and to be prepared, at the ensuing meeting of the class, to answer and discuss questions arising out of the subjects of their reading.

The Reader on Equity will deliver his Public Lectures at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on Thursday in each week during the Educational Term, commencing at Two o'clock, p.m. The Reader will receive his private classes on Monday and Friday evenings, at Seven o'clock; and on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at Half-past Nine o'clock, a.m. in the Benchers' Reading Room, at Lincoln's Inn Hall.

LAW OF REAL PROPERTY, &c.

Prospectus of a Course of Six Public Lectures, to be delivered by the Reader, on the Law of Real Property, &c. in the Hall of Gray's Inn, during the First Educational Term, commencing the 1st of November, 1852.

I. Introduction. An Historical Review of the Modifications which the Municipal Law of this Country has at different times received, with reference to the Power of Alienating Real and Personal Property.

II. An Inquiry into the Restrictions which have been imposed upon the Power of Alienation.

1. From motives of Public Policy:—
   - a. By the Statutes of Mortmain, viz.:—9 Hen. iii. c. 36; 7 Edw. i. st. 2; 13 Edw. i. c. 32, 33; 18 Edw. i. c. 1; 15 Ric. ii. c. 5; 7 & 8 Will. iii. c. 37.
   - b. By the Statute of 9 Geo. ii. c. 36. Under this head the whole Law of Charitable Uses will be entered into. [23 Hen. viii. c. 10; 1 Edw. vi. c. 14; 43 Eliz. c. 4.]
   - c. By the Rule against Perpetuities.
   - d. By the Thellusson Act; 39 & 40 Geo. iii. c. 98.
2. From a desire to protect the rights and interests of third parties, as Creditors and Purchasers. [13 Eliz. c. 5; 27 Eliz. c. 4.]

An Outline of a Course of Lectures, to be delivered by the Reader, on the Law of Real Property, &c. to the Private Classes.

The object of the Private Classes being, first, to afford to the students a course of elementary instruction on the principles that govern the law of property; and, secondly, to familiarize the minds of those who are more advanced with the ready application of those principles to practical purposes, by analysing the structure of deeds and wills, in connection with the leading decisions of the Courts; the following outline is drawn up for the purpose of exhibiting, in a concise form, the order in which the subject of property will be treated, and also of mentioning those works which will be either read or referred to in Lecture:—

I. The leading Distinctions between Real and Personal Property, arising out of the Influence of Feudal Institutions, will be pointed out. As preparatory to the discussion of this subject, the perusal of the following parts of works is recommended:—Hallam, Mid. Ages, ch. 2, p. 142; 1 Steph. Com. 160; Butler's Note to Co. Litt. 191, a; secs. i. ii.

II. The Learning appertaining to Estates of a Freehold Tenure will be considered, with reference to their Quantity and Quality—their Rights and Incidents. Butler's Note to Co. Lit. 191, a; sec. v.; 1 Steph. Com. 216; Preston on Estates; Littleton on Tenures; Williams on Real Property.

III. The Division of Estates into Legal and Equitable, and the Effect of Uses and Trusts upon the Conveyance and Settlement of Land previous and subsequent to the Statute of Uses. The following authorities will be read in Lecture:—Introduction to Sugden on Powers; 1 Hayes's Convey.; Butler's Notes to Co. Lit. 271, b; 290, b; Fearne on Contingent Remainders. Attention is also directed to the Second and Five following Chapters of the First volume of Spence's Equitable Jurisdiction; 1 Steph. Com. 328; Sanders on Uses; Bacon's Reading on Uses; and Lewin on Trusts.

IV. The Nature of Powers; (1) as Common Law Authorities; (2) as deriving their Effect from the Statute of Uses; and (3) as Equitable Powers. Butler's Note to Co. Lit. 271, b. iii. (4); Sugden on Powers.

The discussion of the doctrines of Real Property Law, in accordance with the above arrangement, will be accompanied by examples of their practical application to the Art of Conveyancing, in the case of Sale, Mortgage, and Settlement; an analysis of the various deeds by which land is transferred will be entered into; the language and operation of each of their component parts will be explained; and the late alterations introduced by the Legislature, with reference to this part of the subject, will be examined.—Sugden, Vend. and Pur.; Jarman's Notes to Byth. Conv.; Davidson's Notes to Martin's Conv.

V.—The different modes of Alienation by Act inter vivos having been lectured on, the Power of Testamentary Disposition will form the next subject of inquiry.

Under this division, the difference that exists between a gift by will of Real, and a gift by the same instrument of Personal Property, will be explained; the leading principles by which the Courts are guided in construing Wills, will be investigated; and the effect of the late Legislative measures (1 Vict. c. 26, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24), in improving and settling the practice and construction of Wills, will be considered.—Roper on Legacies; Jarman on Wills; Williams on Executors; Fearne on Executory Devises.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property will deliver his Public Lectures at Gray's-inn Hall, on Friday in each week, during the Educational Term, commencing at two o'clock, P.M. The Reader will receive his Private Classes in the North Library at Gray's-inn Hall, on Monday in each week, from two to four, P.M.; on Wednesday and Friday mornings, at half-past nine; and on Thursday evenings at seven o'clock, P.M.

The Council having unexpectedly received, on the 29th instant, information that Mr. Willes had, on that day, resigned the office of Reader on Common Law, are unable, for the present, to announce any lectures in that department.

The Readers on Constitutional Law and Legal History, on Equity, and on the Law of Real Property, will receive and communicate with the gentlemen desirous of attending their respective classes, at the conclusion of the First Public Lectures.

SHERIFFS' SMALL DEBTS COURT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has been recently directed to some observations in your paper of the 16th ult. commenting on my advertisement relative to business before this Court, which you object to on two grounds,—unprofessional character and illegality. The first is mere matter of opinion, you are therefore at liberty to so designate it if you please; but the second alleged reason being without foundation in fact, as you will see by referring to the Act under which the City County Court now holds jurisdiction, the 16 & 17 Vict, c. 77 (local), I must request you to insert this letter in your next publication, as I cannot permit remarks so likely to be injurious to pass unnoticed; and I regret, that before making them in so discourteous a manner, a little inquiry into their truth at least was not made.

I may as well add, which indeed is manifest from the advertisement, that the allusion to "costs allowed by the Court" was not the 10s. and 15s. scale, which you appear to have supposed.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

G. MANLEY WETHERFIELD.

ARTICLED CLERKS.

I BEG to refer your correspondent, "J. W." to the cases of Ex parte Craig, 6 Dowl. 256; Ex parte Jebbs, 9 Dowl. 151; and Ex parte Bousfield, ib. 616; by the former of which cases it was decided that a clerk must be of age at the time of the examination; and in the two latter the Court allowed the clerk to be examined, though under age, on a special statement of circumstances. It would seem, therefore, that without the order of the Court obtained, A. if under age, cannot be examined. C. H.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Summary.

IN Maritime Law there is a case reported from the Admiralty Court. Part of the crew of a British vessel seized her, murdered the master and boatswain, and carried her into port, where the British consul took possession of her, and of his own authority gave a bottomry bond on her. It was held to be a valid bond. (The Cynthia, 20 Law T. Rep. 54.)

In Bankruptcy, where a joint commission had issued against partners, one of whom had been previously an uncertificated bankrupt, the Commissioner refused to adjudicate on the application of a creditor under the first bankruptcy, but left the creditor to petition the Lord Chancellor to supersede one of the bankruptcies. (Re Barrington, 20 Law T. Rep. 55.)

It will be seen that the rules under the Patent Law Amendment Act have been issued at last. They will be found below.

RULES UNDER THE PATENT LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1852.

FIRST SET OF RULES AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE ACT OF 15 & 16 VICT. C. 83, FOR THE PASSING OF LETTERS PATENT FOR INVENTIONS.

By the Right Honourable Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain; the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls; Sir Frederic Thesiger, her Majesty's Attorney-General; and Sir Fitzroy Kelly, her Majesty's Solicitor-General; being four of the Commissioners of Patents for Inventions under the said Act.

Whereas a commodious office is forthwith intended to be provided by the Crown as the Great Seal Patent-office; and the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have, under the powers of the said Act, appointed such office as the office also for the purposes of the said Act:

All petitions for the grant of letters patent, and all declarations and provisional specifications, shall be left at the said commissioners' office, and shall be respectively written upon sheets of paper of twelve inches in length by eight inches and a half in breadth, leaving a margin of one inch and a half on each side of each page, in order that they may be bound in the books to be kept in the said office.

The drawings accompanying provisional specifications shall be made upon a sheet or sheets of parchment, paper, or cloth, each of the size of twelve inches in length, by eight inches and a half in breadth, or of the size of twelve inches in breadth, by seventeen inches in length, leaving a margin of one inch on every side of each sheet.

Every provisional protection of an invention allowed by the law officer shall be forthwith advertised in the London Gazette, and the advertisement shall set forth the name and address of the petitioner, the title of his invention, and the date of the application.

Every invention protected by reason of the deposit of a complete specification shall be forthwith advertised in the London Gazette, and the advertisement shall set forth the name and address of the petitioner, the title of the invention, the date of the application, and that a complete specification has been deposited.

Where a petitioner applying for letters patent after provisional protection, or after deposit of a complete specification, shall give notice in writing at the office of the commissioners of his intention to proceed with his application for letters-patent, the same shall forthwith be advertised in the London Gazette, and the advertisement shall set forth the name and address of the petitioner and the title of his invention; and that any persons having an interest in opposing such application are to be at liberty to leave particulars in writing of their objections to the said application at the office of the commissioners within twenty-one days after the date of the Gazette in which such notice is issued.

The Lord Chancellor having appointed the Great Seal Patent-office to be the office of the Court of Chancery, for the filing of specifications, the said Great Seal Patent office and the office of the commissioners shall be combined; and the clerk of the patents for the time being shall be the clerk of the commissioners for the purposes of the Act.

The office shall be open to the public every day, Christmas-day and Good Friday excepted, from ten to four o'clock.

The charge for office or other copies of documents in the office of the commissioners shall be at the rate of twopence for every ninety words.

By the petitioner for the hearing, previous to the fiat of the law officer allowing a disclaimer or memorandum of alteration in letters patent and specification.

To the law officer	£2	12	6
To his clerk	0	12	6

By the person opposing the allowance of such disclaimer or memorandum of alteration, on the hearing of the case of opposition.

To the law officer	£2	12	6
To his clerk	0	12	6

By the petitioner for the fiat of the law officer allowing a disclaimer or memorandum of alteration in letters patent and specification.

To the law officer	£3	3	0
To his clerk	0	12	6

(Signed) ST. LEONARDS, C.
Dated Oct. 1, 1852. JOHN ROMILLY, M. R.

Ordered by the Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

All specifications in pursuance of the conditions of letters patent, and all complete specifications accompanying petitions and declarations before grant of letters patent, shall be filed in the Great Seal Patent-office.

All specifications in pursuance of the conditions of letters patent, and all complete specifications accompanying petitions for the grant of letters patent, shall be respectively written bookwise upon a sheet or sheets of parchment, each of the size of twenty-one inches and a half in length by fourteen inches and three-fourths of an inch in breadth; the same may be written upon both sides of the sheet, but a margin must be left of one inch and a half on every side of each sheet.

The drawings accompanying such specifications shall be made upon a sheet or sheets of parchment, each of the size of twenty-one inches and a half in length by fourteen inches and three-fourths of an inch in breadth, or upon a sheet or sheets of parchment each of the size of twenty-one inches and a half in breadth by twenty-nine inches and a half in length, leaving a margin of one inch and a half on every side of each sheet.

The charge for office or other copies of documents in the Great Seal Patent-office shall be at the rate of twopence for every ninety words.

(Signed) ST. LEONARDS, C.
Dated Oct. 1, 1852.

Note.—It is recommended to applicants and patentees to make their elevation drawings according to the scale of one inch to a foot.

SECOND SET OF RULES AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE ACT 15 & 16 VICT. C. 83, FOR THE PASSING OF LETTERS PATENT FOR INVENTIONS.

By the Right Honourable Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain; the Right Honourable Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls; Sir Frederic Thesiger, her Majesty's Attorney-General; and Sir Fitzroy Kelly, her Majesty's Solicitor-General, being four of the Commissioners of Patents for Inventions under the said Act.

The office of the director of Chancery in Scotland, being the office appointed by the Act for the recording of transcripts of letters patent, shall be the office of the commissioners in Edinburgh for the filing of copies of specifications, disclaimers, memoranda of alterations, provisional specifications, and certified duplicates of the register of proprietors.

All such transcripts, copies, and certified duplicates shall be bound in books, and properly indexed; and shall be open to the inspection of the public at the said office, every day from ten to three o'clock.

The charge for office copies of such transcripts, copies, and certified duplicates, recorded and filed in the said office, shall be at the rate of twopence for every ninety words.

The Enrolment-office of the Court of Chancery in Dublin, being the office appointed by the Act for the enrolment of transcripts of letters patent, shall be the office of the Commissioners in Dublin for the filing of copies of specification, disclaimers, memoranda of alterations, provisional specifications, and certified duplicates of the register of proprietors.

All such transcripts, copies, and certified duplicates shall be bound in books, and properly indexed, and shall be open to inspection of the public at the said Enrolment-office every day, Christmas-day and Good Friday excepted, from ten to three o'clock.

The charge for office copies of such transcripts, copies, and certified duplicates, enrolled and filed as aforesaid, shall be at the rate of twopence for every ninety words.

No warrant is to be granted for the sealing of any letters patent which contains two or more distinct substantive inventions.

A provision is to be inserted in all letters patent in respect whereof a provisional and not a complete specification shall be left on the application for the same, requiring the specification to be filed within six months from the date of the application.

No amendment or alteration, at the instance of the applicant, will be allowed in a provisional specification after the same has been recorded, except for the correction of clerical errors or of omissions made per incuriam.

The provisional specification must state distinctly and intelligibly the whole nature of the invention, so that the law officer may be apprised of the improvement, and of the means by which it is to be carried into effect.

The fee to be paid for every duplicate of such letters patent as may have been destroyed or lost shall be one pound.

Where the applicant desires his letters patent to extend to any of the colonies, he must specify in his petition for the same the particular colony or colonies to which he desires it to extend; and when the applicant shall give notice of his intention to proceed with his application for letters patent, the law officer to whom such application is referred shall hear him or his agent upon such extension; and the said law officer shall make his report to the Lord Chancellor thereon. And no warrant for letters patent containing such extension shall be made unless the Lord Chancellor shall allow the same.

FRED. THESIGER, A.G.
FITZROY KELLY, S.G.

Ordered by the Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

Every application to the Lord Chancellor against or in relation to the sealing of letters patent shall be by notice, and such notice shall be left at the Commissioners' office, and shall contain particulars in writing of the objections to the sealing of such letters patent. (Signed)

ST. LEONARDS, C.

Dated the 15th of October, 1852.

By the Right Hon. Edward Burtenshaw Lord St. Leonards, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain; the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls; Sir Frederic Thesiger, her Majesty's Attorney-General; and Sir Fitzroy Kelly, her Majesty's Solicitor-General; being four of the Commissioners of Patents for Inventions under the said Act.

Whereas by order of the commissioners, dated the 15th of October last, the applicant desiring his letters patent to extend to any of the colonies is directed to specify in his petition for the same the particular colony or colonies to which he desires it to extend:

And whereas many petitions left at the office of the commissioners, before and after the date of the said order, pray for the extension of the letters patent to all her Majesty's colonies and plantations abroad:

It is ordered, That in every such case the applicant or his agent shall leave at the offices of the commissioners a notice in writing, either specifying the particular colony or colonies to which he desires his letters patent to extend, or withdrawing altogether his application to extend his letters patent to the colonies; and no reference of such petition shall be made to the law officer for his warrant for the sealing of letters patent until such notice shall have been left at the said office.

COURT PAPERS.

EXECUTION IN CAUSES TRIED IN TERM.

COMMON PLEAS, MONDAY.

Mr. Justice CRESSWELL said that, as the Common Law Procedure Act had abolished the distringas juratores, but contained no provision with regard to issuing execution in causes tried in Term, it would be necessary, until the general rules were made known, to make a special order for judgment in each case, and that the period, following the old practice, would be four days.

Mr. JOYCE informed the Court that the same course had been taken in the Court of Exchequer.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.—The Court for hearing arguments in Error from the Q. B. will sit on Tuesday, the 9th inst. and on such other subsequent days as the Court may appoint, instead of on the 26th and 27th inst. the days originally fixed.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

THE TRANSFER OF LAND, &c.

THE first general meeting of this society for the session 1852-53, was held at the Society's Rooms, Regent-street—Lord BROUGHAM in the chair.

In pursuance of a resolution passed at a previous meeting—"A return of all reports and papers made and presented to the society since its establishment in 1844, and the results which have attended them," was brought up and read by Mr. Stewart.

It stated in substance—"That the return which was intended to shew what had been accomplished by the society was divisible into five heads. 1st, The reports relating to real property; 2ndly, to common law; 3rdly, to equity; 4thly, to criminal law; and lastly, to miscellaneous subjects."

Under the head of real property, it was stated that most of the reforms proposed by the society had either been effected or considered and recommended by royal commissioners. For instance, the vesting of trust property in trustees without conveyance had been effected by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 60; the shortening of deeds had been dealt with by the 8 & 9 Vict. cc. 119 and 124; the rendering the assignment of outstanding terms unnecessary had been legalised by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112. With regard to uses, trusts, and the law of mortgages, which had been the subjects of reports of this society, nothing had been done. With regard to a general registry of deeds, as proposed by the society, the question had been discussed by the registration commissioners, who had recommended a plan on which a bill had been founded, and which passed through the House of Lords in 1851, but had not passed through the House of Commons. The proposal of the society for the adoption of some such machinery as was in use in the transfer of the public funds to the transfer of real property had been considered by the registration commissioners, but not adopted by them; while another plan of the society for the insurance of titles had also been under the consideration of the same commissioners, but had not received their sanction. The proposition for a general map of England and Wales had been recommended by the commissioners, and the principle had been adopted in the Registration Act for Ireland. On the subject of tenant right, which was included in the reports of the society, nothing had yet been done. As regarded the enfranchisement of copyholds, the principle of compulsory enfranchisement had been recognised and carried into effect in a Bill passed last session. Under the head of common law, the recommendation of the society as to the reception of official documents in evidence had been embodied in a recent enactment, and the principle of bringing actions against public officers had also been adopted by legislation. In 1848, the society recommended the establishment of Small Debt Courts, which had been fully carried out in the organisation of the County Courts, while another principle which had been dealt with in their reports, namely, the admission of the evidence of parties in suits, had become the practice both in the County and Superior Courts. An alteration in the law of partnership, and especially as regarded a limited liability, had been considered by the society, a committee of the House of Commons had been appointed, and taken evidence on that question; but no legislation had been the result. On the 8th July, 1850, the society strongly advocated the necessity of the extension of the jurisdiction of the County Courts, and that improvement had since come into operation. Several suggestions of the society with regard to the practice of the Common Law Courts had been adopted in the Act of last session, entitled the Common Law Procedure Act. Three reports of the society had been prepared, relating to the fusion of the jurisdiction of the Common Law and Equity Courts, and this principle had been partially adopted in the recent changes which had been made in the Court of Chancery, while it had been entirely adopted in India and New Zealand. With regard to equity, in December 1851 this society had carried resolutions declaring the propriety of abolishing the Masters' offices, and enabling the judges of the Equity Courts to carry out their own judgments by the adoption of a system of sitting in chambers; and both those objects had now been effected.

In relation to the criminal law, there had been three reports of the society, one recommending the adoption of Captain Maconochie's plan for the management of criminals, which had been tried at Birmingham under that gentleman's superintendence, as governor of the goal in that town; and another suggestion of the society, as to the summary conviction of persons guilty of certain larcenies, had been put into operation, while several of their suggestions with regard to prison discipline had also been put in force.

The following resolutions were agreed to:—

"That the present state of the law relating to the transfer of land is highly unsatisfactory.

"That a cheaper, simpler, more expeditious, and more accurate system is exceedingly desirable.

"That to effect this object, the transfer of land should, as far as possible, be assimilated to the transfer of stock.

"That in particular, purchasers and mortgagees should be relieved from the necessity of inquiring into equitable interests in land.

"That the power to shorten the present practice as to titles to land should be conferred on a competent tribunal.

"That it is absolutely necessary to control, tax, and moderate more effectually than at present the expenses connected with the transfer of land."

The meeting then adjourned.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE LIVERPOOL LAW SOCIETY.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING 1ST NOVEMBER, 1852.

THE committee have again this year the satisfaction of referring to a large addition to the members of the society, eleven gentlemen having been admitted, while two only, namely, Mr. Mallaby and Mr. Myers, have retired.

The new members are Mr. Henry Fisher, Mr. Thomas Etty, Mr. William Tyndall, Mr. David Evans, Mr. Hugh Almond, Mr. James Blenkinsopp, Mr. John Neal, Mr. Timpron Martin, Mr. Edward Searle, Mr. R. A. Parker, and Mr. Lawrence Peel.

The committee think they may now safely refer with satisfaction to the new rule regulating the admission of members, as since the date of the commencement of its operation in September, 1851, the members of the Society have been increased by no less than twenty-three.

The past year has been one of almost unparalleled importance in matters relating to reforms and sweeping changes in the law and practice of the Courts. "The Masters in Chancery Abolition Act," "The Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity Act," "The Suitors in Chancery Relief Act," "The Enfranchisement of Copyholds Act," "The Wills Amendment Act, 1852," "The Act for extending the Trustee Act, 1850," "The Act to facilitate Proceedings in the County Court," "The Common Law Procedure Act," and "The Act for Payment of Officers at Nisi Prius by Salaries in Lieu of Fees," are all measures which will require the anxious and careful study of the profession, and it is hoped and trusted that their effect will be to abolish many of the justly complained of abuses in practice, and thus tend to the mutual advantage of the professional practitioner and the client.

All these varied Acts claimed and received the unremitting attention of the committee while passing through their various stages in both Houses of Parliament, and by the appointment of active subcommittees to watch and report upon each particular bill, and take such steps by petition, and otherwise, as was thought expedient, they have reason to believe that their exertions have not been thrown away; but have tended, in several instances, to amend objectionable provisions, and add to the usefulness of the Acts as passed.

The committee think it right to call the attention of the society to a bill introduced during the last session into the House of Lords by Lord Brougham, which had for its object the transfer of the jurisdiction of the Courts of Bankruptcy to the County Courts. This change it is considered would be highly injudicious, as in almost all instances, independently of the judges of the County Courts having already sufficient employment in their Courts as now constituted, the judges are not familiar with the practice in bankruptcy, and the machinery of the Courts is not adapted to the working and healthy management of important bankruptcy matters. The committee thus advert to this bill, as, though withdrawn in the last session, it is by no means an unlikely thing that it may be reintroduced in the next.

In consequence of the receipt of a circular letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, announcing the appointment by the Lord Chancellor of five County Court judges to frame a scale of costs and charges to be paid to attorneys in the County Courts, and requesting that this society would communicate to him any suggestions they might wish to make upon such scale, the committee, after mature deliberation and discussion, prepared such a scale as they thought should be allowed, both as between attorney and client, and as between party and party. A copy of this scale was forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury, and also to several law societies in the kingdom. Subsequently, however, the judges having intimated their willingness to receive a deputation from the various provincial law societies, and to confer with them on the subject, the committee appointed one of their body (Mr. Payne) to represent the Liverpool Law Society in such conference in London. Deputations also attended from the law societies of Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, York, Sheffield, and Bristol. The members of the different societies held two long preliminary meetings (aided by Mr. Shaen, of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association) previous to their waiting upon the judges, and unanimously agreed upon a scale of costs, in lieu of the various scales which had been transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury by each individual law society. On the 20th October, the appointed interview with the judges took place, and from the report of such interview made by Mr. Payne, the committee think the result highly satisfactory; the whole of the proposed scale of costs and charges having been read over by the judges, was fully discussed, and reasons were given for the amount of costs proposed, and the judges appeared much pleased with the meeting, and the information they elicited by inquiries from the deputations on various points connected with the practice of the County Courts.

The subject of the repeal of the certificate duty has not this year been lost sight of. A petition very numerously signed was presented to the House of Commons by Sir T. B. Birch, and a deputation from this society waited upon the new members for the borough to lay before them the claims of the Profession to be relieved from this unjust tax, and the committee believe that the arguments used on that occasion will not be without good effect.

The Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association having announced a special meeting of that association and of the Profession generally, to be held at Derby on the 13th October, "to take into consideration the present and future prospects of the Profession, with reference especially to recent and contemplated changes in the law, and the steps which ought to be taken in the ensuing session of Parliament," the committee considered that the vast importance of the subject made it imperative upon the society to be represented at such meeting, and accordingly Mr. Avison, one of their body, proceeded to Derby. The meeting was attended by the chairman and several members of the committee of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and by deputations from various Provincial Law Societies, and it was unanimously resolved, that "in order to maintain the true position of the Profession, both as respects the public and the members of the Bar, it was desirable that the practising attorneys and solicitors of England and Wales should be united in association."

The committee beg to impress upon their professional brethren the urgent necessity of uniting those elements of strength, which in union they would undoubtedly possess, in protecting their own rights from encroachments, as they are convinced by so doing that they are not only thereby protecting themselves, but their clients and the public, who undoubtedly are very materially interested in any Acts which will insure the honesty and respectability of men, in whom they have at some period or other to place implicit confidence. For several years past the profession of attorneys and solicitors, as a body, has become, either from apathy or want of unanimity, or both, one of the weakest bodies in the country. The time has now arrived when this state of things should no longer continue, and the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association having been formed, the committee beg to urge most strenuously and firmly, that it is the duty of every professional man who has the interest of his profession at heart, to join in supporting an Association whose sole object is "to assist all well considered plans for improving the law, especially as relating to the practice of the Courts, and to maintain an honourable position and character for the profession."

The accounts of the treasurer show a balance of 46*l.* 7*s* 4*d*. to the credit of the society.

The members of the committee who go out of office by rotation are Mr. Payne, Mr. Avison, Mr. Falcon, Mr. Fisher, and Mr Wright.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BARRISTER-ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—We have heard very much, and for a long while, of the Attorney-Advocate, but it has been entirely overlooked that all this noise and fuss has been generated by the ill-digested, rampant, and encroaching ideas of a section of Barristers, who would, without examination, without certificate, be Attorneys likewise. The "Junior Bar," they are called; and these juveniles will, if they do not take better care, rush madly on to the gulf of nothingness in less time than it takes to prepare for a motion of course. These are, in truth, the peace-breakers of the Profession, whose ineffable vanity attracts equal surprise and pity.

But do these legal fledgelings really suppose the Attorneys, as a body, are going to permit this trespass and poaching to go further? No; depend upon it, no. There is a limit even to child's play. Guy Faux would not do all the year round. In a word, Sir, what the Attorneys will require is that every court in the country be thrown open; a fair field and no favour will be insisted on, and the public will on all sides gladly sanction the demand. Where will the Junior Barrister be then?

I am a member of two law societies, one in London, one in the country; and I shall take the earliest opportunity of moving in each, and to influence out of them where I can, that the courts above be no longer Barrister-bound.

When this comes to pass—and it already "looms in the future"—then, and probably not till then, will the "Junior Bar" perceive the beginning of the end.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Dartford, Nov. 8, 1852. C. R. GIBSON.

ASSURANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—"Subscriber," who wrote in your last number, ought to publish the name of the assurance company resisting payment of the claim, as stated. It can hardly be supposed any company having the slightest regard for its reputation would have taken such an objection.

It is, I believe, the invariable custom on the part of assurance companies to hold the agent responsible for the premium if he delivers the policy without receiving such premium; therefore, if the agent gives credit, it is a personal arrangement between himself and the assured, with which the company has nothing whatever to do, and the agent of the "C." Company evidently thus treats the affair in question.

The law and equity of the case appear so plain and indisputable, and the ground of objection taken by the "C." Company so utterly dishonourable and untenable, that a search for cases on the point would probably be fruitless.

The natural inquiry is, "Has the "C." Company got funds enough to pay the claim?"

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

AN ATTORNEY AND INSURANCE AGENT.

NECROLOGY

OF LEGISLATORS, MAGISTRATES, AND LAWYERS.

MR. SERJEANT HALCOMBE.

WE have to record the death of this gentleman, which took place at New Radnor, on the 3rd inst. in the 63rd year of his age, after a painful illness of some years' duration. Serjeant Halcombe was formerly a member of the Western Circuit, and during the early part of his career, was considered one of the most rising juniors, the late Sir William Follett, with whom he retained a strict friendship through life, being one of his principal competitors. Indeed, this distinguished advocate, and also Mr. Justice Patteson, and Mr. Justice Coleridge, were all associated together with Mr. Serjeant Halcombe as pupils in the same chambers during the period of their studentship, and confident expectations were at that time entertained of the future eminence of each.

During the year 1833, Mr. Halcombe was returned M.P. for Dover, which place he had before contested several times unsuccessfully. To his ambition to enter Parliament too early, his failure at the Bar has been mainly ascribed. Mr. Serjeant Halcombe's name will be found frequently in the debates which occurred during the period that he sat in Parliament, and it will appear that he took a part in several of the leading discussions, and was a warm supporter of the Conservative party. As chairman of the committee he drew up a valuable report on the Fisheries Bills. On the dissolution of Parliament, and the accession of Sir Robert Peel's ministry in 1835, Mr. Halcombe unsuccessfully contested the borough of Warwick. In 1839 he received the honour of the coif, but since that period his name has not occupied any prominent position in the law reports. In private life, he was remarkable for kindliness of disposition, urbanity of manners, and his conversational powers rendered him a most agreeable companion, possessed as he was of a store of information, and a highly cultivated taste. He has left a widow and four sons.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS.

BIRTHS.

DUNDAS.—On the 6th inst. at Oran, Yorkshire, the lady of the Hon. J. C. Dundas, of a daughter.

GAEL.—On the 8th inst. at 5, Bedford-row, the wife of Samuel H. Gael, esq. barrister, of a son.

ROXBURGH.—On the 8th inst. at 21, Gloucester-road, Regent's-park, the wife of Francis Roxburgh, esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, barrister-at-law, of a daughter.

TROLLOPE.—On the 7th inst. at Casewick, Lincolnshire, Lady Trollope, of a son.

USHER.—On the 5th inst. at Southampton, the wife of John Usher, esq. solicitor, of a daughter.

WRIGHT.—On the 6th inst. at 18, Upper Gower-street, the wife of Thomas Cooke Wright, esq. of Lincoln's-inn, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

ERSKINE, James Augustus, esq. Assistant Commissary-General, second surviving son of the late Hon. Henry David Erskine, of Mar, to Elizabeth Bogue, daughter of George Brodie, esq. advocate, Historiographer Royal for Scotland, at the Whim-house, Peebleshire, on the 4th inst.

NEWMAN, Robert William, esq. of Lincoln's-inn, barrister-at-law, to Paulina Sophia, only daughter of the late Rev. Robert Watts, rector of St. Benet's, Gracechurch, at St. Peter's-upon-Cornhill, on the 6th inst.

DEATHS.

BARKER, John, esq. late high sheriff, deputy-lieutenant, and magistrate for the county of Stafford, at Clevelandhouse, Wolverhampton, on the 5th inst. aged 56.

CAULFEILD, General, M.P. for Abingdon, seventh son of the Venerable John Caulfeild, archdeacon of Kilmore, on the 4th inst. aged 67.

EMERY, George, esq. of Banwell, in the county of Somerset, a deputy-lieutenant for that county, and a captain in the Dorset Regiment of Militia, on the 8th inst. in London.

HALL, Harriet, widow of the late John Charles Hall, esq. of Bloomsbury-place and Lincoln's-inn-fields, and eldest daughter of Joseph Gardiner, esq. of Highgate, on the 8th inst. at Brighton.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The recent Stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the General Orders of 7th August; 1852, with a copious Index, and with some Practical Suggestions as to the manner of conducting suits, and the future course of Procedure. By F. S. WILLIAMS, Esq. of the Chancery Bar. London: Sweet.

MR. WILLIAMS modestly states in his preface, that these notes on the Chancery Reform Act were intended only for the junior members of the Profession; but the more experienced practitioner will be instructed by its perusal, for the editor is a practical man, and his notes are suggested by experience, and are not the mere speculations of a verbal critic. He excuses himself for any errors or shortcomings that may be discovered in them, by the fact that "the idea of inditing them only suggested itself after the dews and fogs of October had set in, and a very few days before they were in the press;" and he adds, that "there is nothing in them but what would readily occur to the mind of any practitioner of the least experience." In this Mr. Williams underrates his own labours. His notes would not have occurred to a common-place mind. Only such learning and business-like capacity as his would have suggested them, and they are not the less valuable because they were the production of a moment, the first impressions of a rapid reading of the statute, and the orders founded upon it.

LAW PAMPHLETS.

Lord DENMAN has published twenty-seven pages of "Reasons for Legalising Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister." (Hatchard.) They appear to us to be conclusive upon the question. His Lordship traces the history of this extraordinary law from its first anomalous condition, half repudiating, half recognising such a marriage, to the backward step taken by Lord Lyndhurst, in rendering positively illegal and void a union which was clearly a matter for individual judgment, and not at all within the proper province of public law. There was nothing malum in se in the marriage of a deceased wife's sister, and it is contrary to all acknowledged rules of jurisprudence, and a violation of the liberty of the individual, to make it a malum prohibitum. Lord Denman analyses the arguments against the repeal of the law that were put forward in the last debate in the House of Lords, and shews satisfactorily how contradictory and unsound they are. Especially does he direct his criticism to the argument derived from Scripture, and he proves that there is no authority in the Bible against such a marriage, while many texts would appear not merely to authorise but to encourage it. Lord Denman then asks, "If there is no such prohibition in Scripture, how can we defend an Act of Parliament that creates it?"

That, indeed, is the practical question. Why should the law attempt to regulate that which is properly a matter for individual judgment? If it prohibits one class of marriages, from apprehension of some possible (not proved) mischiefs, why should it not interfere to prevent others that do daily produce undeniable evils? For instance, why not prohibit the marriage of a man with his servant, or his governess, for the same reasons as it now prohibits the marriage of a wife's sister? No facts have ever been produced to prove that evils have resulted from this so frequent union; but many instances might be shewn of evils from a union with other classes of females who form part of the domestic establishment; why not extend the law to these also? There are, we believe, upwards of four or five thousand marriages with a deceased wife's sister now existing in this country among all classes. If it be so baneful, why is not some evidence produced? Among the Jews, immediately directed by the Divinity, it was not only practised, but held in honour. If wrong, would not the Deity have prohibited it to them, as his chosen people? It is permitted among the continental nations, and they have seen no cause to complain of it. Nay, more, it existed for years among ourselves, unrebuked by opinion, and no evil was ever discovered to have resulted from it.

But evils, great and manifest, do result from the prohibition. In spite of it, this union is practised, the voice of nature being, as it always is, and will be, stronger than law. Among the poor it produces unions unblessed by the sanction of religion: the rich evade it by going to some other country, where no such violation of the liberty of the individual has been introduced even by the caprices of despotism. It has bastardized, and is bastardizing, thousands of innocent children; it is teaching a disregard of the marriage tie, and so making the immorality it affects to prevent. If any have yet a doubt as to the propriety of repealing this modern law, let them read the unanswerable arguments of Lord Denman in the little pamphlet before us.

Mr. W. Campbell Sleigh, Barrister-at-Law, has published a pamphlet entitled The Grand Jury System subversive of the Moral Interests of Society. This is giving to it a worse name, perhaps, than it deserves; but certainly it is a very useless institution, and in a state, as in the affairs of an individual, whatever is useless is injurious, and should be removed. We have continually directed the attention of our readers to this subject. In Mr. Sleigh's pamphlet they will find all the arguments collected, and put forth with great power.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

A New Movement at the Bar.—A body of gentlemen at the Bar have determined to commence, on Monday next, a regular attendance at the Westminster County Court, and for the convenience of robing, holding consultations, and having a library on the spot, have secured a set of chambers in St. Martin's-court, in the immediate proximity of the court-house. They intend to hold themselves at liberty upon proper occasions to exercise their common-law right of direct communication with the client. It is their intention in cases under 20*l.* where no great difficulty is likely to arise, or much time to be consumed, to act in common with the special pleaders at the Bar, and to mark half-a-guinea on their briefs, if they get any.—Sun.

AMERICAN CLOCK WAREHOUSE, 545 and 546, NEW OXFORD-STREET, where will be found the largest assortment of these superior Time pieces. American Clocks, ever imported into this country, made by the oldest and most celebrated Manufacturers in the United States. All our clocks are warranted to keep correct time. The prices are—for Thirty-hour Clocks, 14s., 18s., and 25s.; for Eight-day Clocks, 30s. and 35s.

Also, the CHILD'S VELOCIPEDE, a new American invention for the amusement and exercise of children. It combines the Pony and Carriage, and by the graceful and easy exercise promotes muscular development of the arms and chest. It is recommended by the medical faculty, and approved by all who have seen it. Together with every variety of American Goods.

Sold wholesale and retail by the Manufacturers and Importers, ROGERS and Co. 545 and 546, New Oxford-street.

PATENT REVERSIBLE OVERCOATS, &c. which obtained the Great Exhibition Prize Medal.—W. BERIDGE, 93, NEW BOND-STREET, and 69, CORNHILL (only).—NOVELTY, UTILITY, ECONOMY, all unite in commending this invention to general adoption. The Patent Cloth, having two perfect and totally dissimilar faces, can be worn either side outwards, thus each garment being equivalent to two at the cost of one. For Overcoats of every kind, the new Angle-cos, and all other CAPES, PALLETOTS, and MORNING COATS, this discovery is especially appropriate, also for LADIES' CLOAKS, MANTLES, &c. A variety of the materials and garments kept for selection; also one of the largest stocks in London of superior OVERCOATS of every description, CAPES, SHOOTING-JACKETS, BOYS' OVERCOATS, &c. all guaranteed to resist any amount of rain.

"TRIED IN THE BALANCE AND FOUND WANTING."

THE Analytical Sanitary Commissioners having analysed the Cocoa of every dealer in London of any importance, whether manufactured in London or not, have declared that only four samples were genuine, ours being the best, being free from husk and all refuse. They likewise express regret that in the few samples they found to be genuine, the husk or shell of the nut, which they state to be, as food comparatively worthless, should so generally be worked up with the nut.—Vide The Lancet of May 31, 1851.

The husk, &c. form about one-sixth of the whole nut, so that, by excluding them, as we do, we necessarily enhance the cost of the article. We request the favour of cocoa-drinkers to make trial of our PURE GRANULATED COCOA, in packets at 1s. per pound. Their confidence will not be misplaced. It is now drunk at the tables of the first families in all parts of the kingdom.

COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

Law Times Office, Friday night.

We have received reports of two decisions of the Court of Ex. to-day, but too late for insertion this week after the holiday of Thursday. In Goodliffe v. Neaves, where the plaintiff had entered an appearance sec stat. before the Procedure Act came into operation, and afterwards filed a declaration endorsed with a notice to plead within eight days, and in default signed judgment, the Court set aside the judgment and all subsequent proceedings for irregularity. It was held to be a good appearance under the old law, and that the 28th section of the new Act applied only to future cases where there is no appearance, and that the 62nd section applies to cases where the notice mentioned in the 28th section has been given. Parke, B. said, "I think you will find that this Act does not provide for appearance according to the old law, and therefore it seems to me you should have proceeded without reference to this Act."

Taylor v. Rogers was a motion for leave to proceed under sec. 17, as if service of writ had been effected. The Court held it to be sufficient to shew by the affidavit that the writ had come to the knowledge of the defendant.

Both of these reports will appear next week.

THE LAW REFORMS TO BE PROPOSED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

The Lord Chancellor stated in the House of Lords, on Tuesday, the Law Reforms which the Government propose to introduce during the present session, and he took the occasion to describe, with his usual clearness, the effect of the recent improvements in the Procedure in Equity, the details of which had been almost wholly left by the Legislature to be regulated by the Rules and Orders. To the preparation of these he had devoted the greater portion of the Vacation, and the results are already seen in a Code of Chancery Practice which needs but a little further improvement to make the Courts of Equity the speediest and cheapest tribunals in the country, instead of being the slowest and most costly, as formerly they were.

We should like to have presented this speech entire to our readers, but its great length forbids; we can, therefore, do no more than state the substance of the propositions for Law Reform which are to be submitted to Parliament, and to make them more intelligible we will describe them in separate paragraphs.

REFORM OF THE EQUITY COURTS.

The Accountant-General's office is to be revised, so that it may be open in the vacation, (thus removing a serious inconvenience often and loudly complained of), and regulating the buying and selling of stock for the Suitors' Fund, so that considerable profits, which now are not made at all, or go into other pockets, or into the general fund, shall be preserved to the individual suitors, to an amount estimated at 12,000*l.* a year:—

I believe the effect will be that the accounts will be simplified, vast expense saved, and the suitors will be benefited. I must mention to your Lordships that one difficulty thrown in the way of this arrangement was, that you would not ascertain what is the price to be paid or accepted by the different persons when there is no longer a real sale or purchase, but only one existing on paper. Fortunately, my Lords, we are enabled to meet the difficulty in a most satisfactory manner. The Bank of England takes the fluctuations every day of the price of each fund up to one o'clock in the day, and then it strikes the average. I propose, therefore, to take that average at one o'clock every day as the price which every man who sells is to receive, and the price every man who buys is to offer. That will make it very fair as respects all parties, and it will have this further benefit:—Very often sums are ordered to be transferred at the price of a given day. The broker not only charges a commission on the sale, but also a per centage. The same one o'clock prices will be adapted to those transactions, and so the suitor will be saved a very considerable sum.

Instead of the Suitors' Fund receiving the benefit of the interest on suitors' money,—

What I propose to do is this,—that for the future any unemployed cash shall be laid out by the Court when it is not required to be invested, and the Court shall have the benefit of that investment for two years, treating the Court as a banker for that purpose; and if at the end of two years there shall be any requisition to lay out the money, the party entitled shall have the benefit and risk of past investments as from that day. I believe that that will meet the justice of the case without any inconvenience.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY IN CHANCERY.

It is proposed to make a considerable alteration in this office, abolishing both the title and the fees.

I have taken some trouble to look into this subject. A great many of the parties who are so called assume this title for the purpose of giving to themselves the appearance of being trusted by the Court of Chancery. It costs 8*l.* or 9*l.* and the appointment is gazetted. I propose to take away from them their high-sounding title, and to give them the plainer name of country agents to administer oaths in Chancery, and that they shall not be gazetted. I propose to sweep away all fees. The fees now paid on their appointment are exorbitant, and I propose that they should pay one fee of 1*l.* once for all. That would be a great benefit to the solicitors.

COUNTY COURTS.

His Lordship announced that it was not the intention of the Government to propose any further changes in the County Courts at present. "I think," he said, "so many changes have already been made in them by the Legislature, that we ought now for a time to leave them alone."

LAW OF LUNACY.

Great improvements are promised in this. Defects in the working of the Commission are to be amended. The repeated references from the Chancellor to the Master, and back again, are to be avoided. A jury is not to be required in all cases, but only where some doubt as to the fact of lunacy really exists. The public are to be protected from the danger to be apprehended from persons clearly insane being left at large till proper steps can be taken to confine them.

A large expense is now incurred by inquiry when the party first became of unsound mind. This originated in a desire to protect the rights of the Crown; but the Crown now has no beneficial interest in the estates of lunatics. The result of the inquiry is nine times out of ten of no value at all, and in no case is it of any value beyond its being prima facie evidence. It very often happens that after all these inquiries have been made, and every protection has been thrown around the lunatic, you have not left him enough of his property to provide for his bare maintenance. I propose, under the power given by an Act of last session, to substitute a per-centage on the incomes of lunatics for the fees now paid; and, my Lords, I think I may say that the application of that principle may be safely intrusted to my hands, because I have always been of opinion that it is most unjust to make a rich man who is afflicted with lunacy liable to pay the expenses of a poor man who is similarly afflicted. I also propose to avoid unnecessary attendances by the next of kin. The next of kin have a sort of inchoate right to look after the property of a lunatic, because if he die without leaving a will they may be entitled to inherit. I do not mean, therefore, that the attendance of the next of kin should be altogether prevented, but in proper cases a certain number should be entitled to appear.

Other matters in lunacy which must now be brought before the Chancellor by petition, are to be disposed of in a more summary manner in chambers, with no other cost than that of the order itself.

LAW OF BANKRUPTCY.

On this subject his Lordship observed—

The Act of 1849 established an entire code of bankruptcy. It required orders for the purpose of putting that Act into full operation, which orders have only recently been issued. Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining the concurrence of eight Commissioners, which the Act required. I, however, set about the matter with some earnestness, and 163 orders have been issued, which complete the system that the Act of 1849 introduced.

The Commissioners in the country are to be gradually reduced, and to provide a sufficient remuneration for the official assignees no vacancies will be supplied until those who remain can procure a sufficient income from the office. The falling off of business in the Courts of Bankruptcy has been attributed to the great powers given to the Commissioners for granting or withholding certificates, and the inquiries requisite to be made by them for that purpose. The Lord Chancellor proposes to remedy this:—

It is stated in the next section that the certificate shall be in the form given in the schedule, and from that schedule all the difficulty has arisen. The Commissioner is to certify that the bankruptcy has arisen from unavoidable losses and misfortunes, and thereupon to award a first-class certificate; or that it has arisen not wholly from unavoidable losses and misfortunes, in which case he is to award a certificate of the second class; or that the bankruptcy has not arisen from unavoidable losses and misfortunes, in which case he is to award a certificate of the third class. The consequence of this is, that the Commissioners have the power to examine into all the acts of the bankrupt, including his personal conduct, and to scrutinise it in a way which has led to very great objection on the part of many persons to enter the court. I propose to repeal so much of the Act as gives the Commissioners power to inquire into any ingredient of the bankruptcy, except whether it has arisen from unavoidable misfortune. The second reason alleged for the falling off of business in the Court of Bankruptcy is that the per-centage is unduly high where the property exceeds 1,000*l.* This objection I propose to obviate.

His Lordship proposes to extend to the Commissioners in Bankruptcy an equity jurisdiction in aid of the Court of Chancery. He also intimated his intention to apply to the Bankruptcy Courts the same rule as cacy which the Legislature has applied to the County Courts, viz. to permit a Solicitor to appear to conduct the case of his own client, but not to do so as an Advocate instructed by another Solicitor.

Another point to which I would refer before passing from the subject of bankruptcy is this:—Solicitors are now permitted to appear as Advocates before the Commissioners of Bankruptcy. I propose to put the same restriction as is now put upon Attorneys under the County Courts Act. That is, my Lords, I object to what are called Attorney-Advocates. I do not object to a man's Solicitor arguing his case for him, but I do object to an Attorney being turned into a Barrister and acting as an Advocate.

DIGEST OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.

The Government will proceed with this measure, adopting the report of the Commissioners, but doing so in parcels, making each distinct class of crime the subject of a distinct statute, and then, when all is done, to repeal and re-enact them in one statute, and thus to afford an opportunity for the investigation and improvement of the whole in its passage through the Legislature:—

I have therefore the satisfaction of informing my noble and learned friend, that the first part of such a digest has been actually prepared in the form of a Bill relating to offences against the person. There is great inconvenience, my Lords, in a long Act of Parliament. The plan, therefore, which the Government propose to adopt is this:—They propose to deal with the different heads of the subject in separate Bills. This will give an opportunity of introducing those amendments which will, doubtless, be found necessary from time to time, before the whole have been gone through, and then at the end the course will be to repeal the Bills which have been so enacted, and to re-enact them, numbering them consecutively, so that they may be found with convenience in the same volume of the statutes.

Such are the improvements in the law proposed by the Government. To some of them we shall have objections to offer on the part of the Profession, when the details of the various measures are before us; but for the general extent, variety, and value of the reforms here indicated, the LORD CHANCELLOR is entitled to, and will receive, the cordial thanks both of the Profession and of the public.

THE MOVEMENT OF THE JUNIOR BAR.

WE stated last week that "the movement" of the Junior Bar has not the approval of any of the present Judges. The LORD CHANCELLOR has taken the earliest opportunity to put forth his opinion of it, and we are pleased to find that so experienced a Lawyer, who knows the Profession so well, and who utters the wisdom of experience, has confirmed by his authority every argument which we have here urged against the scheme for dispensing with the Attorneys. In his masterly speech on Tuesday in the House of Lords on the Law Reforms to be proposed by the Government, the LORD CHANCELLOR alluded to the recent movement of the Junior Bar, expressing his own disapproval of it and his regret that it should have received any countenance from so high an authority as that which has lately given to it the public sanction of his honoured name. His Lordship said—

I desire to see the Profession stand upon its proper basis. I wish the Barrister not to trench upon the province of the Attorney, nor the Attorney upon the province of the Advocate. Depend upon it, my Lords, if the system which has so long prevailed be broken in upon, great evils will ensue. Whether in any respect it will tend to elevate the character of the Bar remains to be determined; but, at any rate, there must be equality. It so happened last year that, in the difference of opinion which prevailed among my noble and learned friends, it virtually fell to my lot to remove the prohibition which formerly existed against Counsel acting as Attorneys; but, while I did so, I took care expressly to state that I gave that vote upon the distinct statement that Attorneys had threatened the Bar that if they took business in County Courts they should not have business elsewhere. I meant to leave it, therefore, to the honour of the Bar to act as they have always acted, not intending to open the door at all, unless there be an absolute necessity for it, to the practice of Barristers acting without the intervention of Solicitors—a practice, in my eyes, highly objectionable, and one which I should be the last person to countenance. Any such serious change in the long-established usage of the Bar ought at any rate to be made with the concurrence of a large majority, but I entirely object to any small number, or even to any considerable number, taking upon themselves to act contrary to the general rule of the Profession, which has been established for so long a period. My Lords, the Bar at the present moment is in a state of transition, and I would recommend everybody having any voice or any influence in this matter to consider where—if you lower the station or position of the Bar—you are to look for learned persons to fill your benches and carry on the administration of justice. You cannot expect that a man will dedicate a long life to the labours of the Bar without some hope and some proximate hope of reward.

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

LORD BROUGHAM has laid on the table of the House of Lords a Bill for removing the few remaining defects in the Law of Evidence, and which embodies all the amendments that from time to time we have ventured to suggest in these columns as calculated to meet the requirements of justice. The wife of a party is to be competent in all but criminal cases and adultery. Witnesses are to be deprived of the protection they are now so unwisely permitted to claim against answering questions that might subject them to prosecution, placing all evidence given in a Court of Justice in the position of a privileged communication, of which no advantage can be taken beyond the particular case in which it is given.

MERCANTILE LAW REFORM.

THE conference with the Law Amendment Society was all that could be desired. Deputations from the Merchants and Lawyers of the United Kingdom, came to the unanimous resolution that there ought to be one uniform system of Mercantile Law in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and that this law should be reduced to a code, instead of being left, as now, to be gathered by litigation out of the statutes and the reports, at enormous cost.

No countenance was given to the wild project for superseding the regular tribunals of the country by self-constituted judges, unlearned in the law, and wanting the judicial aptitude which only experience can give.

The great importance and interest of the Reports compel us to defer the report of the proceedings of the Conference until next week. But the subject will keep.

WE have seen many strange Conditions of Sale, but never one so strange as this, which appears on the Particulars of an estate at Pinner, for sale by FAREBROTHER and Co. and in which we find the name of the solicitor who furnishes particulars, and who is, we may presume, the vendor's solicitor, and author of the conditions, to be "E. C. WHITEHURST, Esq. 29, Coleman-street, City."

Lastly.—The title to the premises has been recently investigated on behalf of the vendors, and the purchasers, or any of them, shall be at liberty, on accepting the title, to receive from the vendors' solicitor an abstract of the vendors' title to the lot or lots sold to him or them, and a conveyance thereof engrossed and executed by the vendors, and duly stamped with the proper stamps, and registered according to the provisions of the Middlesex Registry Act, at the several sums following, namely:—

Each purchaser of one lot	£5	5	0
Ditto of two lots	8	8	0
Ditto of three lots	10	10	0

The purchaser or purchasers to signify their acceptance of the option hereby given to the vendors' solicitor, at the time of their signing their contracts or within four days afterwards.

Nor is this the worst of it. The memorandum of the contract printed at foot of the conditions contains the following unique provision. After reciting that he had become the purchaser, &c. it proceeds thus:—

And hereby accepts the title to the said lot, and requests the solicitor for the vendors to prepare for him a conveyance of the said lot, upon the terms and conditions mentioned in the last of the foregoing Conditions of Sale.

We are aware that it is said, and even supposed by many, that the seller of property and his attorney have a right to frame their own conditions of sale, and may impose upon the purchaser any terms they please which may be deemed advantageous to either of them. But certainly, if in strict law such a right exists, the wholesome practice of the Profession forbids. The Courts are properly averse to the same solicitor acting both for vendor and purchaser, for reasons well known to our readers; and if by any accident this condition and contract were to come under the notice of the Judges, a severe rebuke would doubtless mark their sense of its impropriety.

Nor is the attempt to secure the profits of the business of both parties the only objectionable feature of this document. It fixes the price at an arbitrary sum, and that is contrary to professional practice. It does more: it imposes upon the purchaser costs which, according to the universal custom, are those of the vendor,—he is to pay for the abstract of title. Lastly, and worst of all, the purchaser is made to sign a contract by which he expressly agrees to accept the title before examination, and whether it be good or bad!

We have directed attention to this case, because it is an extreme instance of a great and growing evil. Conditions of sale are becoming every year, not merely more stringent for the protection of the vendors, for to that there can be no objection, but positively unfair and unjust towards the purchaser, who does not always take the precaution to be advised upon them before he goes into the sale-room, and thus is entrapped into contracts which, if he had understood their meaning, he would not have undertaken. We believe that most of the provincial Law Societies have made it a rule of practice among themselves that the vendor's solicitor should not prepare the conveyance nor act for the purchaser and such a condition as we have here noticed would not have been permitted. But in London there exists no such wholesome check, and therefore it is the more important that the attention of the Profession should be directed to instances, when they do occur, of the introduction of improper conditions of sale; and we think most of our readers will agree with us that this is one peculiarly calling for a protest.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

SIGNING JUDGMENT.

BEFORE signing judgment on a verdict obtained in the Q. B. during this term, it appears to be necessary to enter a four-days' rule for judgment, nisi causa, according to the old practice. The reason of this is explained in an article in the present number, on Signing Judgment in the Queen's Bench.

AN ACTION AT LAW UNDER THE NEW PRACTICE.

FIRST ARTICLE.

IT is intended in the following articles to sketch, as briefly as is consistent with clearness of detail, the proceedings in personal actions in the Superior Courts, as altered by the "Common Law Procedure Act." The action of ejectment may perhaps form the subject of separate consideration afterwards. The endeavour will be to state the proceedings in as simple and untechnical language as possible, so that the almost beginner in the profession may understand them, though at the same time it is hoped they will not be useless to the practised professional reader. It is thought that, in the elementary sketch proposed, legal technicality may be avoided without materially increasing its length.

I. THE WRIT OF SUMMONS.

The first step in an action is the issuing a writ of summons. Whatever correspondence or demand or notice may have taken place previously, this writ is the commencement of the action. In some cases a formal notice of action is requisite, in order that the defendant may have an opportunity to make amends. This is the case in actions against justices of the peace for anything done in the execution of their duty (24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 1), and against persons engaged in various branches of the public service, as in the army, navy, customs, excise, &c. for anything done in the execution of their offices. This subject does not require further remark than that by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 27, in all cases where notice of action is required, such notice shall be given one calendar month at least before action is commenced, and such notice shall be sufficient. Two other special proceedings may be mentioned. Previous to an action against a constable for anything done in obedience to a warrant of a justice, 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 6, requires that a demand in writing of a perusal and copy of the warrant shall be made; and if this is granted within six days, the justice must be joined as a defendant with the constable; and if not so granted, the plaintiff may sue the constable alone. Before an action by an attorney for payment of a bill of costs, including any charge for business done in a Court of Law or Equity, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 13, s. 37, requires the plaintiff to deliver to the party chargeable therewith a signed bill of costs a month before commencement of action.

To return, then, to the commencement of the action, namely, the writ of summons: the purpose of the writ is to let the defendant know that the plaintiff makes in legal form a demand on him for satisfaction for a wrong done to the plaintiff, and to require him to adopt the forms appointed by law to contest the claim if he does not admit it. In ancient times it was requisite that the defendant should personally appear in court to answer the plaintiff's demand, and this is now to a great degree the theoretical basis of the proceedings. The means employed to compel this appearance used commonly to be called the process, by which name the writ of summons is still often called.

This writ is prepared by the plaintiff, or his attorney, and taken to an officer of the court out of which it is intended to be issued, and by him sealed, and the plaintiff or attorney leaves with this officer a memorandum, called a præcipe, in somewhat the following form:—

In the Queen's Bench.

Writ of summons for A. B. against C. D. of in the county of [where the writ is specially endorsed add specially endorsed with the particulars of claim].

[The plaintiff's or his attorney's name and address and the date should be underwritten.]

The body of the writ is as follows:—

Victoria, by the grace of God, &c.

To C. D. of in the county of

We command you that within eight days after the service of writ on you, inclusive of the day of such service, you do cause an appearance to be entered for you in our Court of Queen's Bench in an action at the suit of A. B.; and take notice that in default of your so doing the said A. B. may proceed therein to judgment and execution. Witness, John Lord Campbell, at Westminster, the day of in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and

N.B. This writ is to be served within six calendar months from the date thereof, or, if renewed, from the date of such renewal, including the day of such date, and not afterwards.

It may properly enough be said that, since the Common Law Procedure Act, there are four forms of writ of summons:—

1. For service within the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts without special endorsement.

2. For service on a British subject residing out of the jurisdiction.

3. Directed to a foreigner residing out of the jurisdiction.

4. For service within the jurisdiction with special endorsement.

The above form is the body and subscribed memorandum of the writs Nos. 1 and 4, the sole difference being that on the latter there is an additional endorsement, called the "special endorsement" (to be referred to presently). And the body and memorandum of No. 2 is also the same, except that in it the defendant is allowed a greater number of days to enter an appearance, and that after, "in default of your so doing, the said A. B. may," the words by leave of the Court or a Judge, are inserted before "proceed therein to judgment and execution." No. 3 differs from No. 2 in three particulars; instead of "after the service of this writ on you," the phrase after notice of this writ is served on you, is used in No. 3, and so the subscribed memorandum, instead of "This writ," begins Notice of this writ, and the words "or if renewed, from the date of such renewal," are omitted in No. 3.

The form of writ applicable to each case should of course be adopted, though a mistake in this respect may be amended upon application to a Judge. The form, No. 1, is applicable in all personal actions against defendants within the jurisdiction of the Court, in which the special endorsement mentioned above either cannot or is not intended to be made. The contents of the writ deserve some little consideration, and the remarks made will equally apply to the other three forms.

The writ is a command in the name of the Sovereign, whose title is contracted in the form given in the statute: the full title would be this:—"Victoria, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith;" and this full title should be used if there is any variation from the statutory form. (Hall v. Redington, 5 M. & W. 605.) It is clear that the writ ought to contain the names of all the plaintiffs (if more than one sue), and it is provided that it shall contain the names of all the defendants, and not contain the name or names of any defendant or defendants in more actions than one. (Sec. 4.)(a) Consequently, the plaintiff cannot proceed against more defendants than are named in the writ, nor proceed separately against defendant who have been included in one writ. In the writ the place and county of the residence or supposed residence of the party defendant, or wherein the defendant shall be, or shall be supposed to be, must be mentioned (sec. 2), and the defendant should be sued in that name which he then uses, and by which he is commonly known. (Williams v. Bryant, 5 M. & W. 447, 554.) The words "Witness, John Lord Campbell," are called the teste of the writ, and every writ of summons must bear date on the day on which the same is issued, and must be tested in the name of the Lord Chief Justice or Lord Chief Baron of the court from which the same is issued, or in case of a vacancy of such office, then in the name of a senior puisne judge of the said court. (Sec. 5.)

The form of writ No. 2 is applicable where the defendant is a British subject, but not residing within the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, nor in Scotland or Ireland, and in this case the plaintiff must take care to allow the defendant a reasonable number of days with reference to the distance he is at from England, within which he may appear in obedience to the writ. The jurisdiction of the Superior Courts extends over the whole of England and Wales, excepting the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham. Nearly all the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, however, apply to the Superior Courts of these counties (sec. 229), and therefore the proceedings in personal actions in those courts must be so far similar to those in the courts at Westminster. It will not be necessary to refer in more detail to the proceedings in the courts of the counties palatine.

The form No. 3 is to be used where the defendant is a person residing out of the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, and is not a British subject; and in this writ also, the defendant must be allowed a reasonable number of days, considering his distance from England, for appearance.

The form No. 4 is applicable to cases where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court, and the claim is for a debt or liquidated demand in money (with or without interest), arising upon a contract, express or implied. (Sec. 25.)

On the backs of writs Nos. 1 and 4 there must be this memorandum (varied according to the circumstances):—

This writ was issued by E. F. of , attorney for the said plaintiff: or, this writ was issued in person by A. B. who resides at [mention the city, town, or parish, and also the name of the hamlet, street, and number of the house of the plaintiff's residence, if any such]. Which must also be endorsed on No. 2, with this alteration, that between "this writ" and "was issued" the following is to be interposed:—is for service out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and. The endorsement on No. 3 ought probably to be that endorsed on No. 1, with this addition: and a notice thereof is to be served out of the jurisdiction of the Court. This memorandum is necessary, because every writ of summons must be endorsed with the name and place of abode of the attorney actually suing it out, and if he is not an attorney of the court in which it is sued out, then also with the name and place of abode of the attorney of such court in whose name such writ is taken out; and when the attorney actually suing it out does so as agent for an attorney in the country, then also with the name and place of abode of such attorney in the country; and in case no attorney is employed, then it must be endorsed with the above-mentioned particulars of the plaintiff's residence. (Sec. 6.)

In every case where the writ is for the payment of a debt, there must also be an endorsement in the following form, or to the like effect:—

The plaintiff claims £ for debt [£ for interest] and £ for costs, and if the amount thereof be paid to the plaintiff or to his attorney, within four days from the service hereof, further proceedings will be stayed. (Sec. 8.)

If the action is one in which the special endorsement (peculiar to No. 4) may be made, such special endorsement should follow the endorsement just mentioned. Several forms of special endorsement are given by the Common Law Procedure Act, Schedule A, No. 4, but it is unnecessary to insert them here, except perhaps, as an example, that in an action on a bill of exchange, which is—

The following are the particulars of plaintiff's claim:—85l. on a bill of exchange for 100l. dated the 2nd February, 1849, accepted or drawn, or endorsed by the defendant.

This particular of claim is followed by a notice to the defendant, that if he does not appear according to the exigency of the writ, the plaintiff will be at liberty to sign final judgment, and issue execution at the expiration of eight days from the last day for appearance.

The four original writs of summons at present in use have now been considered, and though some complication appears to arise in an elementary sketch like this, from the mention of four different writs, there are not four different procedures subsequently to trace: one procedure is in the main common to the four writs, but in addition to this there is a summary proceeding applicable to the case of the defendant's non-appearance to a writ specially endorsed.

(a) When the Common Law Procedure Act is cited, it will be by the number of the section merely, as in this case.

SIGNING JUDGMENT IN THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

We feel it necessary at once to call the attention of our readers to a result of the Common Law Procedure Act, which will probably perplex those attorneys especially who have obtained verdicts in causes tried in the Q. B. during this term. It seems pretty clear, that until the Judges make a rule of Court upon the subject, it will be necessary to revert to the old practice as to signing judgment, and this was in the Q. B. to enter a four-days' rule for judgment nisi causa, and to wait the four days of term accordingly, before signing final judgment.

This is one of those instances that sometimes happens of unforeseen results arising from the abolition of old and useless forms. The practice of the Q. B. was formerly settled to be, that such a rule was necessary (Tidd. Prac. 581, ninth edition); but by rule of all the Courts, H.T. 2 Wm. 4, s. 67, judgment may be signed after a verdict or nonsuit, "on the day after the appearance-day of the return of the distringas, or habeas corpora, without any rule for judgment." The application of this rule to signing judgment in the Q. B. depends on the return of the distringas, and then comes the recent provision (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 104), that the distringas shall no longer be used.

If any doubts should be suggested as to the rule of Court applying only where there is in law a return of the distringas, they seem to be answered by the case of The Governors of the Poor of Exeter v. Sivell, 7 Dowl. 624, in which COLERIDGE, J. held that a judgment signed in vacation, pursuant to a certificate for speedy execution under 1 Wm. 4, c. 7, s. 2, was irregular, because a rule had not been entered. To obviate this particular evil a rule of all the Courts was made (T. T. 4 Vict. 1 Q. B. 699), that where judgment is signed by virtue of a judge's certificate, "such judgment may be signed without any rule for judgment." If, therefore, the construction of the rule of Hilary Term, 2 Wm. 4, then acted on, is still adhered to, it follows that judgments signed in the Q. B. on verdicts obtained during this Term should be preceded by rules. In the other courts, however, this step is not necessary. "No such rule was necessary in the C. P. or Ex. but without such a rule the plaintiff was bound, in effect, to wait a similar time in both courts,"—per COLERIDGE, J. This being the old practice, it will revive, it would seem, in these courts, and merely waiting four days after verdict will be sufficient.

A difficulty will perhaps be found to arise in cases tried out of Term, in which, under sec. 120 of the Common Law Procedure Act, execution may be issued in fourteen days after verdict. There is no express provision as to signing judgment, and possibly the absence of this will give rise to some doubt as to the time for doing so.

The practice will probably be settled and made uniform in the three courts by a Rule of Court, but we would just remark, that if fourteen days is a proper time between verdict and execution when the cause is tried in Vacation, we do not see any very good reason for the time being reduced to four days when the cause is tried in Term.

The time within which the motion for new trial had to be made depended formerly on that for signing judgment, but the connection is not necessary, though, when the cause is tried during Term, it is certainly convenient. This will probably also be settled by a Rule of Court.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW REFORM.

TUESDAY, Nov. 16.—The LORD CHANCELLOR proceeded to state what steps had been taken since their lordships last met, in order to carry into execution the Bills passed last session, in regard to the Court of Chancery, and other matters connected with that court; and the measures which the Government proposed on the subject of law reform generally. The Bills already passed were three in number, as regarded the Court of Chancery. The first was for abolishing the office of Master in Chancery, and introducing a new system, called a chamber system, with regard to those matters which up to that time had been prosecuted by the Masters in their own chambers. The next Bill was for "the improvement of the jurisdiction of equity," and the third Bill was, "The Suitors in Equity Relief Act," which certainly had afforded great relief in the reduction of salaries, and the abolition of what appeared to be useless and unnecessary offices. They were now in full operation, and he believed that they would have the effect of making the delays of Chancery no longer proverbial. Without any undue haste—which of all things was to be deprecated—he believed that questions of property could now be decided more rapidly in the Court of Chancery than in any other court in the country. It had often happened, that sixteen or seventeen years after a decree of the Court of Chancery, persons came and appealed to their Lordships' House. This evil had been remedied, and five years was now the longest limit allowed. As for the Bill for the relief of suitors, its effect would be to save the suitor a vast expense, and leave him as well secured as at present. His lordship then proceeded to describe the nature of the two funds out of which the costs of the administration of justice were paid, and the means proposed still further to reduce those costs. Another small Bill was connected with the subject of the Masters Extraordinary in Chancery. He proposed to have a registry for transacting their business, and to sweep away the fees now charged by these gentlemen. With regard to lunatics, at present one kind of court had jurisdiction in one place, and another in another, and the utmost confusion prevailed. He proposed an extended investigation into the working of these courts, and the establishment of one simple rule for the courts of the whole country. Besides the other authorities over lunatics, the Act called Lord Shaftesbury's Act had appointed eleven Commissioners, whose duty it was to look after the management of the asylums from time to time. In the course of time the existing Acts had been found to require several amendments, which were now in progress; and he had reason to believe that every object which had hitherto impeded the well-working of the commission would be removed. Another small Bill which he should introduce was connected with the patent law, substituting stamps in lieu of fees. He had also great satisfaction in stating that it was the intention of Government to proceed with a digest of the criminal law.—Lord BROUGHAM thanked his noble and learned friend for the statement he had made, though he felt considerable doubt as to the merits of several Bills, and intended to reserve his opinion until he was better able to judge of them. He particularly wished to see more effectual measures taken by criminal legislation for the prevention of bribery and corruption at elections, without having recourse to the ballot or to a large increase of the constituent body.

Their lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SUPPRESSION OF BETTING-HOUSES.

FRIDAY, Nov. 12.—Mr. WALPOLE (in answer to Mr. Fitzroy) stated that he had it in contemplation to introduce a measure for the suppression of betting-houses, the particulars of which he would take an early opportunity of announcing.

CODIFICATION OF LAWS.

Mr. EWART gave notice that on a future day he would ask whether the Government intended to take any steps for the codification of laws, and also whether any preparation had been made for subjecting candidates for diplomatic and consular situations to an examination as to fitness?—Mr. WALPOLE stated that the Government was preparing a measure for the codification of laws.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Mr. COLLIER gave notice that on the 25th instant he would move for leave to bring in a Bill to transfer the duties of the Ecclesiastical Courts, as regarded the administration of wills, to the Superior Courts of Common Law and the County Courts.

ELECTION PETITIONS.

Petitions complaining of undue election returns were presented by Sir B. HALL, from Bridgenorth, and by Mr. GLADSTONE, from Tavistock.

ELECTION LAW.

Lord R. GROSVENOR gave notice that on Tuesday he would move for leave to bring in a Bill to limit the duration of the poll for counties to one day.—Sir W. CLAY gave notice that on an early day he would move for leave to bring in a Bill authorising parliamentary electors to vote for members of Parliament by means of voting-papers left at their houses, as was the case at present with respect to elections for poor-law guardians.

CRIMINAL AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

TUESDAY, Nov. 16.—On the motion of Mr. BAINES, the following members were nominated for the select committee on criminal and destitute children:—Mr. Baines, Marquis of Blandford, Viscount Barrington, Sir William Jolliffe, Mr. Sidney Herbert, Mr. Tufnell, Mr. Fitzroy, Mr. Miles, Mr. Robert Palmer, Mr. Adderley, Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. Tatton Egerton, Mr. Cornwall Legh, Mr. Headlam, and Mr. Monsell.

LAW REFORMS IN IRELAND.

FRIDAY, Nov. 19.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the procedure in the Superior Courts of Common Law in Ireland, stating that it was his object to make these courts resemble as nearly as possible the English County Courts. This was a bold and comprehensive plan, and would enable these Courts to give justice, cheaply and promptly.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

THE courts present an unusual dearth of cases relating to magistrates and parish law. There are but three or four cases in the Crown Paper. Although an Assizes, two Quarter Sessions, and two sessions of the Central Criminal Court have occurred since the Court of Criminal Appeal held its last sittings, they have produced only two appeals. Among the many reports of last week, only two belong to this branch of the law, formerly so fertile. Reg. v. The Mayor, &c. of Harwich, 20 Law T. Rep. 72, was a question of municipal law. A notice of objection to a name in the burgess list ran thus:—"I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the burgess list of the borough of Harwich." It was held to be bad, because it did not describe the person as he was described on the list. "There might be two persons of the same name," said CROMPTON, J. "and it is right that it should be pointed out in the notice itself who is really meant by it."

The other case belongs to the Criminal Law. A count in an indictment for a nuisance charged that defendant had a mare "infected with a contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease called the glanders," and that he, "well knowing the premises," while the mare was so infected, brought it into a public way, where divers liege subjects were, "to the great danger of infecting, &c. the liege subjects, &c." It was objected that this was insufficient, because it was not alleged that defendant knew the glanders to be a disease which was communicable to human beings. But the Court held the indictment to be good. (Reg. v. Henson, 20 Law T. Rep. 63.)

DEVON QUARTER SESSIONS.

THE BAR AND THE CHAIRMAN.

On Thursday, John Broad was indicted for stealing a quantity of faggots of wood, the property of William Orchard. There being no counsel for the prosecution, the Chairman (Sir J. Duckworth) examined the witnesses from the depositions. The prisoner was defended by Ring.

The prosecutor having proved that the faggots of wood found in the prisoner's possession resembled those he had previously lost, and another witness having stated that he had seen a person, whom he believed to be the prisoner, go to the prosecutor's stack of faggots and take some of the wood belonging to him,

Ring rose to address the jury on the prisoner's behalf. He began by observing, that besides the difficulties he had to encounter arising from the case itself, he had also the disadvantage of a reply from the Chairman, not as judge, but as prosecuting counsel, in answer to the defence; that he trusted the learned Chairman knew him too well to suppose for a moment that he meant any personal disrespect, but that it was impossible for the Chairman, impartial and conscientious as he was, so to divest himself of human weakness, as not in some measure to identify himself with the case which he was seeking to prove from the witnesses he had examined. The difficulties which he, Mr. Ring, had to encounter, were great in every view of the case. Suppose a leading question put by the Chairman, how embarrassing must it be for counsel to object.

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting Mr. Ring) protested he was not aware that he had framed a single question to any one witness otherwise than in a proper legal form, and said he thought he might appeal to the gentlemen of the Bar themselves if he had done so.

Coleridge here rose, and said that an appeal to the Bar having been made, he might say he fully concurred in the sentiment expressed by his learned friend, Mr. Ring, and that, further, here was an instance of the evil felt by the Bar when a Chairman conducted prosecutions, viz.: that when a prisoner's counsel objected to a question put by the Chairman, the appeal was to that very Chairman himself.

Lopes, Cox, and other counsel also rose and begged to express their full concurrence in the sentiments expressed by Mr. Ring and Mr. Coleridge, and dwelt on other obvious inconveniences that were continually arising from this course being adopted.

The CHAIRMAN again pressed Mr. Ring to point out a leading question put by him in course of the case.

Ring said, that since he was pressed he would remind the Chairman that he asked a witness at the beginning of the case, "Were you at the place in question at half-past six," thus fixing the hour. It should have been put thus:—"At what hour were you there?" It was done unintentionally, he was certain—that he should at once have objected, had it come from one of his brethren at the Bar, and required that it should have been put to the witnesses in a somewhat different form, but that, coming from the Chairman, he felt he could not do so with freedom; but he begged the Chairman to understand, that his observations were more upon the general question than on the conduct of this particular case. He could not understand the reason why this course was adopted, but that if a desire to economise the public funds were the motive, he, for one, and he thought his brethren would concur with him, would, under the circumstances, conduct a prosecution gratuitously, rather than see justice defeated. Thus the Chairman would be relieved, and left unembarrassed by inconsistent and incompatible duties. That he was not saying one word more than the law fully warranted him, Mr. Ring begged to call the attention of the Court to the expression of Mr. Justice Coleridge in 1st Cox's Criminal Cases, p. 48, that "A Judge ought never to be put to prosecute." He also cited the case of Reg. v. Hazell, in 1st Cox's Criminal Cases, p. 318, in which Mr. Justice Cresswell said, "A Judge ought not to be put to prosecute. It is most unseemly for a Judge to be called upon to act as prosecutor, instead of holding the scales between the parties." And in concluding his address, Mr. Ring referred to the words of Mr. Justice Maule, in Reg. v. Page, 2nd Cox's Criminal Cases, p. 221, than which, he submitted, nothing could be clearer or more emphatic in the condemnation of this system now adopted. They were the followers." The duties of law is, that the Judge is counsel for the prisoner; but here it is sought not only to upset and reverse that doctrine, and to make me counsel for the prosecutor, but to throw the whole burthen of the prosecution upon me, and leave me to make out the best case I can against the prisoner by a careful and diligent perusal of the depositions. But I will not do it. I will be counsel for the prisoner, and let the depositions be handed to some counsel to conduct the prosecution." Mr. Ring then analysed the facts of the case, and submitted, where the identity of the accused was left in some doubt, as he contended it was here, that the jury should give the prisoner the benefit of such doubts, and acquit him of the charge.

The CHAIRMAN summed up the case briefly, and the jury having considered some little time, returned a verdict of Guilty; and the prisoner, a former conviction having been proved against him, was sentenced to seven years' transportation.

Thus ended a scene which created no little excitement in the court. Why is not the same system adopted in our County Sessions that is found to work so admirably at the less important sessions for Plymouth and Devonport, viz.: that the Court, in all cases where counsel are not retained previously by the prosecutor himself, directs that the attending counsel be instructed (according to seniority) to conduct the prosecution. By this course all collisions, which must be regretted as most painful and unseemly, would be avoided, and justice rightly and impartially administered.

TRANSMISSION OF LUNATICS BY RAIL.—The parochial authorities of Marylebone, deeming it quicker and cheaper to send pauper lunatics per rail to the Colney Hatch and Hanwell Asylums, made inquiries if such an arrangement could be effected. Mr. Messer, the relieving officer, found that the railway companies would not knowingly permit lunatics to travel along their lines.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Summary.

IT seems that, under the New Equity Procedure, upon petition for investment of purchase-money paid by a railway company, the Court will order a reference to the conveyancing counsel to report upon the title, and then, if reported satisfactory, the order will be made without a fresh petition, on production of an affidavit of the eligibility of the investment. (Re Caddick, 20 Law T. Rep. 59.)

A case of unusual interest in this branch of the law was that of The British, &c. Life Assurance Company v. Browne, 20 Law T. Rep. 67. The company advanced 200*l.* to A. and he and B. covenanted with the company by a deed inter partes to pay an annuity to the company, and by the same deed they assigned certain lands to trustees as security. The deed was executed by A. and B. but not by the company. The Joint-Stock Companies' Acts requires that every contract shall be signed by two directors at least, and verified by the common seal of the company. The question now was, whether this deed could be enforced by the company. The C. P. held that it might be so, for the contract was unilateral, and the deed equivalent to a deed poll. JERVIS, C.J. said:—"This is not a deed on behalf of the company within the meaning of the Act. A sum of money is advanced, and the defendant and another person covenant to pay an annuity. . . The section applies where something is to be done by the company, and then the execution by the company is necessary, with all the formalities. If not so executed, the other party could enforce it against the company, but the company could not against the other party. This contract is entirely unilateral, and need not be executed by the Company."

In The Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company v. Black, 20 Law T. Rep. 70, it was held, that a plea of infancy to an action for calls on shares should aver that the infant disaffirmed and repudiated the contract within a reasonable time.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR has held, in Chappell v. Rees, 20 Law T. Rep. 67, that the allowance of interest upon a legacy charged upon real estate, and due upwards of six years, is to be calculated from the filing of the bill, and not from the date of the decree, although the bill is not filed by a legatee; in Re Wheeler, 20 Law T. Rep. 57, that the costs of proceedings for obtaining from the committee of a lunatic a reconveyance of premises mortgaged to the lunatic, are to be paid out of the lunatic's estate, where he is beneficially interested in the mortgage, and the petition is by the committee; but otherwise where the mortgagor presents the petition, unless the committee declines to present a petition.

A suit was instituted against an executor for administration of the estate, he having retained balances in his hands. He became bankrupt. A decree was made, and inquiries were directed as to the moneys due from him. On an application to the Court it was held, that he was to be charged interest on the balances, but was entitled to costs, which were to be allowed to him out of the estate. But these costs were not to be set off against what should be found due from him in respect of interest on the balances. (Cotton v. Clarke, 20 Law T. Rep. 59.)

We are glad to see the Courts gradually relaxing the absurd, irrational, and unjust stringency of the earlier cases, that required the formal and literal execution of powers, instead of being content with a substantial performance of them. We do not believe that a century ago the following would have been pronounced sufficient: truth and justice would have been sacrificed to a form. Where a married woman had power of appointment over four different species of property, and by her will, which she expressed to be made "by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the settlement," &c. appointed all the four different species of property, Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY held it to be a sufficient exercise of the power. He said, "I take it to be clear that the question whether a will, assuming it to be, as in this case, duly executed, with the formalities required by the law, operates as an execution of a power, is, like every other question on the construction of a will, purely a question of intention; and the Courts have determined, and necessarily determined, that there are two modes in which that intention may be manifested; the one is by the will referring to the power itself, and expressing its intention to execute that power, although not referring to the special property comprised in the power; and the other is by dealing with the special property comprised in the power, without referring to the power itself, and that is commonly enunciated by the proposition that to make a will an execution of a power, it must refer to the power or the property comprised in the power." (Harrey v. Stracey, 20 Law T. Rep. 61).

Certain surviving trustees had conveyed the trust property to themselves and others, so that the legal estate was vested in seventeen trustees instead of sixteen, the number specified by the deed creating the trusts, but it was held that the seventeen were, nevertheless, entitled to recover in an action of ejectment on a joint demise, for, as the Court significantly observed, "If the legal estate is not in them, where is it?" (Doe v. Staples, 20 Law T. Rep. 61.)

It will be seen by the report of Anning v. Lavers, 20 Law T. Rep. 61, that upon a foreclosure by claim, the Court, under the new procedure, pronounced an immediate decree, and made an order for the sale of the mortgaged property. This is the best answer to the objections that were made to a suggestion that appeared in these pages for dispensing with the powers of sale in small mortgages, and relying, in case of need, upon a sale under a foreclosure.

COUNTY COURTS.

Summary.

IT has been held in Stewart v. Jones, 20 Law T. Rep. 64, that the County Court has jurisdiction to entertain a plaint for the recovery of a paving-rate, although by 1 Vict. c. 33, a right is given to remove it in one of the Superior Courts of Record at Westminster.

In Ex parte Wilton, 20 Law T. Rep. 72, the Court refused an application for a rule for a criminal information against a County Court Judge, it not being suggested that he had acted from any corrupt or improper motive.

In Insolvency there is one point to be noted. The schedule described a creditor as "Mr. Williams, timber merchant, New-road, London." His residence was in the City-road, which is a mile and a half from the New-road. In an action for the debt, and a plea of insolvency, it was held that the sufficiency of this description was not a question of law for the Court, but of fact for the jury, and the mode by which they should try it was this,—whether the plaintiff was so described in the schedule that a letter so directed to him by the assignee would find him. (Williams v. Parfitt, 20 Law T. Rep. 72.)

COSTS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Pray when is the scale of costs to be settled for the County Courts?

From the unaccountable delay, it would seem as if these costs were to be burked instead of promulgated.

These courts require much reformation. The court fees are far too high, and the system of ordering the debts to be paid by instalments is absurd, and in many cases a denial of justice; for the dishonest debtor quite laughs at such orders, and in nine cases out of ten never obeys them, while the poor creditor is obliged to pay the court fees down instanter.

Why cannot it be left to the creditor and debtor to settle the terms of payment, as in the Superior Courts, and take out execution as occasion requires?

To render these Courts of any essential good for recovering debts from fraudulent debtors, the creditor should have the control, and the summons after judgment should be abolished.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—If questions on the New Procedure were few at first, they have been rapidly increasing ever since, and our last bore abundant testimony to the difficulties that have already arisen, and must yet arise, as it comes to be applied practically. A brief summary of the points decided will be interesting and perhaps useful to our readers.

In Martin v. Hadlow, 20 Law T. Rep. 59, it was held, that although the 52nd section of c. 86 only contained the words "bill of revivor or supplemental bill," it extended also to suits by claim, and therefore, where such a suit had abated by the death of a defendant who was an executor, the Court cannot under that section make an order for its revival against the executor of such defendent. In Yate v. Leithead, 20 Law T. Rep. 59, where the suit had abated by the death of one of the plaintiffs and an executor and an administrator de bonis non of the original testator claimed to revive, it was held that an order under the 52nd section was not sufficient, but that the supplemental claim should be filed. "Such a case was not affected by the Act at all." In the same case it was held that the rule as to the printing of bills and claims is imperative.

In Re Catling, 20 Law T. Rep. 59, where an account had been ordered to be taken by the Master in an administration suit, the Court, under the 45th sect. of c. 86, permitted the order to be altered by directing an account to be taken, instead of directing a reference to the Master to take an account.

In the matter of the Production of Documents, which we noticed last week, Vice-Chancellor TURNER said that the judges had considered the question, and were of opinion that under the new Act "all those applications should originate at chambers. The effect of which will be, that if there is no dispute as to the production, all the expense of motions in court for production of documents will be saved. If, on the other hand, there appears to be any difficulty as to the production, the judges will adjourn the motion into court in order that it may be argued." (Thompson v. Toulon, 20 Law T. Rep. 60.)

In Davenport v. Davenport, 20 Law T. Rep. 60, the Vice-Chancellor said that the judges had agreed that applications on the part of purchasers for payment into court of money accepting the title might be made in chambers.

In Wilding v. Richards, 20 Law T. Rep. 60, Vice-Chancellor STUART said that the judges had agreed that a mere order to revive, and the usual supplemental decree, were of course.

Where issue had been joined before the new stat. interrogatories filed, and an appointment made with the examiner, but no witness examined, the Court directed the evidence to be taken viva voce, and the costs already incurred to be costs in the cause. (Cable v. Cooper, 20 Law T. Rep. 60.)

It will be observed that in Anning v. Lavers, 20 Law T. Rep. 61, the Court directed an immediate sale of mortgaged property under a claim of foreclosure.

The 52nd section is held to be applicable to the case of an abatement which occurred before the Act came into operation; and where the application for the order to revive is by a creditor not a party to the suit, notice is to be given to the parties entitled to revive. (Lowes v. Lowes, 20 Law T. Rep. 61.)

Considerable doubt was entertained as to the precise duties of the Judges in hearing evidence in a suit. This is partially solved by the case of Mildmay v. Methuen, 20 Law T. Rep. 63, where Vice-Chancellor KINDERSLEY stated, in relation to the 42nd section, which empowers the Judges to obtain the assistance of scientific persons, "and to act on the certificate of such persons," upon the question whether this conferred the power on the Judge himself to act, or authorised him to delegate that power to the Master, calling in such scientific persons, that the Judges were of opinion "that it was never intended by the Legislature that the Court should delegate any such power to the Master; and that the purpose of the Act was to enable the Judges, in doing that which they were now to do instead of the Master, to decide questions which otherwisewould have been referred to the Master, and they should have the power to call in the assistance of scientific persons, if necessary. * * Mere details would be worked out by the Chief Clerk under his Honour's direction; and if there should be any question of a grave nature, it would be right to have that question discussed in open court."

Some other practice cases of interest are reported which do not relate to the new procedure.

In Turner v. Crosthwaite, 20 Law T. Rep. 58, the LORD CHANCELLOR agreed to hear an appeal from the decision of the Lords Justices in Bankruptcy, "if the Lords Justices will certify to me that they think the case a fit one to be heard before the full Court."

In Newton v. Thompson, 20 Law T. Rep. 60, the service of an order nisi to confirm the Master's report was held to be sufficiently served on the defendant's solicitor, although the premises were unoccupied, it being shewn that the place was the address given by him in entering appearance, that he had absconded, and that his client was out of the jurisdiction.

When an equity of redemption had been assigned to trustees for the benefit of certain scheduled creditors, and the mortgagee had instituted a claim for foreclosure, the scheduled creditors were held to be necessary parties. (Thomas v. Dunning, 20 Law T. Rep. 60.)

In an Anonymous Case, 20 Law T. Rep. 60, where a plaintiff was suing in equity for several matters, one of which is also a cause of a suit at law, and on which he had commenced an action, he was required to elect whether to proceed at law or in equity.

And under the Trustee Act, a petition by a tenant for life for an order vesting the property in a trustee appointed in the place of a trustee resident out of the jurisdiction was required to be served on the remainder-man.

COMMON LAW.—The points arising on the Procedure Act are still very few, and of no great importance. The whole of last week produced only six.

Gapp v. Robinson, 20 Law T. Rep. 67, was a question as to the effect of the new statute upon the practice in renewing a writ of summons which had been issued on the 8th of June, and having expired on the 7th of October, was sought to be revived under ss. 10 and 12 of the new Act, for the purpose of keeping alive the original writ. The case was held to be within the exception in sec. 10, and the Court directed an alias writ to be issued under the old practice, and then that the plaintiff should, upon its expiration, renew under sec. 12 of the Procedure Act.

In James v. Isaac, 20 Law T. Rep. 68, it was queried (but not decided), whether special demurrers, pending at the time of the new Act coming into operation, are abolished, and whether it is retrospective as to writs of error under sec. 146.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit cannot now be moved for, the 100th section of the Procedure Act having repealed the previous statute, except as to proceedings that have been actually begun under it, in reference to such judgment, previously to the 24th of October. (Morgan v. Jones, 20 Law T. Rep. 70.) And it was also refused in an action of ejectment, the 101st section of the Procedure Act having so far repealed the 14 Geo. 2, c. 14. (Doe dem. Leigh v. Holt, 20 Law T. Rep. 70.)

Where an appearance had been entered sec. stat. before the 24th of October, and on the 27th a declaration was filed, with notice to plead within eight days, and then plaintiff signed judgment and issued execution without giving notice to the defendant, the Court granted a rule to shew cause why the proceedings should not be set aside. PLATT, B. seemed to consider that there was nothing in the procedure Acts that relieved the plaintiff from the necessity of serving defendant with notice of declaration filed. But the point is to be argued in the full court. (Goodliffe v. Neeves, 20 Law T. Rep. 70.)

It was laid down by the Court of Ex. in Lumley v. Gye, 20 Law T. Rep. 71, that in the affidavit for leave to plead and demur together, under sec. 80 of the Procedure Act, the defendant or his attorney should verify all matters within his or their knowledge, and ALDERSON, B. stated it to be his opinion that "When a third person is involved, you ought to apply to that person for an affidavit in support of your application, or show some reason for not doing so.

Some decisions on other points of practice not relating to the new procedure require to be noticed.

The power of the judge to amend the record at the trial was questioned in Doe v. Beck, 20 Law T. Rep. 67, which was an action of ejectment. The demise by the lessors of the plaintiff shewed the legal estate to be in both husband and wife; but the evidence at the trial shewed the legal estate to be in the husband alone. An application was made to the judge to amend, but he refused, and the Court held that he had rightly done so, such an amendment not being within the authority given by the statute. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 23.)

In the law of evidence there are some decisions of interest. In Nicholls v. Brooks, 20 Law T. Rep, 63, the Q.B. held that where husband and wife were both parties on the record, the wife was admissible as a witness. There could have been no doubt, for however absurd is this admission of her where she has the greater interest, and rejection of her where she is less interested, still the statute is express in its terms.

An extremely nice point was raised in Roberts v. Corbett, 20 Law T. Rep. 66. A commissioner under an Act of Parliament had made an award determining the boundaries of certain mines; a plan was annexed shewing "the old works;" but it did not state the whole, part being underground. A dispute arose as to what constituted "the old works." One of the commissioners was called to prove that he did not know of certain "old works," to which it was contended the words applied. It was held that his evidence was admissible, to prove "a matter of fact, namely, the state of his knowledge." He could not be asked what he meant by the award, but he might be asked if he knew of any other old workings, and the jury were entitled to draw the necessary inference from his answer.

It was laid down in Liddel v. The Newport, &c. Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 66, that a conversation between one of the parties to the action and a third person, in relation to an agreement by the other party, "would not be admissible until proof is given of preceding authority or subsequent recognition." Where A, a landowner, objected to a railway passing through his lands, and B. promised that it should be done by means of a tunnel, and a parliamentary notice was given to A. stating that it would pass by means of a tunnel, and asking his consent, but he took no notice of it, the Bill passed, and the company began to construct the railway without a tunnel, for which he brought an action, it was held, that before he could give in evidence the conversation between himself and B. he must prove B.'s agency; and that the notice did not shew a ratification, and that the conversation could not be put in evidence to shew that the notice ratified it.

COURT FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—By the Nisi Prius Officers' Act of last session the office of marshal is abolished, and many credulous persons believed that the heavy fees paid to him on the trial of causes would be also abolished. I have tried two undefended causes this week, and paid for court fees in the Q.B. 3*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*; and in the Ex. 4*l.* 1*s.* Surely it is high time that these exorbitant exactions should be reduced.

The attorneys' fees are cut down to a minimum point, but nothing is done to reduce their heavy payments.

By the 10th section of the Act, "a new table of fees" is to be prepared. Can you inform the Profession the cause of the delay?

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

CHANCERY FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—No one but those who experience it can conceive the great inconvenience and delay caused to solicitors by the new system of paying fees in Chancery by stamps impressed on the various documents. Surely this might be remedied by allowing Chancery stamps to be bought and affixed like postage stamps, being of course, by the officers of the court, when presented, rendered incapable of being used again.

Such an arrangement would injure no one, and would be the greatest boon to the Profession, already harassed as it is to find the right path through the new practice. G. H.

SHAM LAWYERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—The enclosed, which I cut from the Times, of Saturday, appears to me to be a fit subject for notice in the LAW TIMES.

PROTECTION TO THE EMBARRASSED.—There are thousands of persons who have long struggled against the force of misfortune, but few are aware that, under very recent Acts, all small traders owing less than 300*l.* clergymen, farmers, private and professional gentlemen, and all others owing to any amount (the latter without any publicity), can be entirely raised from their difficulties at small expense, and without imprisonment or bankruptcy. All such, Mr. WESTON (late Secretary to the Chancery Reform Association) begs will apply to him, by letter or personally, at 9, Bell-yard, Doctors'-commons.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

IT has been held, in Bibby v. Larpent, 20 Law T. Rep. 64, that a deed of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors, stipulating that he shall still carry on the business under the control of inspectors, and in which he covenanted to use his endeavours to get in the debts and to conduct the affairs to a conclusion for the benefit of his creditors, and also, at the request of a majority of the inspectors, to get in his private property, excepting his household goods, plate, and the like, for the benefit of his creditors, was not a valid deed of arrangement with creditors under sec. 124 of the Bankruptcy Act, because it did not give up the whole property, but reserved the plate, &c.

A policy of insurance on goods on a voyage from Havannah to the Baltic, contained a stipulation that there should be a return of part of the premium if the voyage terminated in the United Kingdom. To a declaration on this policy the defendant pleaded the bankruptcy of the plaintiff. The plaintiff replied, that before the bankruptcy he had sold the goods insured to A. and had transferred to him the policy. Rejoinder, that before the bankruptcy the risk ended in the United Kingdom, whereby plaintiff became entitled to a return of part of the premium, which had not been made, and was still an outstanding claim on the policy. This was held to be no answer to the plea, because whatever claim the plaintiff had for a return of premium was not a set-off, but the subject of a separate action, and the right to which had passed to the assignees under the bankruptcy. (Castelli v. Boddington, 20 Law T. Rep. 64.)

A case of considerable importance is reported from the C.B. 20 Law T. Rep. 68. A. made a parol agreement with B. in France, to collect cigars for him, and consign them to him in England. A's salary of 100*l.* a year. B. brought an action here against A. for not taking B. into his service as he had agreed. Will such an action lie? The Court held that it would not, for although such a contract was good according to the lex loci, it could not be enforced here, because it was not in accordance with the 4th sect. of the Statute of Frauds. "In literal terms," said MAULE, J. "this section does not say that no contract shall have any force, but that no action shall be brought. That applies to English Courts, and therefore its terms apply to something to take place in England, and prohibits it, unless the requisites of the statute are complied with."

THE ECCLESIASTICAL LAWYER.

THE cases in this branch of the law are so few that we have rarely occasion to introduce the department to which they belong. But there is one of some interest among the reports of last week. Bryan v. Clay, 20 Law T. Rep. 64, was an action for dilapidations against the executor of a deceased rector by his successor. Outstanding debts and plene administravit præter were pleaded. The question upon this was, whether debts should be preferred to dilapidations. It was held by the Q. B. that although by the custom of England such an action will lie, yet it is an incident of the custom that, in the order of payment, debts, whether simple contract or specialty, should be preferred, and consequently it was a good plea that the assets are sufficient only for payment of the debts.

We believe that in our leading article of Saturday, on the proceedings of Convocation on the previous day, we were in error in stating that Dr. Addams's opinion had been taken on the point whether the Act of Submission of the Clergy went further than the restraint upon making or debating canons. We were correct, however, in remarking that the most eminent advice, including the Attorney-General's, was entirely in favour of the power of Convocation to transact any business without royal license, short of making canons. We ought to have added, that opinions had been received from the highest civilians, and other legal authorities (including the Attorney-General's), to the effect that the power of the Archbishop in proroguing Convocation must be limited by the assent of the majority of the members of the Upper House. In other words, it has been advised that the consensus fratrum is necessary to prorogation. The importance of these legal opinions, at the present juncture, it is impossible to overrate.—Morning Chronicle.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

Her Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Most. Hon. John, Marquis of Winchester, to be Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Southampton, and of the town of Southampton and county of the same, and also to appoint the Right Hon. William, Lord Bateman, to be Lord-Lieutenant and Custos-Rotulorum of the county of Hereford, their lordships respectively took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon, instead of the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

The Lord Chancellor has been pleased to appoint Arthur Burridge, esq. of Bridport, deputy-coroner for the county of Dorset, on the nomination of Samuel Skinner Cory, esq. one of her Majesty's coroners for the said county.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis has appointed Thomas Smith James, of Birmingham, in the county of Warwick, gent. to be one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Warwick, also in and for the counties of Stafford and Worcester.

FACULTY OF ADVOCATES (SCOTLAND). — The Faculty of Advocates met on Saturday for the election of a dean, in the place of Mr. John Marshall, now a judge of the Court of Session, with the title of Lord Curriehill. On the motion of Mr. Penney, seconded by Mr. Moncrieff, M.P. the unanimous choice of the faculty fell upon Mr. John Inglis, the Lord-Advocate for Scotland. His lordship, in accepting the office of dean, addressed the faculty in an appropriate and very eloquent speech.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL, IRELAND.—It is reported that eight gentlemen are about to be called, during the present Term, to the Inner Bar. Their names are—Mr. Hans Hamilton, the newly appointed assistant-barrister for Galway; Mr. Edmond Hayes, LL.D. law-adviser to the Castle; and Messrs. W. H. Brereton, John Herbert Otway, James Robinson, Hamilton Smythe, Patrick J. Blake, and Robert Longfield. Of these one gentleman (Mr. Blake) is a Roman Catholic.

INNER TEMPLE, Nov. 17.—The following members of this society have been called to the Bar, and were sworn in this evening in the hall:—Charles Platt, B.A.; Charles Joseph Trupp, M.A.; Julius Talbot Airey, esq.; Thomas Howard Fellows, esq.; John Copley Wray, M.A.; Francis James Roughton, esq.; William Eccles, B.A.; William Samuel Jones, esq.; James Oliver, esq.; George Alfred Lawrence, B.A.; Robert Heyrick Palmer, B.A.; John William Wray, esq.; Simeon Jacobs, esq.; Francis Newman Rogers, B.A.; George John Cayley, esq.; Downes Wigiesworth, B.A.; the Hon. Robert Bourke; Donat John Haste O'Brien, B.A.; John Paxton Norman, M.A.; Charles Frederick Lucas, esq.; Charles Neve Creswell, B.A.; Edward Bousfield Dawson, LL.B.; Charles Jeremiah Mayhew, esq.; Richard Formby, B.A.; Edward Hacking, esq.; Henry Francis Shebbeare, B.A.; William Henry Humphery, B.A.; Ewark Gibbon Salisbury, esq.; Thomas C. Mosson Meekins, B.A.; James John Hooper, esq.; and Thomas Freeman Morse.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, Nov. 17.—The following members of this society have been called to the Bar, and were sworn in this evening in the hall:—Messrs. George Thornton Hamilton, Francis Talfourd, Charles Robert Hickes, Morrton Revell Phillips, Frederick Watson Lloyd, John Whitcombe, William Philip Dymond, Thomas Dunnett, Henry Gawler, Joseph Graham, William Robert Wilkinson, and William Pearce.

LINCOLN'S-INN, Nov. 17.—The following members of this society have been called to the Bar, and were sworn in this evening in the hall:—Messrs. Richard Darrell Darrell, B.A. Walter Bagehot, William Knox Wigram, M.A. Frederick Boyd Marson, Codrington Thomas Parr, Edmund James, Arthur Benson Dickson, Samuel Greame Fenton, M.A. Joseph Adderly Chichele Helm, Richard Elwyn, M.A. Thomas Spicer Galland, M.A. William Pulley, John Coryton, B.A. and John Rowe Kelly Ralph, M.A.

GRAY'S-INN, Nov. 17.—At a Pension of the Honourable Society of Gray's-inn, holden this day, Edward Bullen, esq. of Trinity College, Dublin, M.A. was called to the degree of barrister-at-law.

Court of Chancery.

ORDER OF COURT.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10. — The Lord Chancellor directs that all office copies, and other copies of proceedings and documents, shall be counted after the rate of ninety words to the folio, and where the same or any portion thereof shall be written with columns containing figures, in every such case each figure or combination of figures representing a distinct denomination shall be counted as one word; therefore, 4,151*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.* would count as three words.

Rolls Court.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.

THE Master of the Rolls has appointed Tuesday, the 23rd of November, at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, at four in the afternoon, for swearing solicitors.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—A few months since a paragraph appeared in the LAW TIMES, by which Masters Extraordinary in Chancery were requested to transmit to the Lord Chancellor's secretary their names and addresses, together with the date of their several appointments.

I now observe that the Lord Chancellor (in his speech in the House of Lords) proposes to abolish the title of "Master Extraordinary," hitherto conferred by his Lordship for the time being, and formally gazetted, and in lieu thereof to appoint country agents to take affidavits, &c. upon payment of 20*s.* only, for such prerogative.

I am not aware what was the object of the return requested through your columns, but it seems only just that (whilst compensation is awarded to various officers of the court), some reimbursement, at least, should be made to those solicitors who, like myself, have paid nearly 10*l.* for their appointment within the last twelve months.

I am, Sir, yours, &c. J. G. B.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Lawyer's Companion for 1853. London: Stevens and Norton.

THIS work has been much improved in the hands of its new proprietors. The paper is of better quality, it is better printed, and more care is bestowed upon its details. It contains a Law List, in addition to the ordinary contents of a Solicitor's Diary, and the same variety of information on matters required for office reference as is found in all the almanacs, as stamp and tax tables, &c. Thus it is complete for its purpose, and it is published in various sizes to suit the requirements of different offices. Practically, it is a substitute for the Law List, to which it must be a formidable rival.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE NEW JUDGE OF THE COURT OF SESSION.—The Inner House of the Court of Session (Scotland) commenced its sittings on Friday week, after the long vacation. At the opening of the Court the whole of the judges, with the exception of Lord Rutherford, who was absent from indisposition, assembled in the First Division, for the purpose of going through the preliminary forms for the installation of John Marshall, esq. as a judge, in the place of Lord Mackenzie, resigned. Mr. Marshall presented his commission, which was read, and he was appointed to sit as Lord Probationer with Lord Anderson. He sat accordingly, and having heard a case, reported it and his opinion thereon to the Court, and thereafter sat for the hearing of another case, which he reported on Saturday, and thus completed his trials in the Outer House. After hearing a case in the First Division, he will be duly inducted into office, and take his seat on the bench as Lord Marshal.—North British Mail.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"The work evinces considerable vivacity; but the simplicity with which the author conveys his advice, and the earnest and dignified tone which pervades throughout, constitute its main attractions."—The Globe.

"A remarkable production is here commenced, which, if completed with any ability compatible to that evinced by the initial volume, will at once assume an honourable position as a standard authority in literature. The author has admirably qualified himself for the composition of the work by those prolonged studies and laborious researches, and various and extended practice, which could alone enable him to pronounce upon the subject-matter in hand with any degree of judgment."—The Sun.

"Such a work as our author's is of great importance in the present state of the Profession. In its pleasingly-written pages the young student will find seasonable advice, the result of long experience, and valuable instruction, rendered doubly effective by apt illustration. It is equally useful to the youth, the student, and the barrister."—The Britannia.

"The treatise is just what it professes to be, and what it should be. It is full of sound advice for the guidance of a man who intends to make the Bar his profession. The information presented to the student is marked by strong common sense, and some of it is second-hand. Mr. Cox writes from experience."—The Atlas.

"It must not be supposed that the value of the volume is confined to those who actually stand irrobed at the advice which it contains; there is much that cannot fail to interest the ordinary reader, especially since the natural dryness of the subject is pleasantly relieved by the lively and often humorous style in which it is treated."—The John Bull.

"A lively-written treatise."—Weekly Dispatch.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"T. O.'s" letter on the County Courts case is manifestly inadmissible. It would be a dangerous precedent to publish anything relating to a judgment pending.

"Scrutator."—The objection to the memorandum on the writ is scarcely worth notice. It involves no practical difficulties.

"Verb. Sap."—Not having room for it here, we have given his letter to the Editor of "The Magistrate," where it will appear, and to which it is more appropriate.

"Omega."—Certainly she cannot.

"A Master Extraordinary" (Bradford) will see that the subject of his letter has already attracted attention; it is, therefore unnecessary to repeat the protest against the contemplated injustice. The same observation applies to the communications of "One of the Condemned," "K. D. G." "A Master Extraordinary" (Stockton), "An Old Admirer," and others.

"Luard," is unavoidably postponed, on account of the length of his letter. We must again urge brevity upon our correspondents.

"G. L." (Tewkesbury).—Thanks for the suggestion. Probably we shall make use of it.

"A Subscriber."—The constable is not liable for expenses of witnesses bound over by the justices.

"G. A."—Mr. Marshall has often figured in these columns, but he is proof against it.

"T. J."—A. commits an indictable offence.

"C. B" could not do better than read up with great care the New Common Law and Chancery Procedure Acts.

"T. N." (Wigan).—Such conduct is thoroughly unjustifiable, and the best mode of treating it is with contempt. Always be above a personal slight.

"A Clerk." (Gray's-inn).—Sue under the Procedure Act.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Under Fifty Words.....£0 5 0
For every additional Ten Words 0 0 6

Advertisements from the Country should be accompanied with an order upon the Agent in Town, or a Post-office order (payable at 180, Strand) for the amount.

Advertisements ordered for the first page are charged one-half more. If not so ordered, they will take the chance of position.

We cannot undertake to return rejected communications. Whatever is intended for insertion must be authenticated by the name and address of the writer; not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of his good faith. No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

NEW TABLES of FEES.—MR. CROCKFORD announces that the NEW TABLES of FEES will be introduced into the SECOND EDITION of KERR'S COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT, now in the press, and which will also contain all the Cases decided upon the New Practice during Michaelmas Term, with additional and corrected Forms, Notes, and Index. The First Edition is out of print. Such was the demand for it, that it was exhausted in a fortnight.

Orders for the Second Edition should be forwarded immediately, to secure early copies.

On Saturday next,

THE LAW TIMES ALMANAC for 1853 will be ready on the first week in December. It will contain the Time Tables of all the Courts, corrected to the new practice, in addition to the usual contents required for reference in offices.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1852.

NEW TABLE OF FEES IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.

The New Table of Fees is issued, and will be found in its proper place among the Court Papers in another page. It makes many and great reductions, for which the Profession and the Public will be equally grateful. The practical effect of the enormous fees of Court has been to inflict a double injury upon the Attorneys. Not only have they diminished law by deterring clients from resorting to it for redress where there was any doubt as to the capacity of defendant to pay the debt and costs, but they brought much positive discredit upon the Profession, who were compelled to bear the brunt of the displeasure produced by heavy bills of costs, of which, in fact, a considerable portion consisted of moneys paid out of pocket in Court fees. But of this clients could or would understand nought. They glanced at the sum total of their bills, set down to the account of the Lawyer the entire of the charge, and then went about abusing the Attorney for a bill of which a considerable portion was really inflicted upon them by the Court, and not by the Lawyer. Nor was this all the inconvenience and annoyance produced to the Profession by the large fees of Court. The Attorney is obliged to pay them, in the first instance, out of his own pocket, whatever the issue of the cause or the credit of his client. Now every Attorney knows, to his grievous discomfort, how often clients prove to be insolvent when the bill is sent in; how large an item must be deducted from his annual accounts for bad debts. The Court fees he was compelled to pay at every stage of the proceedings constituted a considerable part of those bad debts, and immensely aggravated his actual losses. To the country Attorney they were a grievance in another shape—they swelled his agent's bills; while to the agent they were vexatious, by requiring him to make large advances long before he could hope for repayment.

Therefore, to the Profession, the liberal reduction made in the Court fees by the Judges, with the sanction of the Treasury, must be esteemed a great and welcome boon, and it will doubtless help to swell the stream of business which has been so sensibly rising under the beneficial operation of the Common Law Procedure Act.

But there is one portion of the New Scale of Fees against which we must protest emphatically—the charge of sixpence for office copies. That is altogether exorbitant. The charge of a law stationer would be twopence. Why should suitors be compelled to pay more? In Chancery, the charge for office copies has been reduced to fourpence, and the Lord Chancellor promises a further reduction. Why should the Common Law Courts put on a higher price for the same work? We trust that this was an accidental oversight of the Judges by whom the scale was prepared, and that the earliest opportunity will be taken to remedy the defect.

LAW LOOKING UP.

As we had ventured to anticipate, the effect of the facilities afforded by the new procedure for the recovery of debts and undisputed demands, has been to produce a marked increase in the number of writs issued.

In the year 1851, there issued between the 24th October and the 20th November, from—

The Queen's Bench	2,163
The Common Pleas	1,481
The Exchequer	2,828
Total	6,472

In the present year, since the Procedure Act has been in operation, the numbers issued during the same period have been,—

The Queen's Bench	2,415
The Common Pleas	1,829
The Exchequer	3,293
Total	7,537

Shewing a total result as follows:—

In 1851	6,472
In 1852	7,537
Increase in 1852	1,065

This result proves, also, an assertion we have often made, but which some of our readers have questioned, that rational law reform (as distinguished from the free trade in law advocated by a few disappointed "seniors," and some enthusiastic "juniors"), will be a positive benefit to the Attorneys, however injurious it may be to the interests of the Bar.

For there is this distinction to be observed in the bearing of law reforms upon the welfare of the two branches of the Profession. Let law be simplified ever so much, the public who require law must employ an Attorney to do it for them; and the effect of cheapening law is only to induce a great many more people to avail themselves of it, and consequently to employ an Attorney, than otherwise would do so. But it is not thus with the Bar. The simplifying of the law makes the employment of a Barrister less necessary, for it enables the Attorney to do for himself the work for which, when the law was more complex, he was obliged to go to Counsel. Unless the effect of the increased number of writs is to produce more trials, the Bar loses the greater portion of the business that formerly employed it in the processes preliminary to trial. And even if trials should increase, the briefs thus added will not be distributed among the whole Bar, but will necessarily be limited to the few who have obtained a reputation as Advocates; so that no compensation can possibly come to the juniors for the large amount of emolument of which they have been deprived by the simplifying and cheapening of process.

We believe that so it will be found with all other law reforms that may be introduced. They will improve the fortunes of the Attorneys, and reduce those of the Bar; and whatever regret may be felt for the depression of the latter, we cannot discover any means by which it may be avoided. It is part of the great change that is taking place in society, and they whose misfortune it is to suffer by it have no choice but to submit, with what resignation they can muster, to an inevitable destiny. Happily, Australia is open to receive our excessive numbers, and "the diggins" offer far more certain and more dazzling fortunes than the lottery of Westminster Hall.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

The Lord Chancellor has announced his intention to abolish this somewhat needless office; but not a word was said of the compensation to which the present holders are entitled for being deprived, without any fault of their own, of that for which they have paid a large fee.

But, perhaps, we should not call it compensation, lest our meaning be misunderstood. On the part of the Profession, we do not ask for any payment for loss of profits. We ask only for a return of the fees paid for the giving of that of which they are now to be deprived.

Lord St. Leonards is strictly, nay, sternly, just, and we have no doubt that he will accompany a change, in itself to be commended, with provisions which shall prevent it from operating unfairly upon those who have purchased, at a cost of 12*l.* or so, a post of honour and profit, on the understanding that it was to be theirs for life.

We are sure that his Lordship, on reading this respectful statement of the claim, will take good care that justice shall be done.

We can assure the numerous correspondents who have loaded our table with letters on this subject, that it shall have our most vigilant attention. If, when the measure is produced, it omits to provide that full relief to which they are entitled, we will take care that their claims shall be urged in the most effective, if not in the most noisy, form. The same influences that have done them good service so often before, will do it again, and they may rest in the assurance that, if any active measures on their part should be necessary, we will take care to give them timely warning when to bestir themselves. But we do not believe that any movement will be required but that the LORD CHANCELLOR'S measure will itself protect their interests.

LAW REFORM IN IRELAND.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL for Ireland has startled the Lawyers in both countries by a Bill for the reform of the practice of the common-law courts, so far in advance of our own Procedure Act as to put the Commission to the blush for its short-comings. This Bill boldly abolishes the system of pleading which our Act has only a little amended. It adopts the practice of the County Courts, which experience has proved to be perfectly efficient for the ends of justice, of a statement of the cause of action in the plaint and summons, without more, and special defences, in the language of common sense, and it adds the further improvement of requiring all statements in the nature of pleadings to be upon oath, thus, at one sweep, abolishing sham, false, and frivolous pleas, and making the preliminary to a trial as truthful as the trial itself. These are the boldest innovations; but there are many minor ones that might have been worthily introduced in England.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

WHY should it be required of the Attorney that he should abandon his practice, and live as best he can, for three years before he can be called to the Bar, and so licensed to practise as an Advocate?

No other reason can be assigned for this than that which was probably its true origin, a desire to prevent, or at least to throw impediments in the way of, Attorneys desirous of going to the Bar from following their inclination. That it does so operate in fact we know from personal experience. It was only at a great sacrifice of present advantage, and amid difficulties that they only can understand who have proved them, that we were enabled to pursue the bent of a natural taste, and to overleap the artificial impediment thus placed in the way of aspirants in the other branch of the Profession. To how many is that a hopeless obstacle?

And yet there is no argument by which the existing rule can be justified. From the very course of his education, his previous studies and practice, tested by a severe examination into his proficiency as a condition of his calling, an Attorney is the most competent of all conceivable candidates for admission to the Bar. Necessarily he must be vastly more apt for the business of the Profession than a youth fresh from college, or a raw pupil from the chambers of a pleader or conveyancer. The Attorney is already accomplished in the greater portion of the knowledge and experience required for an Advocate. Wherefore, then, should he be required to cease from practising his profession, to abandon the very means by which he is qualifying himself to practise in his new pursuit, for three whole years before he can be admitted to the other branch of it?

It is quite time that this barrier should be thrown down. An Attorney should find a more ready admission to the Bar than another, as being better qualified, instead of being subjected to disadvantages, and his knowledge of the law and practice looked upon as a *dis*qualification. Why should not an Attorney be allowed to continue his practice up to the moment of his call? Or why should not an Attorney be admissible to the Bar at any time, merely by proving himself to be qualified, by an examination to which all candidates for the Bar ought to be, and we trust will soon be, subjected? This is the measure of justice which we claim for the Attorneys. Not, indeed, that many would be found to avail themselves of the privilege; for, as things are, and are likely to be, the Bar will offer but small inducement to any man of ability to quit the more profitable branch of the Profession for that in which the prospects of success are infinitely more distant; and if it comes, the work is greater and the gain less. There is no fear of the already over-peopled Bar being deluged with recruits from the ranks of the Attorneys, even if the passage from one to the other were nothing more than the putting on of the wig; for the Attorneys know that their present and future are vastly better than those of the Bar. But the barrier that has been erected against them is a reproach to the entire body; it says, in effect, that an Attorney must be purged by a three years' probation of something objectionable, which is assumed to attach to him by reason of his having been an Attorney. This species of professional quarantine is an imputation upon the social or moral characters of those upon whom it is imposed, and therefore its removal is one of those minor reforms which ought to be demanded by one branch of the Profession and gracefully conceded by the other. We believe that both would profit by the change.

PRACTICAL WORKING OF THE PROCEDURE ACT.

THE Common Law Procedure Act has had a Term's trial, and upon the whole it has been found to work better than was anticipated. That the reform effected by it falls far short of the requirements, will be admitted by all; and indeed the measure which the Government has proposed for Ireland not only eclipses our own, but shews the precise extent of its short-comings: we know now what we ought to have had, and have not, and what more we have a right to demand. But, so far as it has gone, the reform of the Common Law Courts has equalled the expectations of its framers. That so few doubts should have arisen upon the construction of so long a statute is in itself evidence that it was carefully prepared. We understand that in the Judges' chambers there has been a considerable increase of work; but all the points raised have been readily disposed of; and it is at least an indication that they were not very complicated or doubtful, that there has not been, we believe, a single appeal from any decision of a Judge in chambers. We hear, too, that there has been a large increase in the number of writs issued, principally with special indorsements; proving that the Profession are already availing themselves of the great facilities thus afforded for the recovery of undisputed demands, and for which the Superior Courts now offer immense advantages over the County Courts, both as respects cheapness, speed, and efficiency of process. The only thing required to perfect this portion of the machinery of the Common Law Courts is to give to them a concurrent jurisdiction with the County Courts in all claims of 10*l.* and upwards, so as to enable suitors to avail themselves, if they please, of the greater advantages now offered to them in the Superior Courts for the recovery of debts and undisputed demands. It is extremely unjust and inconvenient that a suitor should be compelled to go to the more costly and less efficacious County Court, when he could obtain justice so much more speedily and cheaply in the Superior Courts. It was right, when the latter were so cumbrous and costly, that a plaintiff should not be permitted to impose upon the defendant the expenses of a dear tribunal when he could obtain the same end in a cheap one. But that reason no longer exists; nay, the case is reversed, and, as it is, the plaintiff is compelled to go to the more expensive and dilatory court, instead of to the cheapest and speediest. We would recommend this to Lord CAMPBELL, who might worthily introduce a bill giving concurrent jurisdiction to the Superior Courts in all demands at or above 10*l.* It would be a becoming addition to the Act of last session, which he was so instrumental in passing.

It will be seen by the LORD CHANCELLOR'S speech on the Law Reform to be proposed by the Government, that no further alterations or extensions of the New Procedure Act are contemplated, at least for the present.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE OF THE WRIT OF SUMMONS.

THE affidavit of the service of a writ of summons must in all cases (according to the case of Wakeley v. Teesdale) shew that the writ has been endorsed in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It ought to be in the following form:—

In the Queen's Bench,

Between { [John Nokes], plaintiff, and [Thomas Styles], defendant.

[John Jones], of in the county of [gentleman], maketh oath and saith, that he this deponent did on [Monday] the [first] day of [November], in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty [two], personally serve [Mr. Thomas Styles] the above-named defendant with a true copy of a Writ of Summons, which appeared to this deponent to have been regularly issued out of and under the seal of this honourable Court, at the suit of the above-named plaintiff against the above-named defendant, and dated the [twenty-fifth] day of [October] in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty [two], to which said writ and copy a memorandum was subscribed, and on which said writ and copy endorsements were made according to the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, a true copy of which writ, and of the memorandum thereto and several endorsements thereon, is hereunto annexed, marked [A]. And this deponent further saith, that he did afterwards on [Wednesday] the [third] day of [said month of November] endorse on the said writ the day of the month and week of such service, according to the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852.

Sworn, &c.

Note.—This form of affidavit should be inserted on p. 13 of KERR'S Common Law Procedure Act, some of the copies of that work not having the reprinted sheet.

AN ACTION AT LAW UNDER THE NEW PRACTICE.

ARTICLE II.

THE most simple course after issuing the writ of summons, is to serve the defendant or defendants therewith; but there are several other circumstances which may arise previously, and in these articles the order in which proceedings actually arise will, as far as it is at all convenient, be preserved.

CONCURRENT WRITS.

When it is desired to effect service of the writ speedily, and there are several defendants living in different places, or it is not known in which of several places the defendant will be found, it is very convenient to issue concurrent writs. The plaintiff is allowed this facility, for he may at any time, during six months from the issuing of the original writ of summons, issue one or more concurrent writ or writs, each concurrent writ to bear teste of the same day as the original writ, and to be marked with a seal bearing the word "concurrent," and the date of issuing the concurrent writ, and such seal is to be impressed upon the writ by the proper officer of the court out of which the original writ issued. (Sec. 9.) If the doubt be whether the defendant is within the jurisdiction or not, concurrent writs of the same form would be of no use; to meet this case, a writ for service within the jurisdiction may be issued, and marked as a concurrent writ, with one for service out of the jurisdiction; and a writ for service out of the jurisdiction may be issued, and marked as a concurrent writ, with one for service within the jurisdiction. (Sec. 22.) But such concurrent writ, or writs, are only in force for the period during which the original writ in such action is in force; i.e. six months from its date. (Sec. 9.)

The concurrent writ or writs may be issued by the plaintiff or his attorney, and it seems that, whether issued at the same time as the original writ or not, another præcipe should not be delivered, but the officer should be requested to make a note of the issuing of the concurrent writ or writs on the præcipe for the original writ (Crow v. Crow, 1 D. & L. 709). It would seem, too, that if a concurrent writ or writs be not issued within "six months from the issuing of the original writ," no authority is given for issuing a concurrent writ.

RENEWAL.

No original writ of summons is in force for more than six months from the date thereof, including the day of such date (sec. 11), and therefore service should if possible be effected in that period. In some cases this cannot be done, and great inconvenience and hardship to plaintiffs would arise if in this event it were necessary to issue an entirely new writ, and thereby commence a new action. For, by many statutes, usually called "Statutes of Limitation," certain periods are limited within which actions in respect of the wrongs mentioned in the statutes must be brought. The purpose of these provisions is most desirable, indeed some such limitations are necessary in the modern complication of rights and liabilities: they are intended to prevent injustice and litigation by making indisputable the right of a person to advantages which he has enjoyed for a long time. It is not necessary at this point to enter into detail as to these limitations: their effect in taking away the plaintiff's remedy after he had issued an original writ of summons, was formerly prevented by issuing an alias, and, if necessary, a pluries writ. The original writ could only issue into one county, but the alias or either of the pluries writs might issue into a different county, and the plaintiff might continue issuing the latter until the defendant had been served.

At the present time, instead of continuing the original writ of summons by these means, if any defendant therein named has not been served therewith, the original or concurrent writ of summons may be renewed at any time before its expiration for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ, by being marked with a seal bearing the date of the day, month, and year of such renewal, such seal being impressed upon the writ by the proper officer of the court out of which such writ issued, upon delivery to him by the plaintiff or his attorney of a præcipe, in such form as was formerly required to be delivered upon the obtaining of an alias writ; and a writ of summons so renewed remains in force and is available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of the action is limited, and for all other purposes, from the date of the issuing of the original writ of summons. (sec. 11.) The form of the præcipe will be the same as that for an original writ of summons (ante, p. 99), except that the word Renewed should precede "writ of summons."

Three questions involving some doubt may be briefly mentioned here; first, if the original writ be renewed, is a concurrent writ previously issued thereby renewed also? secondly, if a concurrent writ be renewed and not the original, does the renewed concurrent writ thereby become an original? or, thirdly, is the original in the last case thereby renewed also? Probably the first question is to be answered in the negative; the other two are rather more difficult, but the negative seems to be the better reply to them also. In short, probably the true construction is, that the writ produced to the officer and impressed with the seal by him is alone renewed, whether it be original or concurrent: if this is so, it is necessary in all cases of renewal to produce the original writ, and when it is desired to renew the concurrent writ or writs also, they also must be sealed.

AMENDMENT.

If, by mistake or inadvertence, either of the forms of writ of summons, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, be substituted for any other of them, such mistake or inadvertence is not an objection to the writ, or any other proceeding in such action, but the writ may, upon an ex parte application to a judge, whether before or after any application to set aside such writ or any proceeding thereon, and whether the same or notice thereof has been served or not, be amended by such judge without costs. (Sec. 21.) The subject of amendment is introduced here, as the writ of summons may in some respects be amended before service, and this section expressly includes an application to amend before service of the writ.

It sometimes happens that a writ of summons is issued in time to save the Statute of Limitations, but subsequently, when it would be too late to save the statute by issuing a new writ, an error is discovered in that which has been issued. To prevent the plaintiff's thus losing his remedy is one of the main purposes for which amendments are sought. Another is to save the expense and time of again going through such steps in the action as have been taken where the proceedings subsequent to the writ are regular.

The above provision is confined to the substitution of one form of writ for another; but its language is not such as to make it clear what proceedings in the action the Courts are to amend; and as the copy of the writ is not mentioned, perhaps the Courts will refuse, as they have hitherto done, to amend that. If so, a fresh service will be necessary. (Eccles v. Cole, 8 M. & W. 537.)

Another kind of amendment may, however, be made, for if the plaintiff or his attorney omit to insert in or indorse on any writ or copy thereof any of the matters required by the Common Law Procedure Act to be inserted therein or indorsed thereon, such writ or copy is not on that account to be held void, but it may be set aside as irregular or amended, upon application to the Court out of which the same issued, or to a Judge; and such amendment may be made upon any application to set aside the writ, upon such terms as to the Court or Judge may seem fit. (Sec. 20.) This provision expressly includes the copy of the writ, but it is confined to cases of omission. It has been doubted whether this section includes an application by the plaintiff before service of the writ, on the ground that the last clause limits the power of amendment to applications by the defendant to set aside the writ, but probably the clause has not this effect.

Previous to these enactments, the Superior Courts exercised a power of amendment of the writ in certain cases; but the power had frequently been questioned, and the practice of the three Courts on this subject has not been uniform. The numerous cases on the subject are collected in a long note to Wood v. Hume, 4 D. & L. 136. Now, however, the power of amendment is given in general terms, and probably the difficulties above mentioned as arising under ss. 20 and 21, will be removed by this provision: — It shall be lawful for the Superior Courts of Common Law, and every Judge thereof, and any Judge sitting at Nisi Prius, at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not; and all such amendments may be made with or without costs, and upon such terms as to the Court or Judge may seem fit; and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining, in the existing suit, the real question in controversy between the parties, shall be so made. (Sec. 222.) How wide or how narrow a construction will be put on this section it is impossible to say; its terms are so general, as to support whatever system of amendment the Courts think fit to adopt, and are quite large enough to include any amendment of the writ and copy before or after service.

Although the writ appear quite regular to the plaintiff or his attorney, he may still be unable to serve it personally on the defendant, who sometimes keeps out of the way to evade service. In such a case the remedy used to be slow and expensive; an application to the Court for a writ of distringas, and, when granted, proceeding thereupon. This will be briefly noticed, before stating the new substitute, in the next article. G. T.

NOTE.—A sentence in the first article (p. 99, col. 2), as to the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, is not quite sufficiently accurate standing alone, and considering the position in which it occurs. It would be better thus:—The jurisdiction of the Superior Courts is frequently said to extend over the whole of England and Wales, except the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and this, speaking briefly, is the best general statement that can be given; but from the nature of personal actions, and from the evident intention of the Act, there is little doubt that the whole of England and Wales is within the jurisdiction in the meaning of this section.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following ingenious advertisement appears in the Times of Monday last. Can any reader discover the name of the person whose modesty permits him only to announce the initials "G. M.?" We should like to give him the benefit of publicity:—

LAW IMPROVEMENT. — The recent alterations enable the advertiser, a solicitor of experience, to undertake the recovery of tradesmen's accounts, &c. on terms much more economical than the County Courts, and without risk or trouble. Moneys received paid over immediately.—Address, G. M. 42, Duncan-terrace, City-road. N.B. Articled clerk wanted.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COUNTY COURTS.

FRIDAY, Dec. 26.—In reply to a question, Mr. WALPOLE stated that Government had it in contemplation to extend the jurisdiction of the courts for the recovery of small debts.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.—At the commencement of the last Parliament there were thirty-seven returns petitioned against, and more than one-half of the petitions then were presented on the last day allowed by law. This evening (Thursday) is the latest period in this Parliament at which, by the standing orders, such petitions can be received, and yet, exclusive of the number which probably will then make their appearance, thirty-nine have already been presented. These affect no fewer than fifty-three seats, without reckoning the case of Knaresborough. Of these thirty-four are held by Liberals, and nineteen by Conservatives. There is not a single complaint against the returns for the English counties, all the petitions relating to boroughs and cities; and only two as regards the Irish, namely, Clare County and Waterford County. Of the thirty-nine petitions, twenty-seven are English, one Scotch, and eleven Irish. The allegations of the petitions are chiefly bribery, treating, and intimidation; but in the case of the Hon. R. E. Boyle (Frome), it is alleged that as holding the office of secretary of "the Most Illustrious Order of St. Patrick" he is disqualified. The hon. gentleman, notwithstanding, sat in the last Parliament.

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

ANOTHER Rating Case was reported last week. A railway company had built bridges over their line on land conveyed to them in fee, but with a reservation of the use of the bridges. The road over the bridges was paved by the Paving Commissioners. There were walls on each side. Stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 3, enabled the commissioners to rate all "dead walls and void spaces of ground," and also all "public buildings." It was held by all the Court, that the walls of the bridge were rateable as "dead walls;" and by JERVIS, C.J. that they were rateable also as "void spaces;" and by MAULE, J. as "public buildings," within the meaning of the above statute. (Arnett v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 80.)

Three Registration Appeals were reported last week. The question raised by Hamilton v. Bass was, whether the cost of collecting rent, and of repairs, must be deducted from the gross sum, in order to ascertain the clear yearly value. According to this case, A. and twenty-nine others were owners in fee of premises which let for 63*l.* per annum; the average cost of repairs was 4*l.* per annum; 26*s.* were paid annually to a person for collecting the rents. The Court held that repairs were, but the costs of collection were not, to be deducted, the latter being a voluntary charge. It was observed by the Court, in the course of the argument, that the question of value in the county franchise differed from that in the borough franchise in this, that in the former the question was the value to the owner; in the latter, the value to the tenant.

In the case of Collins v. Thomas, 20 Law T. Rep. 80, the reporter has fallen into a strange error. He states the decision to be the very reverse of what it was. But a more full and correct report appears to-day. It should have been stated thus:—A house and garden in a borough were held under the same landlord by one demise, but the garden was separated from the house by a public road. The question was as to the meaning of the words "occupied therewith," in sec. 27 of the Reform Act. It was contended by Mr. KERR, for the appellant, that "therewith" meant locality, and not time; that it contemplated contiguous land, and not land situate at any other part of the borough; that if it did not mean this, the word "therewith" was mere surplusage, for the section would have effected the same objects without it. But the Court was of a contrary opinion, and held it to be a sufficient qualification, and not a bad one, as was wrongly stated in the report of last week.

Lambert v. The Overseers of St. Thomas, New Sarum, 20 Law T. Rep. 80, was a question as to the validity of a notice of objection. The reader is aware that a notice is not to be avoided if so written that it might be commonly understood. In this case it was in the following form:—"Take notice, I object to your name being retained on the list of voters for the parish of St. Thomas, New Sarum, in the southern division of the county of Wilts." It was sent to a person who claimed to vote for the northern division. Nevertheless, it was held, that, though not strictly in form, it was capable of being commonly understood, and therefore sufficient.

COUNTY TREASURERS.—A Parliamentary return, procured by Mr. Frewen, contains an abstract of the accounts of the several country treasurers in England and Wales for the year ending Michaelmas 1851. The total assessment for the county rate in the year was 59,994,986*l.* 6s. 5d. The receipts, with the balance in hand, amounted to 1,489,437*l.* 11s. 6d. The disbursements were 1,355,615*l.* 12s. 11½d. The prosecution of prisoners in the year came to 190,358*l.* 0s. 5½d. The maintenance of pauper lunatics amounted to 16,990*l.* 8s. 4½d. and the coroners cost in the year 54,451*l.* 2s. 8d.

RURAL POLICE.—From a return just published, it appears that 2,611 constables of all classes were employed in 1851, under the Act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, at a cost of 181,139*l.* For Wales there are 156 constables, at an expense of 8,794*l.*; making a total of 2,767 men, and a cost of 190,033*l.* Twenty-five counties have not adopted the Act, and are not, consequently, within the scope of this return.

TURNPIKE TRUSTS.—A Parliamentary paper was published on Tuesday, containing a return of the statistics of turnpike trusts in England and Wales up to the end of 1850. The total receipts in the year were 1,159,849*l.* and the expenditure 1,156,539*l.* with a bonded debt of 6,236,496*l.* and an unpaid interest of 1,574,560*l.* The corresponding items in the year 1849 were—receipts, 1,177,981*l.*; expenditure, 1,188,993*l.*; bonded debt, 6,382,647*l.*; unpaid interest, 1,587,010*l.*; and in 1837—receipts, 1,699,428*l.*; expenditure, 1,712,237*l.*; bonded debt, 7,011,989*l.*; and unpaid interest, 1,019,568*l.*

CAB REGULATIONS.—Mr. A'Beckett, the Southwark Magistrate, gave an important decision on Monday, on the railway-cab question. Hall, a driver, was summoned for plying for hire in an unlicensed place—to wit, within the terminus of the Brighton Railway at London Bridge. There was no denial that the place had not been appointed a standing by the Commissioners of Police. There were several interesting points in Mr. A'Beckett's statement. He remarked at the outset, that the railway company had taken advantage of the delay he had granted to obtain the opinions of the Solicitor-General and Mr. Bovill, which were adverse to the judgment he was about to give; but, of course, a Magistrate must decide for himself, and could not be led by such "opinions." In the present case, he pointed out how he thought the learned gentlemen had made a great mistake in the application of a particular decision respecting hackney-carriages. Mr. A'Beckett pronounced that Hall, acting under the company's sanction, had clearly violated the law. It was urged that railway companies made these illegal regulations to promote the convenience of the public; but he held it was not at all desirable that a certain number of privileged vehicles should thus be withdrawn from the control of the police commissioners, as the railway companies were under no responsibility to the public with respect to these cabs. Some of the regulations were misleading the public; railway numbers were placed on cabs different from the legal numbers, and this had frequently led to the summoning of innocent drivers, while the guilty escaped; the aggrieved passengers having mistaken the railway for the police number. Mr. A'Beckett had communicated with Sir Richard Mayne, who expressed his willingness to appoint a stand within the terminus, and even to adopt any regulations suggested by the company that appeared useful: but instead of taking advantage of this opportunity, the company had used the time in the endeavour to find means of evading the law. He inflicted on Hall the nominal fine of one shilling.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Summary.

WHERE a company, by a private Act, were empowered to borrow moneyupon bond, and it was provided that all the creditors by that security should be equally entitled to a claim or lien on the rates, tolls, &c. of the pier (for the construction of which the company was formed), in proportion to the sums secured, and without any preference by reason of priority of date or on any other account, it was held that nevertheless the right to sue upon the bond was not taken away. (Bolckow v. The Herne Bay Pier Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 79.)

We are glad to see that the Court has granted a new trial in The Guardians of Romford Union v. The British Guarantee Society, 20 Law T. Rep. 82, in which it had been held, by the learned judge who tried it, that although the condition of the policy was that the declarations were true, and by those declarations a certain mode of keeping accounts between the master and servant was stated as that which was observed, and afterwards that rule of accounting was discontinued, whereby the servant was enabled to perpetrate greater frauds, for which the master claimed of the society under his policy, that this statement was not a condition of the contract, and therefore that the society was liable. Without expressing an opinion upon the question of law, the Court thought that there should be a new trial, the better to ascertain the facts, and then probably the very important point raised will be formally heard and determined by the full Court. In the meanwhile, Guarantee Societies would do well to alter the form of their policies, and introduce an express condition that the manner of keeping the accounts stated in the declaration shall continue to be observed, or the policy to become void. Without this, there will be no end to frauds, for, having the guarantee, masters will become indifferent to the accounts, and thus tempt servants to dishonesty.

WINDING UP.

Two winding-up cases were reported last week. In Ex parte Winthrop, 20 Law T. Rep. 78, A. a director, by an arrangement with the directors, on August 15, 1845, paid 3,000*l.* in to the company's account, the same being stated to be advanced in equal proportions by A., B. and seven other directors. On August 25, it was resolved that each party making such advance should be allowed sixty shares as a security for the same, with liberty to retain such shares in satisfaction thereof, or to return them and claim the repayment of such advances out of the funds of the company. B. and the seven others gave a joint and several bond to A. for the amount and interest. The sum was not paid to A. when due, and another security was given, by way of a policy of assurance for 500*l.* on the life of one C., and a warrant of attorney by B. and the others to secure payment of the premiums. Default was made in payment of the premiums. An execution on the warrant of attorney was issued against B. and another only. B. paid the money and was placed upon the list of contributories in respect of the sixty shares. He now claimed to be a creditor in respect of the sum so paid by him; but it was held that he had retained the shares in satisfaction of the debt, and therefore was not entitled now to come in and prove it against the estate. Ex parte Fenn, 20 Law T. Rep. 78, was the case of a mining company on the cost-book principle. By one of the rules, a shareholder might determine his liability by giving notice to the purser of his desire to retire, and depositing with him the transfer of his shares and signing a relinquishment of his claims on the company in respect of the shares. A., having shares, signed a document, furnished to him at the company's office, relinquishing his shares. It was held that he was not a contributory in respect of those shares. Ex parte Wood, 20 Law T. Rep. 79, was an application to strike a name out of the list of contributories, on the ground that he had been induced to sign the subscribers' agreement under a misrepresentation of the facts, and that he had never paid anything on account of the shares. But he was properly held to be a contributory, and the motion was refused.

WINDING-UP OF RAILWAY AND JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.—Of the 150 Railway and Joint-stock Companies referred to be wound up by the Masters in Chancery, since 1848, about ten only have been so wound up, and that chiefly by compromise. The remainder are slowly progressing.

AMICABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention having been recently directed by a member of this society to a letter in your paper of Saturday, the 6th inst. signed "Investigator," which contains some very erroneous statements, I have to request the favour of your inserting this letter in reply thereto, in your next number.

Your correspondent, in the first paragraph of his communication, remarks that the Amicable Society "pays no commission to solicitors on the introduction of policies." This is not the case. The Amicable adopted the practice of paying commission in the year 1845, and has continued it ever since. In the same paragraph, he further remarks, that the society "professes to divide the entire profits of the office amongst the assured." In this he is correct. The entire profits are not only "professed" to be, but are actually divided amongst the members.

Your correspondent then refers to a policy effected by a client of his on the 9th October, 1832, for ten shares (2,000*l.*), at an annual premium of 161*l.* and complains that at his client's decease the total amount paid to his representatives was 2,227*l.* being an increase to the sum originally assured of only 227*l.* instead of 2,800*l.* (or one hundred and forty per cent.), "as he was led to expect by the society's prospectus." In answer to this assertion, I have simply to state that copies of the pamphlets and prospectuses issued to the public by the Amicable Society, in the course of the last twenty-one years, are now in my possession; and that not one of them contains any paragraph corresponding with, or similar to, that which "Investigator" has quoted in his letter; nor any statement which could lead to the expectation of such large additions to policies as are declared in that paragraph to have been made.

It is true, that the sums payable on claims prior to the society's last charter being obtained, were, in some years, the business of which was more than ordinarily profitable, much greater than they have been during a more recent period; and this was the case about the time when your correspondent's client is stated to have effected his assurance. But I have now before me the particulars of sums paid on claims in every year, from 1808 to 1852, and I find that the largest addition ever made to each share of 200*l.* in the course of the last forty-four years, was 160*l.* in 1820; and that the next largest addition ever made during the same period, was 137*l.* 4s. in 1832. In the year 1831, the addition per share of 200*l.* was 123*l.* 10s.; and in 1830, 80*l.* 14s. But looking back to 1819, I find that there was nothing paid in that year beyond the 200*l.* on each share. From this statement it will be evident that the payments on claims were continually liable to fluctuation, which was caused by the principle upon which the society at that time divided its annual surplus, viz. to give to every policy, on its becoming a claim, its proportion of the profits of each year, according to the number of shares upon which the claim arose; and, year after year, the dividend, whether it rose or fell, was advertised in the prospectus of the society. The Amicable never had recourse to puffing advertisements, in order to attract public attention, but simply published a plain statement of facts. The method, however, of dividing profits to which I have referred, was at length felt to be injurious, owing to the influx of new members, many of whom were advanced in years, and who were induced, by the large sums then paid on claims, to enrol themselves in the society; and it was consequently found necessary to apply to the Crown for a new charter, which was obtained in the year 1836, whereby it was directed that the profit or loss of the society for each year should be calculated upon an average of the results of the preceding seven years. The alteration thus produced in the mode of dividing profits, necessarily had the effect of diminishing the additions to policies for several years, but, on the other hand, the prosperity and security of the society have been more firmly established, and it is gratifying to know that the surplus annually divisible among the members is steadily and progressively increasing. It should be observed that by the charter plan of the society no distinction is ever made on account of the time an assurance in this office has been in force. If a person who effected a policy for ten shares in the year in which the claim alluded to by "Investigator" was paid, had died before the expiry of that year, his representatives would have been entitled to the same amount as was paid upon the policy on which fifteen years' premiums had been received by the office. The requirement of entrance-money has been entirely discontinued since the year 1837.

I will now make one or two very brief remarks upon the two concluding paragraphs in "Investigator's" letter. He states that at the death of his client in 1847, his representatives received a sum considerably less than the entrance-money and premiums must have amounted to with compound interest. It cannot, I think, be doubted that your correspondent must be very little acquainted with the principles and practice of life assurance, if he looks upon this as an extraordinary case, or one of hardship to the assured. Upon the same principle, the society would have had great cause for complaint, had his client died within the first year of his assurance, instead of having lived fifteen years. If some lives did not exceed the average expectation, how, I would ask, could any office bear the losses which arise from premature deaths?

Lastly, your correspondent expresses a hope that "professional men will contrast the tables and advantages of both old and young respectable offices, before they advise their clients to effect assurances in offices with their millions only to recommend them." It is neither my intention nor my inclination to discuss the relative merits of other institutions, whether old or young. Enough has been already written and published upon that subject within the last few months. The Amicable Society has no desire to enter into competition with professedly cheap offices, offering advantages which can never be realised; or with those who pay large commissions for the introduction of new business, thereby diminishing the profits of the assured. An institution which has stood the test of nearly 150 years, and whose annual accounts, after the payment of all its claims (which amount to between 70,000*l.* and 80,000*l.* per annum), and providing for every possible contingency, continue to shew an increased and increasing balance of assets, notwithstanding the competition for business among nearly 200 other insurance companies, must surely be sufficient to satisfy the mind of any person who desires to secure a provision for his family, after his decease, by means of life assurance.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

HENRY THOS. THOMSON,
Registrar of the Amicable Society.

COUNTY COURTS.

It appears from the case of Re White, 20 Law T. Rep. 83, that Mr. Commissioner LAW has discharged a debtor who had been committed for twenty-one days by the Judge of a County Court, for nonpayment of a debt, from which the defendant had been discharged by the Insolvent Court in January last. We are informed that this important question, now so frequently arising between the two jurisdictions, is about to be determined by an action to try the validity of such committals by the County Court.

MORE WORK FOR THE COUNTY COURTS.—Two Bills have just been printed by order of the House of Lords, brought forward by Lord Brougham, to give more business to the County Courts. The object is to facilitate proceedings in Chancery and to lessen the expense of such proceedings. One is called "County Courts Equitable Jurisdiction," and the other "County Courts Further Extension." Both Bills are waiting discussion in the House of Lords; they are, if passed, to take effect from the 11th of July next.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—On the practice to be observed for Production of Documents under the new procedure, the MASTER of the ROLLS stated, in Cowley v. Watts, 20 Law T. Rep. 75, that "hereafter all applications must be made in chambers in the first instance. The party requiring production would issue a summons, and the party required to produce would then put in a list of documents on affidavit. Forms for the summons and affidavit had been prepared. If any dispute should arise, the parties would then, and then only, come into court." And in Mackintosh v. The Great Western Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 77, upon the motion of the defendants, the Court ordered the production by the plaintiff, on oath, of certain documents and classes of documents specified in the notice of motion relating to the matters in question in the suit. Vice-Chancellor STUART said, "What the Act of Parliament authorised him to make would be an order for the production on oath by the plaintiff; that was, the plaintiff must, under the order, state more particularly on oath the nature of those documents which were in his possession. . . . All that he could do was to order him to produce them on oath, and to give him a reasonable time for that production. The time asked by the notice of motion was twenty-eight days, which he thought was too short."

Under sec. 6 of c. 86, and the 17th of the New Orders, where a bill written had been filed, praying an injunction, and the defendant had appeared, the Court directed interrogatories to be received and filed, although the printed bill had not been filed; "but of course the regulations of the statute in that respect will be strictly complied with." (Lambert v. Lomas, 20 Law T. Rep. 76.)

There are two cases as to the Practice of taking Evidence. In Wilkinson v. Stringer, 20 Law T. Rep. 76, Vice-Chancellor TURNER refused to examine witnesses viva voce where the case, as shewn by the pleadings, was not such an one that it would have directed an issue before the new practice. "The true view," he said, "to be taken of this provision of the Act of Parliament is to consider whether, if this case had been brought forward by bill, and the defendant had answered, and the parties had gone into evidence, the case was one on which the Court would have directed an issue on the question of fact raised by the pleadings. He would not examine witnesses viva voce on the mere speculation as to what evidence may come out on such examination."

In Mackintosh v. The Great Western Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 77, Vice-Chancellor STUART granted an application for the viva voce examination of witnesses upon the part of the defendants, although issue had been joined on the 18th of May, and a witness had already been examined de bene esse.

COMMON LAW.—New Procedure.—The Court of EX. has decided, in Pinhorn v. Souster, 20 Law T. Rep. 81, that the clauses relating to special demurrers are prospective only, and do not apply to such as were pending before the Act came into operation, which will be heard as before. "These sections," said PARKE, B. "must be read as if the word 'future' had been introduced before the word 'pleading,' and the cases now pending must be decided according to the law as it was at the time of the proceeding, and before the passing of this Act."

In Glen v. Lewis, 20 Law T. Rep. 81, it was held, that where a rule to plead several matters is required, it should be obtained and served before the time to plead has expired, otherwise judgment may be signed.

A case of considerable interest in the Law of Attorneys is that of Re Craven, 20 Law T. Rep. 83. On the taxation of a bill of costs between attorney and client, the Master disallowed a certain sum, on the ground of negligence. But the Court held that this was a question for a jury and not for the Master, and ordered a review of the taxation.

THE BAR AND THE ATTORNEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Lord Denman's letter seems to be received as a judgment—a case decided—that it is no longer a breach of professional etiquette in a barrister to see and advise clients (which mean the public), without the intervention of an attorney, heretofore the understood legitimate client of counsel. It is deeply to be regretted, and reciprocated alike by the respectable counsel and attorney, that his lordship should have countenanced such a proceeding.

The high-minded barrister, who has been taught to consider his profession an honorary one, opening to him the highest judicial position in the country, cannot but feel that his profession will be degraded by the proposed change; that now all rules and regulations by which respectability of practice was secured may be abrogated, and he may be called upon to sit by the side of an advertising barrister of cheap advice. The inferior grade of barristers will no doubt receive his lordship's letter as a boon, and turn it to purposes I am satisfied his lordship never even dreamt of. The intervention of the attorney has until now maintained the distinctive greatness of the English Bar, and now that barrier is to be broken. There are barristers who will not care to mix with the lower orders of society, so that they profit by it. Fancy the barrister bargaining with a poor wretch for the amount of fee to be paid, which must be in advance. No trust, for the barrister cannot recover; what a picture this will furnish! Already has one of these learned gentlemen adopted the free-trade cry (if not its principle), and established a cheap law society. Will the public benefit by it? No; what security has the public against the effect of bad advice? None. The public should know this; when it suits the purpose of the barrister, having given bad advice, he can call for protection, shielding himself as a member of an honorary profession. Really this is a state of things which should be settled, and without delay; the respectability of both branches of the Profession demands it. Individual disappointment in either branch cannot justify such a change. There has been nothing in the reforms of the law to warrant it. If the Bar complain of the attorney being an advocate, who is to blame for it? An attorney was in the old County and Local Courts an advocate. In the Lancaster Sheriffs' Court (and others also), held at Preston and Manchester, attorneys attended regularly, and received briefs from attorneys. At this period the Bar did not think it worth their while to attend these Courts, except on special retainer, which, as a rule, the public could not afford to give,—surely, then, the Bar, who have thus raised up attorney-advocates (not prohibited by law), cannot now complain of their following the occupation the Bar and the public obliged them to take up. The local Courts are open to the Bar,—let counsel attend, and rely upon the attorney (without seeking more), and I am of opinion, if the barrister so acting possesses ability, he need not fear having the support of the other branch of the Profession, and a general preference. But seek to interfere with the province of the attorney by asking for direct intercourse with the public, and immediately a collision of interests will take place, the result of which will not benefit the Bar. If the recent changes have injured the Bar in a pecuniary point of view (which, by the bye, till now was never thought to be a matter for consideration with counsel, and in my own experience as an attorney, I have found fees a delicate subject to speak upon), the changes for many years past have in a great degree affected the attorney, who has submitted thereto year after year without murmur and complaint; then, because the Legislature has deemed it desirable to reform the law in the recovery of debts, by which the attorney also materially suffers, this does not justify the Bar in leaving its vocation, and infringing upon the rights and privileges of the attorney, by seeking direct intercourse with the public, and advising on all subjects.

It will not be tolerated: the respectable portion of the Bar will be with the attorneys, who have justice on their side, and undoubted influence when united, which will induce legislative support and protection. As an attorney, and through your valuable medium, I solicit the attention of my professional brethren; and to those who are not members of the Law Association, I respectfully urge upon them to join, and by our united voice let us settle the question at issue, whether a number of barristers, irresponsible to the public, and without proof of ability (the only recommendation being the payment of a small fee, and the eating of a limited number of dinners during Term, entitling them to the wig and gown), shall usurp the rights and privileges of the attorney, who has to pay on his articles 120*l.* as premium, to serve five years diligently, and afterwards to pay further fees on admission, first undergoing an examination as to fitness (indeed, sacrificing a small fortune), and who also must pay a yearly tax, and is besides held responsible to his clients.

A SUBSCRIBER.

COUNSEL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Allow me to call your attention to what I consider a very improper practice of some counsel and pleaders. A case to advise on an action, with instructions to draw declaration or plea, if counsel or pleader considers it advisable to do so, is laid before him. He advises that plaintiff, or defendant, as the case may be, has no ground of action or valid defence, yet for all that draws declarations or pleas, which either the attorney himself has to pay, or his client. Surely this is not correct; if he advises against proceedings he ought not to draw the declaration or plea. I have had several such cases, and I can assure you they have placed me in an awkward position with my clients, who evidently thought it was done to make business—and I was obliged to pay the fees myself.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I fully concur in the observations of "J. G. B." on this subject, in his letter to you of the 17th inst.

Common honesty would but return the fees paid by those Masters Extraordinary who have been appointed within the last four or five years. I have paid nearly 10*l.* within the last two years for my appointment, and the allowing agents to stand for 20s. in the shoes of those who have paid ten times that amount, is an act of gross injustice to all, but more especially to those who cannot, within the last four or five years, have reaped much benefit from their appointment. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE JUNIOR BAR AND THE ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—If a barrister advises with a client, gets up his case, examines and subpœnas his witnesses, and then advocates the cause, and receives pay for his services, I should not like to be in his shoes if he were indicted for practising as an attorney without qualification, I am Sir, yours, &c.

A HINT IN TIME.

Worcester, Nov. 20, 1852.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

THERE is no date to the acceptance of a bill of exchange; but sometimes it may be important to prove the date of acceptance, as in Roberts v. Bethell, 20 Law T. Rep. 80, which was an action against the acceptor of a bill of four months, to which the defendant pleaded "infancy at the time of the acceptance," and it was proved that defendant came of age on the last day of grace but one. It was contended that the jury must presume the date of the acceptance from the date of its becoming due, and so the Court held. MAULE, J. said: "The acceptance is ordinarily not dated, and therefore there is nothing to prove the date of it. It is not, by any means, universal usage, that bills should be accepted on the day of their date; but it is usual to accept at some early opportunity after the drawing; therefore, where two persons, living in the same town, draw and accept a bill, the presumption is that the bill was accepted one or two days after the drawing, therefore the acceptance is evidence that the bill was accepted a few days after the drawing, regard being had to the distance at which the persons reside from each other. Therefore, on the same principle as that by which the day of the date is to be taken as the day of the issue of a bill, you may presume the acceptance to have been made at some early opportunity after the drawing. . . . This rule of evidence, though not founded in terms of express decisions, is on the principle on which the decisions have been come to, that the date of a document is evidence of the time of its execution." This is very important, and should be noted in Byles on Bills, or whatever is the text-book on this branch of the law used by the reader.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL LAWYER.

A PERSON against whom a decree had been made in the Ecclesiastical Court, which he had disobeyed, applied to the Court of Ex. for a prohibition to the Ecclesiastical Court, on the ground that he had received no previous notice of the decree, nor had an opportunity of shewing cause against its being made. But it was held, that as the Ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction, his proper remedy would be to apply to that Court in reference to any supposed irregularity, or to appeal.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—You have advocated for some time a repeal of the certificate duty. Whenever it is abolished, there should at the same time be given some protection to members of the Profession against "Sham Lawyers." The only protection now is by the Inland Revenue Commissioners suing for the penalties given by the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, s. 14 (a Revenue Act), which they are not very ready or willing to do. The section is as follows:—"Be it enacted, that every person who shall, for or in expectation of any fee, gain, or reward, directly or indirectly, draw or prepare any conveyance of or deed relating to any real or personal estate, or any proceeding in law or equity, other than and except serjeants-at-law, barristers, solicitors, attorneys, notaries, proctors, agents, or procurators, having obtained regular certificates, and special pleaders, draughtsmen in equity and conveyance, being members of one of the four inns of court, and having taken out the certificates mentioned in the said schedule to this Act annexed, at the head office in London of the commissioners for managing duties, &c. and other than and except persons solely employed to engross any deed, instrument, or other proceeding not drawn or prepared by themselves, and for their own account respectively, and other than and except public officers drawing or preparing official instruments applicable to their respective offices, and in the course of their duty, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of 50*l.*: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent any person or persons drawing or preparing any will or other testamentary paper, or any agreement not under seal, or any letter of attorney."

If the Inland Revenue Commissioners would only sue for the penalties, this section is enough to prevent such practitioners as Mr. Warren mentioned in the last volume of the Law Times, p. 167. But if the certificate duty is repealed, power should be given to any solicitor to sue for the penalties.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
Heckmondwike, near Leeds, W. B. I.

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I have observed, in your publication of the 20th instant, a very just reflection upon an instance of the latitude, in sales of property, capriciously, or partially, practised by our profession. Whether such irregularities proceed from an anxious solicitude to please a tedious class of clients, or from the less ingenuous motive of selfishness, both alike reprehensible, it is time that some restriction should be imposed upon these arbitrary terms of disposal. It is, indeed, enough, in respect of delicate difficulty, that the sale and transfer of property, by reason of the inherent legal requirements to a good title, is already the subject of voluminous and complicated antecedents, without the additional features of metaphysical phenomena, or arithmetical problems, being allowed to characterise these necessary transactions. Truly, and proudly, it may be the privilege of an Englishman to do what he likes with his own; but a fastidious angularity of mind, and mercenary exaction of treaty, although within the pale of the law, are together repugnant, not only to individuals, but to the principles of social right and national good. I must not, however, indulge, in a letter to you, in a politico-legal dissertation: suffice it, therefore, that I may find in your columns the means of invoking an attention, from my compeers and superiors, to the accepted phrase of "Conditions of Sale," and which attention, let us hope, may insure a beneficial and co-ordinate result with all other questions of law reform. Some definite legislative measure, declarative of the exact obligations upon a vendor, compiled from the present varied decisions, giving a succinct prefatory condition of sale, and dispensing with the really inventive and verbose documents now in use, would meet the approbation of all laymen, if not lawyers, and greatly facilitate that traffic in land, the inseparably concomitant elements of a speculative and commercial age. If my suggestions elicit your aid in behalf of this subject, or touch the chord of sympathy in the like cause in abler and higher minds, my object will be gained; in such hope, with much respect for your publication,

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

A Treatise on the Law and Practice of copyhold Enfranchisement. By George W. Cooke, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens and Norton.

Mr. Cooke is already known to the Profession as the author of several useful books on subjects connected with landed property and agriculture; he therefore has appropriately undertaken a Treatise on the Enfranchisement of Copyholds, which after the 1st of July next will be compulsory in the next admission, at the option either of the lord or tenant. Mr. Cooke has handled his subject judiciously. In some introductory chapters, he familiarly describes the origin and legal incidents of manors, the incidents of copyhold tenure, customary freeholds, the rights of the lord and the office and emoluments of the steward. Then he describes the manner in which enfranchisement is to be effected, and the evidence which it will be necessary to adduce before the assistant commissioners, arbitrators, and valuers for that purpose. Then follow the three Copyhold Enfranchisement Acts, with notes. The index is copious. Great learning and knowledge of the subject are displayed in every part of the work, and there is a practical air about it that recommends it to us, who are wont to look at law books with an eye to their practical use, and which makes it, in our estimation, very superior to any work on the subject that has yet appeared.

The Statutes for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity, for the Abolition of the Office of Master, and for the Relief of Suitors in Chancery; also the Trustees Extension Act, and other Acts, and all the New Orders, with Notes and copious Index. By Owen Davies Tudor, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. London: Crockford.

This being one of the series of the Law Times Editions of important Statutes, we observe our usual practice in such a case, and limit our notice of it to a description of its contents, without passing any opinion upon its merits, leaving the reader to form his own judgment, from that description, if the book appears likely to be useful to him in his practice.

It contains the whole of the New Chancery Practice, as settled by the statutes and the Orders, with the other Chancery statutes of the last session, as the Trustee Act, &c. It has this peculiarity in its arrangement, that the Orders are interspersed among the statutes to which they relate, but printed in a distinct type, so that the practitioner sees at one glance the language of the Act and the particular Orders by which it is carried into operation. This is, we believe, an unique feature of Mr. Tudor's edition, and probably a very useful one, for it is difficult for a stranger to hunt about among the Orders to find what are those that belong to or explain the various sections of the statute; and yet, without the Orders, the Act itself is unintelligible. Mr. Tudor has introduced, also, a large body of notes, that shew the alterations that have been made in the practice by the text of the statute or Orders to which they are subjoined. The new tables of fees are set out at the end, and an index, which is unusually copious, occupies no less than forty pages of close print, completing the volume.

THE POOR-LAW BOARD'S PROHIBITORY ORDER.—A deputation, emanating from a meeting held in Manchester on the 25th of October, had an interview by appointment with Sir John Trollope at the Poor-law office, on Wednesday, for the purpose of requesting the total and immediate revocation of the Prohibitory Order issued by the Poor-law Board, on the 25th of August last, on the ground "That it can only be carried out through the sacrifice of all discretion and humanity by boards of guardians, and the surrender of all right of control or opinion by the ratepayers." The deputation was introduced by Mr. Heywood, M.P. and represented unions containing upwards of 2,000,000 of population. After hearing the deputation, Sir John Trollope called attention to the fact that there are upwards of 600 unions in England and Wales under their superintendence, and that this order is already in operation in 500 of them, and that, therefore, this order was not anything new, and that in these 500 unions the order was found to work beneficially both to the ratepayer and rate receiver; that one great object of the order was to teach the poor habits of self-dependence, and that they might learn to join benefit clubs, and lay up small sums of money in savings' banks, in order to provide against temporary depression and other unforeseen casualties. That article 1 the Poor-law Board would be not unwilling to relax in cases of hardship; and as to article 5 he referred to the abuses existing prior to the Poor-law Amendment Act, of giving relief in aid of wages, that it was a subject that had frequently been discussed in Parliament, and that it was very hard to make a man, a very little better off than the person relieved, pay towards the support of the latter. In answer to observations as to article 6 being impracticable, he said the Poor-law Board did not intend the setting up of pauper labour against independent labour, or that the former should in any way be brought into competition with the latter; and that their opinion was that it would be more satisfactory to the poor man, as well as to the ratepayer, that the former should be employed, and not eat the bread of idleness; and that the most suitable employment would be the sweeping of streets, and the preparing of materials for the repair of roads. Sir John also further explained that article 10 was intended to bring the Poor-law Board and boards of guardians into more harmonious working, and to provide for particular hardships that might arise under the other articles. In answer to a question from Mr. Cobbett, M.P. Sir John Trollope assured the deputation that boards of guardians should be held harmless to the present time, and that instructions should be given to the auditors accordingly.

CREDIT SYSTEM.—On Policies for the whole of Life, one half of the Annual Premiums for the first five years may remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy, or may be paid off at any time

LOANS.—Loans are advanced on Policies which have been in existence five years and upwards, to the extent of nine-tenths of their value.

BONUSES.—Five Bonuses have been declared; at the last in January 1855, the sum of 131,125l. was added to the Policies, producing a Bonus varying with the different ages from 24½ to 55 per cent. on the Premiums paid during the five years.

PARTICIPATION IN PROFITS.—Policies participate in the Profits in proportion to the number and amount of the Premiums paid between every division, so that if only one year's Premium be received prior to the books being closed for any division, the Policy on which it was paid will obtain its due share. The books close for the next division on 30th June, 1860, therefore those who effect Policies before the 30th June next, will be entitled to one year's additional share of Profits over later assurers.

APPLICATION OF BONUSES.—The next and future Bonuses may be either received in cash, or applied at the option of the assured in any other way.

NON-PARTICIPATING.—Assurances may be effected for a fixed Sum at considerably reduced rates, and the Premiums for Term Policies are lower than at most other Safe Offices.

PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS.—Claims paid thirty days after proof of death, and all Policies are indisputable except in cases of fraud.

INVALID LIVES may be assured at rates proportioned to the increased risk.

POLICIES are granted on the lives of persons in any station, and of every age, and for any sum on one life, from 50l. to 10,000l.

PREMIUMS may be paid yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; but if a payment be omitted from any cause, the Policy can be revived within fourteen months.

The Accounts and Balance Sheets are at all times open to the inspection of the Assured, or of persons desirous to assure.

A copy of the last Report, with a Prospectus and Forms of Proposal, can be obtained of any of the Society's Agents, or will be forwarded free by addressing a line to

We have received several letters complaining of the new Tables of Fees in the Common Law Courts. THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1852.

LAW TIMES OFFICE,
Friday night, 12 o'clock.

We are indebted to an express edition of the Sun, for the long-looked for financial statement of the Government. The Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes to reduce:—

The Malt Tax to one-half.
The Tea Duty from 2s. 2½d. to 1s. on the lb.
Hop Duty to be abolished.
The Property Tax to be reduced to 5½d. in the pound on Schedules B. D. E: to commence at 50*l.* per annum on property, and at 100*l.* per annum, on industrial incomes, and to be extended to Ireland:

The deficiencies in the revenue, thus occasioned, to be supplied by raising the House Tax to 1s. in the pound on shops, and 1s. 6d. on private dwellings; extending its operation to every house of 10*l.*

There is to be no change in the Poor-rate or County-rates.

COSTS UNDER THE COMMON LAW PROCEDURE ACT.

A correspondent has anticipated in part the request preferred in another article for copies of taxed and other Bills of Costs under the New Procedure.

He has sent us particulars of the fees allowed by the Masters, "from which," he says, "it will be seen that, excepting the loss of the Term fee, there is a very slight deduction from the old scale, the abolition of the declaration, rule to plead, and notice of declaration accounting for the difference.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

WRITS SPECIALLY INDORSED.

It seems that, however long may be the requisite indorsement of particulars on these writs, the Masters allow no additional costs on taxation. But we are informed that some of the Attorneys in the country, to whom writs have been sent for service, have charged 10s. for making copies of such writs, instead of the usual charge of 5s. on the ground that they have so much more to copy in the special indorsement. Now, inasmuch as this charge is not allowed on taxation, it ought not to be made by the agent; and if it is persisted in, the consequence will be that those who have occasion to transmit writs into the country for service will send the copies with them, and thus deprive the Agent altogether of the fee for copying.

It is certainly a great injustice that no extra costs should be allowed for a special indorsement, and not even the cost of the parchment, which is often required to be of considerable size. We presume it was through some oversight that the statute used the word "indorsed," but certainly sufficient security would have been provided by the annexation of particulars, instead of an indorsement of them, while it would have saved much cost and inconvenience. Could not this be amended by a short clause in Lord Brougham's Bill?

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

So it was, after all, a false alarm. The Lord Chancellor was misunderstood by the reporters, and no wonder, for in the House of Lords the best speakers are heard with difficulty, so badly is it built. From the explanation given by his Lordship on Monday, it appears that no other change is intended than that of the name. Certainly the title proposed to be substituted is not very euphonious, although it expresses its meaning; but wherefore should it not be simply "Commissioners for taking affidavits," &c.?

Our agitated readers may now recover their calmness: they are not going to be hurt.

ATTORNEYS' BILLS OF COSTS.

It is manifest, from the many letters of inquiry brought to us by every post from all parts of the country, that the Profession is in a state of bewilderment upon the recent changes, and more especially perplexed how to make out their bills; what charges they may, and what they ought, to make. This difficulty has been growing for some time, but it has now attained its height.

It has occurred to us whether the Law Times might not usefully come to the help of the Profession in this strait, as thus:—The old scales of costs are practically worthless. In almost every department of the law a new one is wanted. Portions of the costs can only be settled by taxation, but others are almost conventional, being determined by the custom and common consent, as it were, of the Profession.

Now if our readers will give us the necessary assistance (for the plan will depend wholly upon their furnishing the information), we propose, by means of the Law Times, to frame a complete Table of Costs for the general use and guidance of the Profession.

Published in these columns, as we receive them, they will be open to objections from any quarter, and these being considered, they may be amended, and adopted, and finally issued in a little volume for practical use.

The first department in which it is required is that of the Common Law, then Equity, then Conveyancing, &c.

To frame a complete table of Common Law Costs, as adapted to the new Procedure, it is necessary that our readers should send us copies of any bills of costs, both of plaintiff and defendant, which may have been taxed, as between party and party, and as between attorney and client.

If they will do this, they will oblige us, and serve many of their brethren who are now sorely perplexed how to make out a bill.

COSTS IN EQUITY.

We learn from divers letters from Solicitors, especially in the country, that there is a great want of some information as to the costs of the new Procedure in Chancery, and especially of proceedings by claim for foreclosure or other objects. They need this knowledge to direct their judgments in resolving whether they ought to proceed with divers cases that come before them, and in which they should be mainly guided by the amount of costs they would be likely to involve.

We are sure that it will be esteemed a favour by their brother practitioners, and we should feel it to be an obligation conferred upon ourselves, if any of our readers who have had bills of costs taxed and settled under the new procedure, or even bills made out and not taxed, would forward to us a copy for publication here, and thus assist those who are seeking the information they have gained by experience. It will not be necessary to give any names or descriptions that appear in the bills of costs, so that there would be no violation of confidence. The bills of costs in County Court appeals, which we obtained in like manner through favour of our readers, and published some time since, have proved very serviceable to many, and those we now ask for would be still more so.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE.

The newspaper report of Lord BROUGHAM's speech upon the introduction of his Bill for the Amendment of the Law of Evidence conveyed but a very imperfect conception of the extent of the measure thus prefaced. The Bill itself is now before us, and when we have given a short abstract of its provisions, our readers will agree with us that more valuable improvements in the practice of the law have never been proposed to the Legislature, and we trust they will meet with the hearty concurrence of both Houses of Parliament, and that soon after the recess it may be our pleasant task to congratulate the Profession on their becoming the law, and that Lord BROUGHAM will thus add another to the many laurels he has won in the field of Law Reform.

It first proposes to remove the few remaining defects in the Law of Evidence, defects which we have had repeated occasion to bring under the notice of our readers, and for which we then proposed certain remedies, most of which are adopted in the present Bill.

1st. It makes husbands and wives "competent and compellable" to give evidence in all cases, except "in any criminal proceeding, or in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery." But it sets a limit to this evidence at the point where it becomes objectionable, as being a violation of the confidence that ought to exist between husband and wife, and which the law is bound so far to respect as to hold communications between them to be privileged, as are those between attorney and client, and accordingly the Bill provides that neither shall be compelled "to disclose any communication" made to the other during marriage—that is to say, evidence of acts done, and of communications with, third parties, will be admissible, but not communications inter se.

2nd. Great practical difficulties often arise from the rule, that you may not discredit your own witness, even although he is obviously hostile, and is perverting the truth purposely for your injury. The bill proposes to cure this defect, by providing that in such case the party calling the witness "may cross-examine and put leading questions to him, if he appears to the Court to be adverse to the party; and the party may likewise, at the discretion of the Court, contradict his own witness by other evidence; and may also, at the like discretion, prove that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before the last-mentioned proof can be given, the statements must be related to the witness, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present; and he must be asked whether he has made such statement or statements to that effect; and if he has, he must be allowed to explain them."

At present, if a witness is cross-examined on a matter affecting his credit, the party is bound by his answer, and cannot put in evidence to contradict him. The purpose of this rule was to prevent trumpery inquiries; but practically it has produced some injustice, which this bill proposes to remove by providing that a witness so cross-examined "may be contradicted by other evidence, though the subject-matter of such examination and contradiction may be collateral to the matter in question." But a power is given to the Court to stop such cross-examination and contradiction "if it considers the inquiry irrelevant."

Again, a witness may be cross-examined as to his having made, on other occasions, statements inconsistent with his present testimony, or calculated to affect his credit, without the party cross-examining being compelled to declare whether the statements were so made verbally, or were reduced to writing; but if it should appear that they were in writing, then it must be produced.

3rd. But the most practically useful provision, and the greatest improvement in the law of evidence, is that contained in the 14th section. At present, as the reader is aware, a witness is not compellable to answer any question, the answer to which might, even by the remotest probability, tend to criminate him. The consequence of this is continually to exclude the truth where it is most necessary to justice. Lord BROUGHAM's Bill proposes to remove this great obstacle to the administration of justice, by enacting "that no witness shall be protected from answering any question" on any ground; but protects him against any evil consequences of telling the truth, by providing that "no answer to any such question shall be admissible in evidence in any proceeding against him (except perjury assigned upon such answer), or shall subject him to any punishment, or shall justify his detention by the Court, except on the ground of perjury, prevarication, or contempt;" but the Court is empowered to stop any such questions or answers, if it should consider the inquiry irrelevant.

4th. Every practitioner is aware of the present difficulties and impediments that lie in the way of proof of handwriting. The Bill proposes to remove these by enacting that the handwriting of any person may be proved or disproved by any witness, who, by having seen him write, or by having seen writings purporting to be his, upon which the witness has acted or been charged, has acquired a sufficient knowledge of his handwriting to enable him to express a belief upon the subject. It may also be proved or disproved by comparing the document with any writings either proved to be his, or admitted or treated as such, by the party against whom the evidence is offered, and such writings may be used for the purposes of comparison, although they may not be admissible as evidence in the cause, and the comparison may be either by witnesses acquainted with the handwriting, or by witnesses skilled in deciphering handwriting, or by the jury, or, if there be no jury, by the Court. Any person whose handwriting is disputed may be required to write in court. Handwritings more than thirty years old may be proved by comparison with writings that have come from the proper custody, and purporting to be genuine, and to have been generally respected and acted upon as such by persons who have had an interest in knowing the fact. And in all cases of comparison of handwriting, the Court and the jury "may respectively exercise their judgment on the resemblance or difference of the writings produced, with respect to the general character of the handwriting, the form of the letters, the orthography of the words, and the style of the composition, and also on the fact of one or more of the documents being written in a feigned hand." But where writings are used to disprove handwriting by comparison, they must have been written ante litem motam.

5th. A single witness is to be sufficient in law to prove any fact in any cause or proceeding, except in orders of affiliation.

Should not Treason also be excepted from this sweeping enactment?

6th. A summary proceeding is provided for the discovery of documents, so as to avoid the costly and troublesome process of a bill of discovery. It is proposed that, upon affidavit, a summons may be taken out calling upon the other party to say whether he has any, and if any what, documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in dispute, and why any such documents should not be produced for inspection by, or if necessary to be stamped by, the party taking out the summons; and at any time before trial either party, on affidavit that he cannot proceed to trial safely without the information required, may take out a summons calling upon his opponent to show cause why he should not, prior to the trial, become examined on oath as to the matters in dispute, by the party taking out the summons, in the presence of some examiner specially appointed by the Judge, and such examination is to be conducted in the same manner as with a witness about to go abroad, and not expected to be present at the trial.

7th. No document more than ten years old is to be rejected on the ground of absence of, or defect in, stamp. In other words, there is to be a statute of limitations to stamp objections, so often the means of defeating justice, and inflicting grievous wrong on innocent persons.

Such are the provisions of this admirable measure which relate to the improvement of the Law of Evidence. There are many more, affecting other improvements in procedure and practice, to which we will direct the reader's attention next week, this article having already exceeded our limits.

AN ACTION AT LAW UNDER THE NEW PRACTICE.

ARTICLE III.

PROCEEDING WITHOUT PERSONAL SERVICE.

1. DEFENDANT WITHIN THE JURISDICTION.

The next proceeding to be mentioned is one of the leading alterations which the new procedure has made, namely, the mode of proceeding where personal service of the writ cannot be effected, but the defendant is believed to be within the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts, and the writ has come to his knowledge, or he wilfully evades service of it.

In such a case formerly, the next step was an application for a writ of distringas. This application was made to the Court out of which the writ of summons issued, or some judge of that Court, and was founded on affidavit. If the application were granted, the writ of distringas issued in accordance to a precipe; it was usually directed to the sheriff of the county in which the defendant was supposed to be, and its purpose was simply to compel the defendant to appear to the writ of summons. The officer to whom the writ was directed, made distress on the defendant's goods to the amount of 40s. if any were found, and served him with the writ if he could be found; and if he could not be found, then the writ was left for him. If a distress were made, or if the writ were served on defendant personally, the plaintiff might cause an appearance to be entered for him; but if no distress could be made, and personal service of the distringas could not be made, the officer to whom it was directed made a return to the Court to that effect, and then, by application to the Court on affidavit, the plaintiff obtained leave to enter an appearance for the defendant.

This complicated machinery was abolished by sec. 24 of the Common Law Procedure Act, and, in place of it, it is provided that it shall be lawful for the plaintiff to apply from time to time on affidavit to the Court out of which the writ of summons issued, or to a Judge; and in case it shall appear to such Court or Judge that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service, and either that the writ has come to the knowledge of the defendant, or that he wilfully evades service of the same, and has not appeared thereto, it shall be lawful for such Court or Judge to order that the plaintiff be at liberty to proceed as if personal service had been effected, subject to such conditions as to the Court or Judge may seem fit. (Sec. 17.)

The application for this order, whether made in Term or vacation, may be to a single Judge at chambers. (Smeaton v. Collier, 1 Ex. 457.) The affidavit necessary to support the application will be very similar to that formerly required in order to obtain a writ of distringas; and as it is very long, and must greatly vary according to the circumstances of each case, a form will not be given. The main requirements of the affidavit to obtain a distringas were as follow: it should shew that the writ of summons and indorsements were regular by annexing copies or setting them out (Wakely v. Teesdale, 2 L. M. & P. 56); the defendant's correct name, and his business or occupation; that three calls had been made at the defendant's dwelling-house or place of residence; that at each of these the purpose of the call was explained, and what was actually said in doing so; that on each of the two first calls a day and hour were appointed when the next call would be made; that on the last call a copy of the writ was left; that it was believed (and the grounds for the belief, if they were not already shown by what took place on the calls) that the defendant was keeping out of the way to evade personal service, and that he had not appeared to the writ. Positive affidavits will be sufficient for the purpose of an application to proceed without personal service; but where to proceed will now also be obtainable on showing reasonable efforts to serve the defendant personally, and that the writ has come to his knowledge. In this latter case, the Courts will probably be less strict as to the calls having been made, and as to the circumstances attending them, or the circumstances attending other attempts at personal service.

On such an order being made, the plaintiff is precisely in the same position as if he had effected personal service, the effect of which will be afterwards considered, and the order will usually be absolute in the first instance, and will not require service. (Barringer v. Handley, 16 Jur. 1023; S.C. 20 Law T. Rep. 81; Taylor v. Rogers, 20 Law T. Rep. 201.)

II. DEFENDANT OUT OF THE JURISDICTION.

It has been generally supposed that the above (17th) section is confined to cases where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction. This is not expressly enacted; and probably it will be questioned when a case occurs in which the defendant resides abroad, and reasonable efforts have been made to serve him personally, but it cannot be shewn that the writ has come to his knowledge; or where a defendant residing abroad has appeared to the writ, and it cannot be shewn that he is living abroad in order to defeat and delay his creditors. This last-mentioned state of circumstances may well arise where the defendant is a foreigner living in his own country.

There is a provision, however, applied expressly to cases where the defendant resides out of the jurisdiction, for in such cases the Court or Judge, upon being satisfied by affidavit that there is a cause of action which arose within the jurisdiction, or in respect of the breach of a contract made within the jurisdiction, and that the writ has been personally served upon the defendant, or that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service thereof upon the defendant, and that it has come to his knowledge, and either that the defendant wilfully neglects to appear to such writ, or that he is living out of the jurisdiction, in order to defeat and delay his creditors, may direct from time to time that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to proceed in the action in such manner, and subject to such conditions as to such Court or Judge may seem fit, having regard to the time allowed for the defendant to appear being reasonable, and to the other circumstances of the case. (Secs. 18 & 19.) In proceeding under these sections, it is necessary in all cases, whether the defendant has been served personally or not, that the affidavit should satisfy the Court or Judge that there is a cause of action which arose within the jurisdiction or in respect of the breach of a contract made within the jurisdiction, and either that the defendant wilfully neglects to appear, or that he is living out of the jurisdiction, in order to defeat and delay his creditors. Where the defendant has not been served personally, it is also necessary to satisfy the Court or Judge that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service, and that the writ has come to the defendant's knowledge. The belief that these, or such as are requisite in the case, are facts, and the grounds of such belief should be shewn by the affidavit: probably the efforts to effect personal service should be similar to those mentioned above as required where the defendant is within the jurisdiction.

It would be extremely inconvenient were it required that this affidavit should be made in England; but the Courts have always received affidavits sworn before a foreign Judge or other public officer authorised by the laws of the country where they were made, to take affidavits. It is necessary, however, to authenticate the signature of the officer taking the affidavit, and his authority to administer the oath and take the affidavit. This can be done either by an affidavit made in this country, or by the certificate of a notary public (Re parte Worsley, 2 H. Bl. 275), or of a British Consul-General or Consul (6 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 20). It seems that before the Common Law Procedure Act a British Consul had only the authority of a notary public, and could not, therefore, take an affidavit in a cause. (Le Veux v. Berkeley, 5 Q.B. 836.) But by this Act, any affidavit for the purpose of enabling the Court or a Judge to direct proceedings to be taken against a defendant residing out of the jurisdiction, may be sworn before any Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or Consular Agent, for the time being appointed by her Majesty in any foreign port or place; and every affidavit so sworn by virtue of this Act may be used, and shall be admitted in evidence, saving all just exceptions, provided it purport to be signed by such Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul, or consular agent, upon proof of the official character and signature of the person appearing to have signed the same. (Sec. 25.)

The jurat at the foot of such an affidavit may be as follows:—

Sworn by virtue of "the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852," at a port (or place) in the kingdom (or as the case may be) of this day of one thousand eight hundred and fifty before me the consul-general (or as the case may be), aforesaid, appointed by her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The proof of the official character and signature of the person taking the affidavit will generally be easily obtainable from a clerk in the Foreign Office, whose affidavit may be as follows:—

In the Queen's Bench.

Between A. B. plaintiff, and C. D. defendant.

J. K. of a clerk in the office of her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, maketh oath and saith that before whom the affidavit of hereunto annexed, purports to have been sworn herein on the day of one thousand eight hundred and fifty was on that day the consul-general (or as the case may be) at a foreign port (or place), being in the kingdom (or as the case may be) of appointed by her Majesty. And this deponent further saith that he is well acquainted with the handwriting of the said and that the name of subscribed to the said affidavit of is of the proper handwriting of the said as this deponent verily believes.

Sworn (as usual).

If the affidavit is made in a foreign language, it must be translated, and there must be an affidavit verifying the translation. (Re Rady, 6 Dowl. 615).

The order for the plaintiff to proceed will, no doubt (as in the case of a defendant within the jurisdiction), be absolute in the first instance, and not require service.

This mode of proceeding is another of the most striking alterations made by the recent Act, and is a substitute for a very ancient and complicated course of proceeding, which resulted in the outlawry of the defendant's person, and the plaintiff's obtaining payment of his claim from the defendant's property. The prosecuting to outlawry was used against defendants who at that time could not be served with the writ of summons because they were residing out of the jurisdiction of the Courts, or were supposed to be so, and the first step in it was the obtaining a writ of distringas. This writ was similar in all respects to the distringas to compel appearance above mentioned, except that the notice at the foot of it stated that proceedings would be taken to outlaw the defendant; and this writ (like that for compelling appearance) is abolished by sec. 24 of the Common Law Procedure Act. In order to proceed to outlawry, it was necessary that the sheriff should return this writ, and then a writ issued directed to the same sheriff, called an exigi facias, in consequence of which the defendant was required, i. e. called on to appear in the action, at five successive County Courts, and this writ had to be continued by another writ, called an allocatur exigent. With these writs a writ of proclamation issued to the sheriff, directing him to make three proclamations at different places to the defendant to surrender, and if the defendant did not give himself up before the return of these writs he was outlawed, and a writ of capias utlagatum issued. The outlaw was thereupon subject to the severest personal disabilities, the detail of which is now quite unnecessary; and by virtue of the writ last mentioned, his property might be seized by the sheriff into the hands of the Queen, upon which an inquisition on account of it was returned into the Court of Exchequer, for the seizure had made it a matter of revenue. Out of the Exchequer, writs might issue to sell the goods, to collect the debts, and to receive the profits of the lands of the defendant, and the proceeds of these might be obtained by the plaintiff. So extravagantly complicated and unsuitable a proceeding to enable a creditor to obtain payment of his debt from his absent debtor's property, was a disgrace to our law. The history of it, and the tedious and dilatory detail involved, it is not necessary to enter upon here, but a brief sketch of the proceeding seemed appropriate.

In place of it, a plaintiff is now enabled to proceed against a defendant abroad, and who neglects to appear in our courts in substance as he would were the defendant in this country; but in order, that the defendant may have sufficient knowledge of the proceedings, and opportunity to meet the claim, the plaintiff must first take steps to obtain liberty from the Court or Judge so to proceed. The end really sought in such cases is the obtaining a judgment against the defendant, and usually the obtaining payment from the debtor's property in this country. The judgment of outlawry was not a judgment as to the matter of the action, but in a collateral proceeding, the payment was obtained, where there was above 50*l.* worth of property, by an intricate process, commencing with a petition to the Lords of the Treasury; while the judgment the plaintiff now obtains is a legal judgment in favour of his claim, and he will obtain payment by the ordinary and direct process as his right. A more effectual result will therefore now be arrived at by a much shorter and straighter path. G. T.

SHAM LAWYERS.

THE following has been sent to us:—

All Saints'-court, All Saints'-lane,
Bristol, 23rd November, 1852.

MADAM,—Mr. Charles Russell, of Downend, has placed some of his outstanding accounts in my hands for collection, with instructions to put those persons to expenses who do not pay on my applying to them once only, and among them I have one against you, amounting to fourteen shillings and tenpence only; I therefore give you notice, that if you do not immediately pay me the 14*s.* 10*d.* expenses will be added to the debt.

It will be useless your calling on Mr. Russell, as he cannot interfere, he having altogether placed the affair in my hands.

You may find me at my residence, No. 4, Stapleton-place, Stapleton-road, near the Three Black Birds, up to half-past nine o'clock of a morning, or after five of an evening; or at my office as above, about half-past eleven o'clock of a morning.

Requesting your immediate attention, or you will have to abide by the consequences.

Yours obediently,
FRAS. MUSGROVE.

To Mrs. Davis, Downend.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

OATHS IN CHANCERY, &c. BILL.

TUESDAY, Nov. 30.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of this bill, the object of which, he said, was simply to give a definite name to the present Masters extraordinary in Chancery, and to enable solicitors within ten miles of London to act in the same way as Masters extraordinary formerly did. He wished to correct a mistake which prevailed with respect to the bill. It was thought by some that the object of the bill was to deprive the present Masters extraordinary in Chancery of the benefits they at present had. There was no such intention felt in framing the bill, nor did the bill seek to accomplish it. It simply gave them a name more consonant with their vocation.—The Bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TRIAL BY JURY.

MONDAY, Nov. 29.—Mr. PHILLIMORE asked the Attorney-General whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Ministers to bring forward any measure to render the unanimity of jurors unnecessary?—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said, at present it certainly was not the intention of the Government to do so.—Mr. PHILLIMORE then gave notice that after the Christmas recess he would submit a proposition to make the verdict of three-fourths of a jury equal in effect to the present unanimous verdict.

TRUCK SYSTEM.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 1.—Mr. C. FOSTER asked whether, in consequence of Mr. Tremenheere's report, it was the intention of Government to introduce any measure relative to the truck system during the present session.—Mr. WALPOLE said that Government intended to introduce an Act altering the truck system immediately after the recess.

POOR LAWS.

On the motion of Sir GEORGE PECHELL, copies were ordered of the order issued by the Poor Law Board, dated the 25th day of August, 1852, for regulating the administration of out-door relief, addressed to 110 unions: of all applications, whether by memorial, petition, resolution, or letter, addressed by such Board of Guardians, or any of them, to the Poor Law Board, respecting the said [illegible]

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Some more points of practice under the new procedure require to be noted. In the matter of the new stamps on Chancery proceedings, where a bill had been filed in writing with a 1*l.* stamp, and then a printed copy was tendered to the officer unstamped, it was held by Vice-Chancellor TURNER that only one stamp was necessary, and that the printed copy should be received and filed. (Lambert v. Lomas, 20 Law T. Rep. 87.) In Langdall v. Gill, 20 Law T. Rep. 88, it was held by Vice-Chancellor STUART not to be necessary to obtain leave of the Court previous to filing a statement of new facts in the Record and Writ Clerk's Office, under the 44th order of Aug. 7. In Exparte Cramer, 20 Law T. Rep. 87, the executors of a will not proved were ordered by the Court to represent the personal estate of the testator for the purpose of the proceeding then before it, under the provisions of sec. 44 of c. 86. In Clarke v. Clarke, 20 Law T. Rep. 88, the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion, that "under the new practice an infant must be served with notice of the decree in the same way as any other party; and should any difficulty thereafter arise, any question on the propriety of the service might then be decided."

In the practice relating to Foreclosure, two more cases are reported. In Smith v. Boucher, 20 Law T. Rep. 88, the Court refused to add to an order of course, to render a foreclosure absolute, a declaration that the mortgagor was a trustee within the Trustee Act; and in Stains v. Rudlin, 20 Law T. Rep. 88, it was ordered that, for the purpose of a sale under a decree of foreclosure, "an account should be taken before the judge's clerk of the principal and costs due on the mortgage, and to tax the costs of all parties except the mortgagor; and should the principal, interest, and costs not be paid by the mortgagor within one month after the date of the clerk's certificate of the amount, the estate to be sold, and the proceeds paid into court, with the usual and necessary directions."

In Blackborough v. Ravenhill, 20 Law T. Rep. 88, it was held that application for the appointment of a receiver should be by summons at chambers.

COMMON LAW.—Term has ended, and for the first time within our editorial memory, there are to be no sittings after, the business being almost "worked up." The last week has produced a very small crop of "points" on the new procedure. Where a writ of summons had been issued, and appearance entered, sec. stat. before the new Act came into operation, and a declaration filed in the notice endorsed to plead in eight days, but no notices of which was given to the defendant, and the plaintiff signed judgment for want of a plea, and issued execution, the Court of Q. B. set it aside as irregular, holding that defendant was entitled to notice of declaration. Lord Campbell observed "that section 62 only dispenses with a rule to plead, or demand of plea, but leaves everything else the same as it was before. (Piggott v. Jackson, 20 Law T. Rep. 95.) The Court of Exch. did the same in Goodliffe v. Neaves, Law T. Rep. 101, Alderson, B. putting it thus, with his usual terseness: "It is clear that either the defendant has appeared or he has not; well, then, he has not appeared himself, but by Act of Parliament the plaintiff has placed him in the same position as if he had. Then what is there in that new Act to say he shall be treated as if he had not appeared? The plaintiff's course, therefore, is clearly irregular. Whether he ought to have proceeded according to the old or the new law I give no opinion; he clearly ought to have brought himself within one or the other."

A rule was granted in Cornish v. Hawkins, 20 Law T. Rep. 95, to raise the question whether, under sec. 222, the Court is empowered to amend a mistake in the endorsement upon a copy of a writ that had been served.

It will be observed, in Taylor v. Rogers, 20 Law T. Rep. 101, that the Court granted leave to proceed as if service of writ had been effected (under sec. 17, substituting this for the old process of distringas) on an affidavit which stated the various calls made, and that the answers were that defendant was out of town and his return uncertain; that, on Oct. 21 copy-writ of summons was left at his dwelling-house, and that on the 25th another copy was left with the servant; that on Nov. 23rd the person who left the copies called and asked the servant if she had given the defendant the copy, and she replied that she had; and that subsequently he applied at the house, and saw the servant again, who said that her master had left home on the Wednesday previous. In Lumley v. Gye, 20 Law T. Rep. 103, leave was given to demur and plead several matters under sec. 80.

It was held in Ash v. Dawnay, 20 Law T. Rep. 103, that a sheriff taking possession under a writ of fi. fa. and remaining in possession an unreasonable time, is liable to an action for trespass.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Referring to the alterations said to be in contemplation, permit me to suggest that all Solicitors should ex officio be allowed to administer oaths to the same extent as Masters Extraordinary. I cannot see why there should be any appointment for the purpose, or why the number should be limited. There ought to be no invidious distinction, for it is simply a matter of convenience, and not of trust or honour; though, if only a limited number be authorised, they will most certainly parade it as the latter.

As a parallel proposition, I would suggest that all attorneys should ex officio be allowed to administer oaths to the same extent as commissioners for taking affidavits.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

Nov. 29, 1852. A SOLICITOR.

THE PROFESSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am glad to see that you advocate the propriety of an immediate call to the Bar, on the part of attorneys desirous of the change. I believe that there is a general feeling in favour of this alternative. All law students should be required to pass such an examination in some branch of the law as would entitle them to select either branch of the Profession; and the members of either branch, in these times of free trade, should be allowed to change again with rapidly-changing circumstances, if desirous of doing so, upon due application to some functionary. There could be nothing degrading in this to either branch, whilst there probably would be a great convenience and benefit. Whereas, according to the present system, if an individual take a mistaken position, or be thrown into a false one by new legislation, he may be excluded from bettering himself altogether.

This liberty is also quite consistent with preserving each branch of the Profession distinct, as well as each department. Things would then find their own level, and no one would have right to complain.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

J. L. FORSTER.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Nov. 29, 1852.

THE NEW SCALE OF FEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In the last number of the LAW TIMES you say the "Profession" are pleased at the reduction of the fees. Let us see how far your assertion is correct. Under the late process it cost—

Writ	£0	5	0
Service	0	5	0
Affidavit	0	1	0
Appearance	0	2	0
Rule to plead	0	1	0
Judgment	0	8	0
	£1	4	0

On a judgment by default for which the costs were taxed at about 8*l.* Now we pay—

Writ	£0	5	0
Service	0	5	0
Searching appearance	0	0	6
Swearing affidavit	0	1	0
Filing affidavit copy, writ, and judgment	0	10	0
	£1	1	6

And for which we get 3*l.* 8*s.*

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ONE WHO IS NOT PLEASED AT THE SCALE.

Query.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT.

In your paper, of Oct. 30 and Nov. 6, there are remarks under this title, signed respectively "Inquirer" and "W. H. F." I should be glad to be able to take the same view as "W. H. F." and act upon it in a matter now in hand; but it appears to me that the 14th section of the Act is confined to copies of documents of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on mere production from proper custody. As a will of land does not fall within this description, I cannot agree with "W. H. F." unless he can give some reason for his opinion, which I should be glad to see.

A. B.

OATHS IN CHANCERY.—By the Lord Chancellor's Bill passing through the House of Lords (just printed), the persons now styled "Masters Extraordinary in Chancery" are to be designated "Country Agents to administer Oaths in Chancery;" and "London Agents," within ten miles of Lincoln's-inn Hall, are to administer oaths for proceedings in London; and they are entitled to 1*s.* 6*d.* for every oath administered by them. A Chancery stamp of 1*l.* is to be the charge of appointment for a London or country agent.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Two cases in the Law of Master and Servant are to be noted. In Harris v. Thompson, 20 Law T. Rep. 99, it appeared that a director of a company had learned, in his capacity as director of another company, that the plaintiff had been dismissed from the office of secretary on the ground of gross misconduct. He stated this at the board, and in answer to a question from the chairman, said, that the misconduct was, obtaining money by false pretences, and giving an I O U for a petty cash debt. For this plaintiff brought an action against him; but it was held to be a privileged communication. "The circumstance," said JERVIS, C.J. "of a man being dismissed for misconduct, justifies a director in acting as, defendant did. In answer to a question, he tells what the charges were. Whether he meant that they were true or not, it is not necessary to inquire; for whether he meant this or not, it would be a privileged communication. Even if he had said, 'and I believe them to be true,' it would still be privileged. The question was, whether there was any evidence of express malice." In Todd v. Kellage, 20 Law T. Rep. 101, it was decided that governesses are not within the rule applicable to domestic servants, of a month's notice or wages; we presume, therefore, that a general hiring of a governess is a hiring for a year, with all its consequences as to notice. This should make persons who hire governesses or tutors very cautious to make with them such written terms as to notice as shall permit the contract to be put an end to at any time after a short notice, otherwise they will be bound for a year.

Young v. Waud, 20 Law T. Rep. 101, was a question as to whether a mortgage of his trading effects, under these circumstances, was an act of bankruptcy. A. sold goods and took bills for them. Being unable to cash them, he gave a mortgage upon his machinery to cover the amount. It was held not to be evidence of an act of bankruptcy.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Sir Robert Horsford, Knight, Chief Justice for the islands of Antigua and Montserrat, to be an ordinary member of the Civil Division of the third class or Companions of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

QUESTIONS AT THE EXAMINATION,

Michaelmas Term, 1852.

I. PRELIMINARY.

1. WHERE, and with whom, did you serve your clerkship?

2. State the particular branch or branches of the law to which you have principally applied yourself during your clerkship.

3. Mention some of the principal law-books which you have read and studied.

4. Have you attended any, and what, law lectures?

II. COMMON AND STATUTE LAW, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

5. At Common Law, when a deed is made inter partes, can a person beneficially interested in the covenant, but who is not a party to the deed, maintain an action on the deed?

6. When a contract is not under seal, may the person, for whose benefit the contract is made, sue thereon, or must the action be brought in the name of the agent who made the contract?

7. What are the principal facts necessary to be proved by affidavit in order to obtain a judge's order to hold a defendant to bail under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110?

8. Point out any defects or irregularities in the proceedings which would entitle a defendant to apply to set them aside.

9. Is the writ of capias the commencement of the action, or the writ of summons?

10. Explain the meaning of the maxim of "Actio personalis moritur cum persona," and give an instance of its application.

11. Has any, and what, alteration been made in that rule of law, by the statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93?

12. May an answer in Chancery be used in evidence at Nisi Prius against the party making it?

13. In what cases have the Superior Courts concurrent jurisdiction with the County Courts in actions on contract and in tort?

14. Do the provisions in the County Court Acts restraining the plaintiff's right to costs apply to cases of judgment by default, and when orders to stay are granted?

15. When a verdict has been obtained in the Superior Courts for less than 20*l.* on contract, and the Judge does not certify for costs, what steps can the plaintiff take to obtain his costs, and what would be sufficient grounds to support his application?

16. What is the necessary evidence to support an action on an attorney's bill when the pleas are "Never indebted" and "No signed bill delivered?"

17. When an attesting witness to the execution of a deed is dead, what proof is required of the execution of the deed?

18. What are sufficient grounds to sustain a motion in arrest of judgment?

19. Also to sustain a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto?

III. CONVEYANCING.

20. Give an instance of a chattel real and of a chattel personal.

21. By what words is an estate in fee simple created by a deed? And by what words is an estate tail created by a deed?

22. What is dower? what is freebench? and what is a jointure?

23. What is meant by "Title by purchase?" and what by "Title by descent?"

24. What changes in the Law of Dower have been made by the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 105, and do such alterations apply to freebench?

25. In what case does a judgment against a tenant in tail bind his issue and the remainderman?

26. If an estate be in a register county, is a purchaser in any and what case entitled to require that a will should be registered?

27. Should a second mortgagee take any and what precaution to preserve his priority over a third mortgagee, and should he take any and what precaution so as to have priority over a second charge to the first mortgagee?

28. Where a tenancy by lease is for a term certain, is any and what notice to quit required?

29. In what cases will a general devise of all the testator's real and personal estates pass those vested in him in trust, or by way of mortgage?

30. Is the devisee of an estate contracted to be purchased by, but not conveyed to the testator, entitled to have a conveyance from the vendor; and by whom, and from what fund is the purchase-money to be paid?

31. What are the rights of a husband with respect to his wife's reversionary property?

32. Is there any mode by which a testator, seised of copyhold estates, and intending that they should be sold after his decease, can avoid the necessity of the admittance of the trustees of his will, and the payment of a fine by them before a suit can be effected; and if so, how?

33. If the purchaser of one lot of an estate give a deed of covenant for production of the title to the purchaser of another lot, and afterwards sell and convey the property he bought and part with the deeds, will the covenant run with the land, and will his personal liability under the deed of covenant be discharged, or how is the discharge of it to be provided for, and the production of the deeds secured to the covenantee?

34. If two persons purchase lands and take a conveyance to them and their heirs, but do not advance the money in equal proportions, and this appears by the deed itself, are they joint-tenants? and what will be the effect of the death of one of them?

IV. EQUITY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

41. Explain the rule as to marshalling assets.

42. When must the statements in a bill be verified by affidavit?

43. What documents and papers may a defendant be compelled to produce, and are there any and what exceptions?

44. What are the rules to be observed in applying for an injunction?

45. What is the mode of proceeding to prevent the transfer of stock by a party having a reversionary interest therein?

46. What is required in order to take the evidence of a witness de bene esse?

47. When is security for costs required from the plaintiff?

48. What process must be served personally on the party, and when will it be sufficient to serve the solicitor?

49. What are the several modes of defence to a bill in Equity?

V. BANKRUPTCY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

50. State in general terms the object of the Bankruptcy Laws: by what statutes they were first introduced, and the principal alterations and improvements made in them.

51. Who are the persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Bankrupt Laws?

52. What Court or Courts have jurisdiction in bankruptcy? And has any, and what, important alteration been made therein; and when, and in what manner?

53. What are the steps necessary to be taken to make a person subject to those laws bankrupt, and before whom?

54. Within what time, whether in town or country, must the petition in bankruptcy be opened, and what are the consequences of its not being opened in due time?

55. What remedies has an individual improperly declared bankrupt, and against whom?

56. Will the death of the bankrupt abate the adjudication at any, and what stage of the proceedings?

57. What is the lowest amount of debt which must be owing to a single creditor to enable him to obtain an adjudication? The same question in the case of two creditors not partners? And where there are more creditors join for a similar purpose?

58. What is essential to constitute a trading within the meaning of the statute?

59. Will buying only, or selling only, constitute a sufficient and valid trading?

60. State what acts of a trader are deemed acts of bankruptcy, and with what intention must such acts be done?

61. If a debtor, liable to the Bankrupt Laws, has not committed an act of bankruptcy, how can he be proceeded against in order to make him bankrupt?

62. What are the respective rights of joint and separate creditors as to the proof of debts under an adjudication against partners in trade?

63. In case a creditor possesses collateral security for his debt, must he take any and what proceedings before he will be allowed to prove his debt?

64. Are the assignees entitled to property which accrues to the bankrupt after the adjudication? and if so, is there any and what limitation?

VI. CRIMINAL LAW, AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE MAGISTRATES.

65. What is the difference between larceny and embezzlement?

66. Define the offence of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, and state in what particu differs from larceny.

67. Are there any and what cases in which a prosecutor can claim costs of a defendant?

68. State generally in what cases a certiorari may be moved for.

69. State the mode of application and what is required of a party applying for the writ of certiorari, either prosecutor or defendant.

70. State in what cases leave to exhibit articles of the peace is applied for.

71. State the mode of application, the material allegations necessary, and what will be required of the party against whom the application is made, if the application be granted.

72. Can the party against whom the articles are granted controvert the statement? if he is bound to submit, what is the remedy if the statement is untrue?

73. State the nature of the proceedings for leave to file a criminal information for libel, the time within which the application must be made, and the material allegations of the prosecutor's affidavit.

74. What is the mode of proceeding to obtain a writ of habeas corpus, where a person is alleged to be unlawfully detained, or where a magistrate has refused to admit to bail?

75. When and how can a public footpath be stopped or diverted?

76. In what cases is a prosecutor entitled to costs, and by whom payable, and how ascertained?

77. How far are magistrates responsible for acts done in the discharge of their duty as magistrates, the mode of proceeding, and are they entitled to notice, and if so, the object of the notice?

78. What has been substituted by the Legislature for voluntary affidavits, and what is essential to the validity of such substitute?

79. Is a witness in criminal proceedings entitled before leaving home to demand payment of his travelling expenses, and for loss of time?

CORRESPONDENCE.

REG. v. NEWMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—You may not be aware that two certificates were granted in this case by the notary to the inquisition, one dated the 22nd of September, the other, 18th of November, widely differing from each other in the form of attestation. The latter was the one actually tendered and received in evidence, yet the former has by some mistake found its way into the reports, and is reproduced in the LAW TIMES of this day. The certificate of the 18th of November having been especially obtained to replace the other, the attestation to which was considered defective, you may deem it of sufficient importance to call attention to the real document, which is correctly given in in the fourth page of the enclosed pamphlet.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1852.

THE ATTORNEYS' TAX.

It should be understood that, if adopted as it was proposed on Friday last, which is not at all likely, the Budget is only an outline of the Government scheme of finance; it was not designed to cover the various questions relating to the minor taxes, which are left for consideration at the usual period for making up the accounts of the financial year, when the surplus, if there should be one, comes in due course to be dealt with. That portion of the Budget already before the public is directed, not to the reduction, but to the re-distribution, of taxation; according to the estimate of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, it leaves the revenue as he found it, and, should the ordinary sources shew a surplus in April, he will be enabled to apply it to the repeal of the lesser burdens that bear upon the people or impede commerce.

Hence no disappointment nor surprise need be felt at the omission of any reference to the Attorneys' Tax in the financial statement of last week. It was not the place for it; it will come to be considered with the other taxes in April next, when the state of the year's revenue is ascertained. Whether there is an inclination to give it a prominent place among the claimants for relief we are unable to say, but we think there is, and if there should be a considerable surplus in April, it will probably be one of the taxes selected for repeal by Mr. Disraeli, should he be then in office, of which, however, there is at present very considerable doubt.

THE NEW SCALE OF FEES IN THE COMMON LAW COURTS.

The new Table of Fees, which appeared so fair at the first glance, proves in practice to be something worse than a pretence of relief to the suitor,—it inflicts upon him a positive increase of charges.

True it is, that upon the whole scale there is a considerable reduction of the total sum of charges; and it was this which we and others, who glanced at the total without investigating the items, supposed to be such a boon to the suitor. Doubtless it was this that induced Lord Campbell to pass upon it a public eulogium. Neither the Lord Chief Justice, nor the other Judges by whom the new Table of Fees was approved, could have been aware of the delusion that was being practised upon them, upon the Profession, and upon the public, by the parties, whoever they were, to whom had been entrusted the duty of preparing that scale of fees and submitting it for their sanction.

By what contrivance, the reader will ask, is it, that a Scale of Fees, which in its total shews a reduction, in practice proves to be an increase?

Thus it is. The principal reductions are made in those fees which attached to the trial of a cause—and particularly in the trial of undefended actions—a boon, no doubt, or rather the abatement of a great injustice,—but how purchased?

At the cost of the proceedings in the beginning of an action. Instead of a diminution of fees up to judgment and execution in an undefended action, there is a positive addition! Now, inasmuch as to one action that goes to trial there are a hundred that stop at the earlier stages, the fees abandoned in the former are compensated fivefold by the additional fees imposed on the latter.

And this is the boasted reform in Court Fees! Surely the attention of Lord Campbell needs but to be directed to this to secure his instant interposition to remedy a wrong in which the Judges have, doubtless, been as much deceived as the Profession.

The following letter compares the old with the new scale, and will put their Lordships in possession of the facts:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I think you were much too hasty in so highly praising the new scale of fees, which, instead of giving satisfaction, gives great dissatisfaction, both to the Profession and to suitors. I give you both the old and the new scale of fees payable on actions that are not tried (which are by far the most numerous), and leave you to make your own comments on the new scale. I can only say that, on the whole, the fees now payable in actions that are not tried, as well as in those that are tried, amount in the aggregate to double the amount of those payable under the old scale, and yet this is the alteration that Lord Campbell hoped would be of such great benefit (?) to suitors! Whilst the remuneration of attorneys is reduced to bricklayers' wages, the fees of Court are increased to double their former amount!! A few fees which but seldom become payable have been abolished, whilst those that frequently become payable have been increased, and not only that, but many new fees have been created.

HINTS TO BUSY PRACTITIONERS.

[Under this title we propose from time to time to remind the practitioner of useful facts which, amid the claims of business and the flood of changes in the law, he may possibly have overlooked. As we also may overlook many, we shall be obliged by "hints" from any of our readers.]

WRITS SPECIALLY INDORSED.

It has been already intimated to our readers that the Masters will not allow in taxation any extra costs for special indorsements, however long, although such indorsements require, in some cases, a large sheet of parchment and a great deal of writing, besides the additional charge of the agent for copy and service. Hence the question has arisen as to the sort of particulars that should be indorsed: should the whole account be set out, or will such a brief summary suffice as is usually delivered with declarations, and upon which the defendant may demand fuller particulars if he requires them? The spirit and intent of the statute was certainly that full particulars should be given, and so in justice they should be, for it is upon them that the judgment rests. But practically, by requiring indorsement instead of annexation of particulars, the Legislature has made full particulars almost impossible; and if they are abbreviated at all, there is no reason why they should not be reduced to the dimensions of the particulars, as they would be served with the declaration, leaving it to the defendant to go to the Court for fuller details, if he desires them. But then this involves delay, which it is the very purpose of this provision of the Procedure Act to avoid.

Amid these conflicting difficulties, perhaps the better course for the practitioner will be to indorse full particulars, where they are not longer than can be compressed into a parchment of the size of a page of foolscap; but if they should exceed this, to give only the abridged particulars, as he would have given them with a declaration, and take the chance of the defendant delaying his judgment by going to the Court for fuller particulars.

We have framed a clause for the removal of this unforesecn difficulty, of which we will endeavour to procure the insertion in Lord BROUGHAM'S Evidence and Procedure Bill, now before the Lords.

WHAT THE COMMON LAW COMMISSIONERS ARE DOING.

WHEN Mr. WHITESIDE produced his admirable scheme for the Reform of the Common Law Courts in Ireland, the producers and the patrons of the comparatively petty improvements that have been effected in England must have experienced something like a sense of shame at their own short-comings. Sir FREDERICK THESIGER came to their rescue in his gentlemanly way, excusing them on account of the haste with which the Bill was necessarily carried through Parliament at the close of an abbreviated session. But the plea is not a valid one. If the Bill was hurriedly passed, it was deliberately framed. The Commissioners were engaged for many months in its preparation, and it is notorious that the completed law is much in advance of the propositions of those whose business it was to construct this scheme of reform, the measure, in spite of haste, having been considerably improved in its progress, by the emendations of Sir F. THESIGER himself, of Mr. CROWDER, of Lord CAMPBELL, and of other law reformers.

When the report of the Commissioners appeared, we took the liberty of expressing pretty strongly the disappointment it had produced among the Profession, and having, with the help of suggestions from our many practical readers, submitted, in a series of letters to the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, a succinct statement of the reforms that were required in the Common Law Courts to adapt them to the needs of the times, we were enabled to compare the propositions of the Commissioners with the actual requirements of experience, and thus to shew how far the Commissioners were in the rear both of the Profession and of the public. The remarks we felt it to be our duty to make upon this matter produced some soreness at the time, and in some quarters were deemed to reflect rather too harshly upon the Commissioners.

The result, however, has fully justified every observation we then made. The Procedure Act, as framed by the Commission and improved by the Legislature, became law. It was scarcely in operation a month, before the Government practically pronounced its insufficiency, by introducing a measure for the reform of the Common Law Procedure in Ireland, which goes vastly beyond the law so lately passed for England, and adopts almost every improvement, for the omission of which we were supposed to have too severely blamed the Commissioners. In Mr. WHITESIDE'S Bill we find our best vindication.

The comments of the press, however, and the universally expressed opinion of the Profession upon the lameness and inefficiency of their reforms, appears to have roused the Commissioners to consciousness of the unpleasant position in which they are placed by the production of the Irish Law Reform Bill. In the debate upon the second reading of that measure, for which Mr. WHITESIDE was properly eulogised from both sides of the House, Sir A. COCKBURN, who is one of the Common Law Commissioners, and from whom we had anticipated something very much better than our Procedure Act, took occasion to say a good word on behalf of his brethren, by stating some further improvements which it is their intention to propose. He threw the blame of the greatest defect in the scheme—its retention of forms of action—upon a high judicial authority, who opposed the change. He alluded probably to Lord TRURO, who was so unfortunate a hindrance to all the Law Reforms of the Whigs. Sir A. COCKBURN intimated that the Commission would propose to give to the Common Law Courts the powers now exercised only by the tedious process of a bill of discovery, "bringing up the parties, and giving the Judge the power of immediately striking out the pleadings." All technical forms of action are to be abolished; causes are to be tried without a jury, if both parties desire it. Many other improvements of the same kind are under consideration. That portion of the debate which related to the reform of our own law is so interesting to all our readers, that we extract it here:—

Sir A. COCKBURN was very glad the Solicitor-General for Ireland had brought in this measure, and should regret much if the Bill should not be read a second time. He quite concurred in what had been just stated by the hon. and learned member for Kidderminster (Mr. Lowe)—namely, that the Bill now before the House was a great advance upon the English Common Law Procedure Bill of last session, and thought he could point out the reason for this. The Common Law Commission recommended the abolition of the forms of action; but this important amendment was abandoned, because certain judicial authorities were alarmed at the recommendation of the commission going to such great length. We sometimes threw over the mast in order to save the ship, and, on that principle, it was found necessary to give up the proposed alteration. He very much regretted this, and now that the Government were prepared to go so far in the reform of the Irish law, he trusted they would apply the same principle to the English common law. He admitted that this Bill was an advance in other respects upon the Bill adopted in accordance with the report of the commission of which he had the honour of being a member. They had thought it necessary to deal with the incidents of an action in its various stages; but the commission were not prepared to stop there, and their recommendations would form the subject of a report, which would shortly be laid before the House, and in which would be considered several most important matters, which formed no part of the Bill of the hon. and learned gentleman. They should propose that courts of laws should give the effect of a bill of discovery by the examination of parties to a suit; and that the common law courts should have power of discovery without any expense, not according to the form of procedure in the courts of equity, but by a simple process of oral discovery, bringing up the parties and giving the judge the power of immediately striking out the pleadings. So with regard to the power of persons who had only an equitable right maintaining a legal action, and alterations were also proposed in many other important respects. They proposed to introduce various amendments, doing away with technical forms of action which had become obsolete and ought to be abolished. With regard to the jury system, it was worthy of consideration whether the plan adopted in the county courts should not become a guide for the practice of the superior courts—namely, that of allowing parties, by consent, to deal with a question, either with or without a jury, as they liked. (Hear, hear.) If parties consented to try their cause before a judge in whom they both had confidence, they should not be compelled to have recourse to the more expensive and less satisfactory process of a jury. (Hear, hear.) He believed that one of the reasons why County Courts worked so admirably was, that if any new matter turned up in the course of a case, the judge, sitting from day to day in the discharge of his duties, was enabled to say, "Come before me again to-morrow," whereas with a jury the case must be gone through from beginning to end without adjournment, and the only remedy was to obtain, at immense expense, a new trial. (Hear, hear.) A variety of subjects of this kind were under consideration, and would receive the best attention of the commission, whose anxious desire was to make the procedure in the courts of common law as complete and satisfactory as it could be made. Instead of the Legislature interposing to remedy the law, it had done nothing more hitherto than abuse the lawyers. (A laugh.) He hoped, however, that all had now started upon the great work of legal reform. It was satisfactory that every one in Westminster-hall, from one end of it to the other, was anxious to lend his best endeavours to work out these reforms. So far from lawyers having an interest in preventing amendments in the law, he was convinced that their interest was bound up in its improvement, and that the cumbrous and expensive forms of procedure only tended to prevent parties from insisting on their rights, and to diminish the amount of business which would otherwise be transacted. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. CROWDER was happy to give his cordial support to the second reading of this Bill, and congratulated the hon. and learned gentleman the Solicitor-General for Ireland upon the able manner in which he had brought it forward, and especially upon the improvements he had introduced into a similar measure passed last session for the amendment of the Common Law Procedure Act of England. His (Mr. Crowder's) only difficulty was to understand how the law officers of the Crown thought fit to pass the measure of last session without the introduction of those very amendments to which the attention of the House was now being directed, because they had not been discovered since the passing of that Act, for they had been suggested by members of the legal profession, and had even been discussed in that House. He fully concurred at the time in every one of those suggested improvements; but nevertheless no notice was taken of them on the second reading of the English Bill, and when the measure passed through committee, and the consequence was that they had a measure applied to the common law courts of this country which was decidedly inferior to that introduced on the present occasion to regulate the common law procedure in Ireland. With respect to the abolition of the forms of action, he fully approved of that amendment. It was stated that the Common Law Commission in their report recommended the abolition of those forms, but that part of their recommendations was, nevertheless, not carried out, owing, as it appeared, to the expressed opinions of some high judicial personages. He apprehended, however, that it was the duty of that House not to be biased by any notices of that sort, provided they were fully persuaded that such improvements ought to take place. He must complain greatly when he saw that these reforms, so much in advance of those we possessed in this country, were omitted in the Bill passed only three months since. The payment of money into court, for example, was limited to certain causes of action only in the English Bill, while by the present measure it was allowed in all. When this subject was before the House last session he had himself called attention to it; but no notice was taken of his remarks, and the absurdity still remained. He hoped, with the hon. and learned member for Southampton (Sir A. Cockburn), that we should have great improvement in the law as it at present stood.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL was desirous of receiving in a friendly spirit the observations of the hon. and learned gentleman, and quite agreed with him that his hon. and learned friend the Solicitor-General for Ireland deserved the gratitude of the House, not only for this measure itself, but for the very able and clear manner in which he had introduced it. But the hon. and learned gentleman (Mr. Crowder), in making some very serious reflections upon the law officers of the Crown in England, had forgotten the circumstances under which they had charge of the bill of last session, which was said to be so deficient in its amendment of the common law procedure in England, and the utter impossibility of making those additions which were proposed at the time. The hon. and learned gentleman had forgotten the impatience with which the Opposition side of the House had listened to any attempt to introduce any new measures, attributing to the Ministry that they were endeavouring to prolong the session unnecessarily, and to disappoint the expectations formed of an early dissolution. This Common Law Procedure Bill came down from the Lords at a very late period of the session. His hon. and learned friend suggested various alterations in it, but whether he (the Attorney-General) agreed with them or not was perfectly immaterial; there appeared to be a great chance of losing the bill altogether, and they were therefore obliged to hurry it through. He (the Attorney-General) was thus not a free agent in the matter; he had no liberty of choice. It was important to pass the bill even in an imperfect state, and he had trusted to future occasions to introduce improvements, to which it was impossible to attend at the time they were made. His hon. and learned friend stated that the bill for Ireland was in advance of the one for England. But it must be remembered that in Ireland they had had an opportunity of looking from the limit at which they had arrived in the reform of the English law. Even a dwarf would see better on the shoulders of a giant than he did before. (Laughter.) His hon. and learned friend the Solicitor-General for Ireland had, he confessed, introduced great improvements beyond those they possessed in the English law, but the House must not believe for one moment that he (the Attorney-General) was not quite prepared at the proper time to adopt any improvements that could be made in the Common Law Procedure Act. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the forthcoming report of the commission, it would be necessary to consider very carefully the amendments suggested, and not to rush at once upon all those reforms which were recommended by those ardent reformers who were among its members. The discussion upon which they were at present engaged was a very desultory, although he hoped not an unprofitable one. (Hear.) The suggestions made as to the working of this bill were not now well timed, because the House was not discussing the details; they were only considering the principle of the measure, and those hon. gentlemen who agreed to the second reading would have ample opportunities in committee of suggesting the valuable improvements which they had heard to-night. (Hear.)

Mr. COLLIER thanked the Solicitor-General for Ireland for introducing this bill, which he regarded as more comprehensive in its character than any bill ever before introduced by a lawyer into that house, and as a great advance and improvement on the bill of last session. The great merit of the bill was, that it abolished the system of pleading, and substituted in its place a simple statement on one side and an answer on the other.

LORD BROUGHAM'S EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE BILL.

THE great and crowning improvements in the Law of Evidence proposed by this Bill, and which we fully described last week, are almost equalled by improvements in procedure proposed by the other portions of it, which we now proceed to lay before the Profession for their consideration, approval, and amendment, previously to the Bill being taken into its further stages. If any of our readers can see in any portion of these provisions aught that is objectionable, or can devise anything that will more effectually attain the object, they will serve the Profession by forwarding them to us for discussion here, and we have no doubt that they will receive the attention that may be due to them in quarters where there exists the power as well as the will to help them.

The difficulties that now impede the payment of money into court are to be entirely removed, and in lieu of the existing enactments and rules, the simple provision is to be substituted, that in all personal actions, the defendant, or one, or any, or all the defendants, may, without an order, "pay into court money by way of compensation or satisfaction, either with respect to the whole, or to part only, of the plaintiff's claim." A short form of plea of payment into court is provided by the Bill; the money is to be paid to the proper officer, who is to give a receipt for it in the margin of the plea, and "it shall be thenceforth the property of the plaintiff, and shall be paid out to the written order of himself or his attorney, on demand, whatever may be the result of the suit." To this plea the plaintiff may reply, either that he accepts the money, in which case his claim in respect of the matter to which the plea is pleaded shall be deemed satisfied, and he may tax costs, and, if not paid within forty-eight hours, sign judgment for them, or he may reply that the money is not enough to satisfy his claim, and if the issue to this replication be found against him, the defendant shall be entitled to judgment and costs. But payment into court, whether generally or partially, or on some special count, shall not be deemed an admission by the defendant that any cause of action existed against him, or that he was legally bound to have paid anything, and this plea of payment may be pleaded either alone or with any other plea.

This will be admitted by all to be a vast improvement.

It is, undoubtedly, a great defect in our jurisprudence, that if two persons have a dispute, for the settlement of which they have appealed to law, they should be compelled to resort to a jury, even although they should prefer to have the opinion of the Judge alone without the jury. This option is given in the County Courts, and with so much satisfaction to suitors that a jury is not demanded in one case in a hundred. No sound reason can be assigned why that which has been proved to be so satisfactory to suitors in the County Courts should not be equally permitted to suitors in the Superior Courts; and accordingly this Bill proposes to adopt the plan of the County Courts, and to require the Judge alone to try issues of fact in all cases, but permitting either party to demand a jury, by inserting in the margin of any pleading filed by him the words "by jury." These words are to be inserted in the margin of the Nisi Prius Record, and then a jury shall be summoned, and the case tried by them as at present.]

Although this is the course of proceeding in the County Courts, we are not sure that it is prudent to propose it in the Superior Courts, where it will have to encounter so many prejudices. The proposition is, that the Judge alone shall try, unless a jury be demanded by either party, the practical effect of which would probably be, that a jury would not be demanded in one case in twenty. If the contrary course were taken, and the option to be exercised by the parties was, that they should be permitted by consent to dispense with a jury, the proposal would meet with less hostility than will be encountered by the scheme as contained in the Bill.

We have had repeated occasion to point out the injustice of the law that exempts the Crown from payment of costs. The Bill proposes to redress this wrong, by providing that in all actions, suits, and proceedings, except in a prosecution for treason, felony, or misdemeanor, which is henceforth either instituted or defended in any Court of Justice by or on behalf, or at the instance of the Crown, "the Crown, if it succeeds, shall be entitled to receive costs, and, if it fails, shall be liable to pay costs, in the same manner and to the same extent as an ordinary suitor." The Crown also is to be restricted to the same right to begin and reply as other suitors.

Another clause empowers the Queen in Council to authorise the trial of persons in adjoining counties, and the Court of Q. B. is empowered to order Criminal Trials to be had in any county, upon motion by the Attorney-General, after ten days' notice given to the party accused.

An extremely humane—or we should rather call it just provision is introduced, which also we have here often advocated, giving to the Court before whom any prisoner has been tried and acquitted of any indictable offence, power to make an order that his costs be paid by the county in which he was committed for trial or held to bail. The distinction between local and transitory offences is to be abolished.

Courts of Oyer and Terminer are to be empowered to issue writs of subpœna into any county, and which writs are to be enforced by attachment in the Q. B. But no person is to be punished by such attachment for non-obedience unless it shall be made to appear to the Court "that a reasonable and sufficient sum of money to defray the expenses of coming to, attending at, and returning from the Court out of which such writ issued had been tendered or offered to such person at the time when such writ was served."

These are the provisions by which a real Law Reformer anticipates the slow movements of a commission appointed purposely to construct a reform, verifying the old proverb as to the superior value of one volunteer over ten pressed men.

AN ACTION AT LAW UNDER THE NEW PRACTICE.

ARTICLE IV.

PERSONAL SERVICE.

If an attorney undertake to appear in the action for the defendant, it is not necessary to serve the writ of summons on the defendant; and the Courts enforce the performance of such an undertaking by attachment.

The assumption that this has not been done, and that the defendant can be met with, so as to serve him personally with a copy of the writ, has now to be made. In this case a true copy of the writ, if it be in the form of either No. 1, 2, or 4, including the indorsements thereon, must be served. If the writ be according to the form No. 3, a copy is not to be served, but the contents of a copy are to be put into the form of a notice. This notice is as follows:—

To C. D. late of (Brighton, in the county of Sussex), or now residing at (Paris, in France).

Take notice, that A. B. of , in the county of , England, has commenced an action at law against you, C. D. in her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, by a writ of that Court, dated the day of , A.D. 185 ; and you are required within days after the receipt of this notice, inclusive of the day of such receipt, to defend the said action by causing an appearance to be entered for you in the said court to the said action; and in default of your so doing, the said A. B. may, by leave of the Court or a Judge, proceed thereon to judgment and execution.

[Here state the amount claimed, where the writ is for the payment of a debt, as required to be indorsed on the writ in such case (ante, p. 99); but allowing the defendant the time limited for appearance, to pay debt and costs.]

(Signed) A. B. of , or

The copy or notice may be served by any person who is able to read printing and writing: it is necessary that he should have this ability, in order that he may be able afterwards to make an affidavit that he served a true copy of the writ or notice. It used to be said that it was necessary the person serving the writ should be able to write; but it has been held that the indorsement of service (to be mentioned presently) may be made by a marksman. (Baker v. Coghlan, 7 C. B. 131.)

The copy or notice must be served while the original is in force, that is, within six months from the time it was issued, unless it has been renewed, and then within six months from the date of the last renewal. It seems that it may be served at any time of the day or night (Priddee v. Cooper, 1 Bing. 66), but not on a Sunday, for service on a Sunday is absolutely void, and the defect cannot be waived by the defendant's afterwards proceeding. (Taylor v. Phillips, 3 East, 155.)

Formerly the writ of summons could only be served in the county in which the defendant was described in the writ as residing, or within 200 yards of the border of it, but now it may be served in any county. (Sec. 14.)

The service of the writ of summons, wherever practicable, must, as heretofore, be personal (sec. 17), and a most important point, therefore, is, that the meaning of personal service be understood. A few years since some little laxity as to the circumstances sufficient to constitute personal service was creeping into practice, which it was thought necessary to check; and PARKE, B. said, in Goggs v. Lord Huntingtower, 12 M. & W. 503, that the Judges had "come to a determination that in future there shall be no equivalent for personal service." To effect this, the simple course is, to put the copy of the writ into the hands of the defendant; but if this cannot be done, it appears that it is enough to bring the purport of the writ to his personal notice, so as to make him aware of the proceeding, and at the same time to leave the copy either on some part of his person, or in his presence, so that it is his own neglect if he does not take it. There can be little doubt this would still be held sufficient to constitute personal service. (Thomson v. Pheney, 1 Dowl. 441; Heath v. White, 2 D. & L. 40.) The service will be equally personal and good although the copy-writ, when delivered to the defendant, be inclosed in paper, or in a letter, if it can be shewn that he took it out. As an inflexible rule, the copy must not be brought away.

The defendant is entitled to see the original writ, if he require it at or within a reasonable time after service, but otherwise it is not necessary to produce it to him.

It need scarcely be said, that if there be more than one defendant, the writ must be served on each one just as carefully as if he were the sole defendant. But it should be added that in an action against husband and wife, service on the husband alone is sufficient.

A writ issued against a corporation aggregate may be served on the mayor, or other head officer, or on the town clerk, clerk, treasurer, or secretary of such corporation, and a writ issued against the inhabitants of a hundred, or other like district, may be served on the high constable thereof, or any one of the high constables thereof; and a writ issued against the inhabitants of any county of any city or town, or the inhabitants of any franchise, liberty, city, town, or place, not being part of a hundred, or other like district, may be served on some peace-officer thereof. (Sec. 16.) But service on a clerk in the office of the secretary of a corporation aggregate, is not service on "the clerk or secretary of such corporation," within this section. (Walton v. Universal Salvage Company, 16 M. & W. 438.) Provision is made as to service on the printer, publisher, or proprietor of a newspaper, by 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 9; and as to service on a trading or other company or body, having letters patent, under the 7 Wm. 4, and 1 Vict. c. 73, by s. 26 of that statute; and there is very usually in the statute authorising a public company an enactment as to service on such company.

The return day of a writ is the day on which, in strict form, it should be returned to the Court whence it issued, with some account of its execution or reason for non-execution. The return day of a writ of summons, which has been served, is scarcely ever of any practical importance, but it is generally considered that the day of the service of the writ is nominally the return day. (Arch. Prac. 148.)

The person serving the writ is required by the Common Law Procedure Act within three days at least (query, at most?) after such service, to indorse on the writ the day of the month and week of the service thereof, otherwise the plaintiff is not at liberty, in case of non-appearance, to proceed under that Act. (Sec. 15.) This indorsement may be made by a marksman. (Supra.)

PROCEEDINGS AFTER SERVICE.

By personal service of the writ of summons, or by the proceedings previously mentioned, which are held to be an equivalent for it, the defendant receives such notice of the action as that the law holds him bound to appear and defend it, if he does not admit the plaintiff's claim; and by one of these means his liability to answer or admit the claim is brought, it may be said, within the immediate cognisance of the Court. In considering the subsequent proceedings in an action, it will therefore be necessary to refer to the steps that may be taken by the defendant, as well as those that may be taken by the plaintiff, but it is believed that no confusion will arise from this.

Where the plaintiff claims a sum as a debt, the defendant has four days, if the writ be according to the form No. 1 or 4, within which he may pay the plaintiff's demand, and the costs of the writ; or if it be according to No. 2 or 3, he has for this purpose the whole time within which he is required by the writ to enter an appearance.

If the writ is indorsed with the name of an attorney, the defendant or his attorney may demand in writing of such attorney, whether the writ was issued by him, and if it were, may apply to the Court or a judge for an order directing such attorney to state the plaintiff's abode and occupation; and every attorney whose name is indorsed on any writ issued by authority of the Common Law Procedure Act, must, on such demand declare forthwith whether such writ has been issued by him or with his authority or privity; and if he answer in the affirmative then he must, in case the Court or a Judge so order or direct, declare in writing within the time allowed by such Court or Judge, the profession, occupation, or quality and place of abode of the plaintiff on pain of being guilty of a contempt of the Court from which such writ appears to have been issued; and if such attorney declare that the writ was not issued by him or with his authority or privity, no further proceedings can be taken thereupon without leave of the Court or a Judge. (Sec. 7.)

If there be any irregularity in the writ or the copy or the mode of service, the defendant may take advantage thereof within the time allowed for appearance by applying to the Court or a Judge, that the writ, if the defect be in the writ, or that the service, if the defect be in the copy or mode of service, be set aside, but such applications will probably now be less effective and less frequent than formerly, in consequence of the ample powers of amendment given to the Courts. (See ante, p. 107.)

Or the defendant may appear to the action, but before considering the mode of doing so, another of the changes effected by the recent Act has to be stated

PROCEEDINGS ON NON-APPEARANCE.

Formerly a plaintiff could not proceed in the action until the defendant had appeared to it, which was anciently by personal appearance in court. By 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, the plaintiff was enabled to enter an appearance for the defendant, which power was continued by 2 Wm. 4, c. 39 (the Uniformity of Process Act), but the necessity of the formal appearance of the defendant in all cases still remained The provisions of both the above statutes as to this subject are repealed by sec. 26 of the Common Law Procedure Act, and the plaintiff's entering an appearance for the defendant is therefore now abolished. He is, however, enabled to proceed as effectually without this useless form, and the terms formerly used in the writ of summons are now modified accordingly. In the new form of writ (ante, p. 99) it will be seen that the notice to the defendant is that in default of his appearing in the action the plaintiff "may proceed therein to judgment and execution;" and there is an express provision that all such proceedings as are mentioned in any writ or notice issued under that Act shall and may be had and taken in default of a defendant's appearance. (Sec. 32.)

The new provisions made as to the mode of proceeding on non-appearance will commence the next article. G. T.

OATHS IN CHANCERY BILL.

"AN Act relating to the Appointment of Persons to administer Oaths in Chancery, and to Affidavits made for Purposes connected with Registration:"—

1. The persons now styled "Masters Extraordinary in Chancery" shall cease to be so styled, and they and all persons hereafter appointed to execute like duties by the Lord Chancellor shall be designated "Country Agents to administer Oaths in Chancery," and as such shall possess and exercise all such powers and discharge all such duties as now appertain to the office of Master Extraordinary in Chancery, by virtue of any statute or order of the Court of Chancery or of the Lord Chancellor, or usage in that behalf, or otherwise.

2. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to appoint any persons practising as solicitors within ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall to administer oaths in Chancery, and to possess all such other powers and discharge all such other duties as aforesaid; and such persons shall be style "London Agents to administer Oaths in Chancery;" and they shall be entitled to charge and take a fee of 1s. 6d. for every oath administered by them, subject to any order of the Lord Chancellor varying or annulling the same.

3. The fiat or document by which any such country agent or London agent as aforesaid shall be appointed shall bear a Chancery stamp of 1*l.* in lieu of the stamp of 5s. now required; but no other charge or fee shall be made or payable in respect of such appointment, or of anything requisite to be done in order to perfect the same; and it shall not be necessary that any such appointment shall be published in the London Gazette.

4. Nothing herein contained shall abridge or lessen the power of the Lord Chancellor as it now exists to appoint fit persons to take oaths in Chancery, or to regulate the fees to be taken by them; and where any Act of Parliament refers to the Masters Extraordinary in Chancery, or to their powers or duties, the reference shall be held to apply to and include the officers or agents to whom the aforesaid new styles are hereby given, or their powers or duties, as the case may be.

5. That all affidavits, declarations, and affirmations to be used before any registrar or other officer of any registry office in Great Britain or Ireland, for any purpose connected with registration of deeds or wills, under the authority of Parliament, may be sworn and taken in Scotland or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the dominion of her Majesty in foreign parts, before any Court, judge, notary public, or person lawfully authorised to administer oaths in such country, colony, island, plantation, or place respectively, or before any of her Majesty's consuls or vice-consuls in any foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions; and all registrars and other officers of any such registry office shall take judicial notice of the seal or signature, as the case may be, of any such Court, judge, notary public, person, consul, or vice-consul which shall be attached, appended, or subscribed to any such affidavit, declaration, or affirmation, or any other document; and that the enactments contained in the 23rd and 24th sections of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, shall be deemed to be incorporated herein as effectually as if the same enactments were expressly re-enacted in this Act and applied to registry offices.

A REGISTRY OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS.—In one of Lord Brougham's new Bills before the House of Lords, it is proposed that "A record shall be kept, at the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, of the names and descriptions of all persons petitioning the County Courts as insolvent debtors, and of the date of the filing of every such petition, and every such petition and every schedule thereto shall be filed in duplicate, and the clerks of the County Courts shall forthwith after the filing thereof, transmit such duplicate to the chief clerk of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, in Portugal-street, who shall cause the proper entry to be made in a book to be kept there for that purpose, and shall thereafter file such duplicate petition and schedule as of record; all persons being at liberty to search for and to see such entry and duplicate petition and schedule on payment of the usual fee."

THE MAGISTRATE,

AND PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAWYER.

Summary.

IT appears from the reply of the HOME SECRETARY to a question put to him in the House of Commons, that there is no present purpose at the Home Office to carry Sir G. GREY'S "Expenses of Prosecutions Act" into operation.

Dominoes is not an unlawful game. Where, therefore, a conviction of an innkeeper was for knowingly suffering an unlawful game, to wit, dominoes, to be played in his house, contrary to the tenor of his license, it was held to be bad, there being no allegation that he suffered "gaming," i. e. playing for money. "The defendant," said Lord Campbell, "might suffer people to play at a lawful game in his house, if no money was staked, because that would not amount to "gaming" within the meaning of the Licensing Act. (Reg. v. Ashton, 20 Law T. Rep. 110.)

There are two cases in the Practice of the Poor-Law. Where a ground of appeal was, that no notice of chargeability had been sent, and at the trial of the appeal the respondents admitted this to be true, but contended that in such case there was no grievance against which the appellants had a right to appeal, and the Court had no jurisdiction to hear it, and the Sessions so decided, it was held that they were wrong, for that, on the authority of Reg. v. Brixham, 8 A. & E. 375, omission to send notice of chargeability is a good ground of appeal. Reg. v. The Recorder of Shrewsbury, 20 Law T. Rep. 115, where an appeal against a poor-rate had been referred to arbitration under sec. 13 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, the arbitrator to have the same discretion as to costs as the Court of Quarter Sessions, and he made his award ordering the appellant to pay the costs of the respondent, it was held to be bad, because he should himself have determined the amount of costs. (Clerk v. The Parish Officers of Binbrook, 20 Law T. Rep. 115.)

The Court will not interfere with the discretion of justices, where it is clear that a discretion is given to them. But where it was alleged that there was a positive rule as to the time of entering an appeal, and the justices exercised a discretion, and there was some doubt whether such a rule existed or not, the Court granted a mandamus. (Reg. v. The Justices of Derbyshire, 20 Law T. Rep. 116.)

Two Criminal cases are to be noted. In Reg. v. Manning, 20 Law T. Rep. 116, a servant had removed his master's goods from one part of the premises to another, for the purpose of enabling a third person to offer them for sale to the master as the goods of that third person, in pursuance of previous concert, and both were held to have been rightly convicted of larceny. In Ex parte Roe, 20 Law T. Rep. 115, a rule for a criminal information for libel was refused, where it appeared that the applicant had himself resorted to the press upon the same dispute.

Beeson v. Burton, 20 Law T. Rep. 111, was a registration appeal. It was a question as to a freehold interest, and turned upon the construction of a local Act of Parliament. The point of law decided by it might, perhaps, be thus stated,—that where land is given to A. to hold so long as he pleases, and he is not removeable at the absolute will of the lessor or donor, a freehold interest is created.

HIGHWAYS BILL.

A Bill for regulating the highways will be introduced by Government soon after the recess. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his opening speech on the Budget, stated that the Government did not intend to introduce measures for regulating the county-rate or the poor-rate, but with respect to the highway-rate, he stated, "There have been upon the subject of the highway-rate no less than six Acts of Parliament already passed for improving its administration: it is not my intention now to advert to it, but I may be permitted to say, in passing, that my honourable friend, the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department, who has directed a good deal of attention to the matter, is prepared to bring in a seventh Bill, which I hope, after the six experiments I have alluded to, will prove satisfactory to the House, and entitled to the confidence of the country." From the very intimate knowledge which Sir William Jolliffe, the Under Secretary of State, possesses upon all the intricate questions of highway law and turnpike trusts, and from the great attention which he has hitherto paid to such questions, when they have been brought before Parliament, there can be no doubt but that such a practical measure will now, for the seventh time, be submitted to Parliament, as will be generally acceptable to the country. The highways will probably be placed in districts, and be regulated by district boards, as the feeling in favour of such an arrangement seemed to predominate when the former Bills were discussed. If ample powers are given for effective management, combined with economy, and due check upon and control over expenditure, and proper audit of accounts, Sir William Jolliffe will achieve a great triumph in practical legislation; and the Government of which he is a member will confer substantial benefit upon the country.

Cabs at Railway Stations.—On Thursday, Mr. Long, the Marylebone magistrate, gave a decision quite contrary to what Mr. A'Beckett holds to be the correct reading of the law. A driver was summoned for plying for hire within the Euston-square terminus. There was no doubt about the fact of the hiring. Mr. Humphreys argued the case for the railway company at great length. Mr. Long pronounced an elaborate judgment, deciding against the summons. He incidentally expressed an opinion that a change in the present system would be disadvantageous to the public. As to the law, he held that the words in the Act meant plying for hire in public places, and in public places only; and that the Legislature did not intend in any degree that the Act should apply to or interfere with private property, which railway stations are. The summons must be dismissed, as the plying for hire in this case was not plying for hire within the meaning of the Act of Parliament.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

Summary.

An injunction has been granted to restrain the directors of a railway company from executing a contract they had entered into for transferring to another company a portion of the line, plant, and property, so far as such contract was consistent with sec. 87 of the Railways Consolidation Act, which empowers contracts with other companies for the joint use of the line and division of the tolls, &c. (Winch v. The Birkenhead, &c. Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 108.)

Where a company had neglected properly to register a transfer of shares, and then proceeded to declare the shares forfeited, and to sell them, because the vendor had not paid calls made after such transfer, it seems that an action for damages may be sustained against them at the suit of the purchaser. (Catchpole v. The Ambergate, &c. Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 109.)

WINDING UP.

Where shares in a company had been bequeathed to a legatee, and the executors had been made contributories, upon the winding up of the company it was held, in Ex parte Wood, 20 Law T. Rep. 108, that the liability of the executors extended only to the death of the testator, the legatee having accepted the shares, with the executor's assent, and this having been done with the approbation of the directors.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

Summary.

The Court will enforce specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of an estate, although an error of a trifling nature in the character of the property may have appeared in the advertisement for sale; thus, where the advertisement described the estate as containing "coal, which was then in the course of working in the adjoining estate," but the vendor had no right to the coal and minerals under the surface, but the conditions made no mention of coals, and the purchaser took possession, and then claimed compensation, the Lord Chancellor refused it, saying,—"The seller has no right to fix the purchaser with the contract, neither has the purchaser any right to compensation;" but as the purchaser had chosen to take possession, specific performance was decreed. (Smithson v. Powell, 20 Law T. Rep. 105.)

We have already directed the attention of our readers to the great facilities for foreclosure and sale by claim afforded by the new procedure. In Cator v. Reeves, 20 Law T. Rep. 105, the following was the substance of the order. "Declare that the mortgaged property ought to be sold, and let the same be sold accordingly. Let the proceeds of the sale be paid into court, distinguishing the proceeds of the freehold and copyhold property from those of the policy. Let accounts be taken of what is due to plaintiff and the other incumbrancers, according to their several and respective priorities. Reserve further directions and costs."

Where a mortgagee of lands entered into possession in 1825, and afterwards made no other acknowledgment than this, that on Feb. 5, 1850, he wrote thus to plaintiff's Solicitor:—"I have received yours of the 2nd inst. I do not see the use of meeting either here or at M. unless some one is ready with the money to pay me off." This was held to be a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. "There is," said the Master of the Rolls, "an acknowledgment of title of the mortgagor, so that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists." (Stansfield v. Hobson, 20 Law T. Rep. 106.)

Where leaseholds had been bequeathed to A., B. and C. for sale, one-fourth of the produce being by the will given to C. and they were appointed executors, a bill was filed for administration. Afterwards C. mortgaged the leaseholds to D. he (C.) being at the time indebted to the estate. It was held that A. and B. had a lien on the property prior to the mortgagee, who was ordered to deliver up his title deeds. (Cole v. Muddle, 20 Law T. Rep. 107.)

CONDITIONS OF SALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—My attention has been directed by another solicitor to—what I certainly should not otherwise have seen—an article in the Law Times of November 20, 1852, commenting in an illiberal and uncandid spirit on certain conditions of sale of an estate at Penner, of which I am correctly assumed to be the author.

If, as I apprehend will be the case, I succeed in proving the remarks in question to be unfounded, it will either convict the writer of unfairness and carelessness, disgraceful in the highest degree to any journalist, or render it not unreasonable to suppose that the article was dictated by a spirit of professional enmity or personal ill-will. As, contrary to the practice of respectable journalists, you have attacked me by name, when, for the purpose of fairly commenting on anything that is or is deemed by the writer to be unprofessional and improper in the conditions in question, the name of the alleged offender was wholly unnecessary, it is not making too great a demand on your justice, your candour, or your courtesy to request a place in your columns for this explanation, which should have been forwarded earlier had not absence from London prevented my seeing the article in question until the present week.

The property in question was a small piece of land containing altogether 2r. 6p. formerly part of Pinner-common, which, in 1817, was enclosed and allotted to the freeholders of the parish. The allotment in question remained in the hands of the persons to whom it was allotted until 1852—the title, therefore, was short and simple, and the purchaser was not required to investigate for himself or to accept without investigation a long or complicated title.

The property, as appeared by the particulars prefixed to the conditions, and which the writer of your article must or might have seen was to be offered for sale in the first instance in one lot, and if not sold in one lot was to be then put up in twelve lots, each necessarily of very small size, and it was only to the sale in the greater number of lots that the conditions complained of applied. The object of this was to afford opportunities for persons of small capital, and especially to the working-classes, to purchase ground fit for the erection of houses or cottages, for which there is a demand in the neighbourhood. The prices of these lots were estimated at from 20*l.* to 25*l.* It was not a case, therefore, where a purchaser would be likely or desirous to expend additional capital in paying for the ingenious but expensive labours of conveyancers and attorneys.

Everybody who is aware of the great extent of the operations of the freehold land societies knows also the great eagerness with which small capitalists and working men buy up the lots offered them at a fixed price by such societies, in which cases the purchasers accept the vendor's title without examination, and take a conveyance from them, the [illegible] which is included in the purchase-m[illegible] fact of the purchaser knowing [illegible] of his purchase, and avoiding [illegible] title in a case where it would [illegible] 50 per cent. to the purchase-m[illegible] a great eagerness for such allo[illegible]

I hope the writer of your article also may be aware that political economists and even conveyancers of the higher class have considered that one of the greatest burthens on land is the expense of its transfer, and that it is, unless remedied by agreement, an insurmountable impediment to the transfer of small properties and the creation of a class of small proprietors.

Having had experience of the beneficial working of the system pursued by the freehold land societies, and being desirous of realising as much as could be obtained for the vendors of the land in question, I determined to adopt the same in reference to this property if it were sold in lots, and for that purpose framed the conditions in question. I may add that this was done after consultation with the vendors—men, I freely admit, ignorant of the value and importance of conveyancing ingenuity, who were of opinion, from their knowledge of the neighbourhood where the property lies and its inhabitants, that such a course would much increase the competition at the sale.

With regard to the question of costs, I beg to call your readers' attention to the fact (as every professional man can see), that the charges, remember stamp, parchment, and registration were included, were at the lowest possible scale, and were reduced where the same purchaser purchased one or more lots. They were not arbitrarily fixed, but according to a bill prepared for the purpose, at an even sum, less than the items composing the amounts would have come to.

The title-deeds were to remain in the hands of the vendors, for which reason the purchaser was to be entitled to receive an abstract which would be useful to him in case of a resale; here, also, I followed a, to me expedient and valuable, precedent afforded by the National Freehold Land Society.

The writer of your article has omitted the fourth condition, which in justice and candour he should have cited, and which was in these words:—

"The vendors shall, if required, within seven days after the sale, at their own expense, deliver to each purchaser of any lot or lots requiring the same, an abstract of the title to the property comprised in such lot or lots, and shall deduce a good title thereto, subject to the conditions herein contained."

The acceptance of the benefit offered by the condition complained of was entirely optional, and any purchaser (vide the last condition, as stated in your paper) had, four days after the sale, to signify his acceptance thereof. Any person intending to purchase, and in doubt as to accepting the title, could and would have received every explanation and information thereon by applying to me prior to the sale. I suspect the Provincial Law Societies your writer refers to are formed more for the purpose of increasing and preserving the present expensive and cumbrous system of conveyancing, than benefiting the public by removing or lessening impediments to the transfer of land in small lots. Such being my reasons for the course I adopted, I venture, notwithstanding the authority of the writer of your article is against me, to question whether if, "by any accident, this condition and contract were to come under the notice of the judges, a severe remark would doubtless mark their sense of its impropriety." I am, Sir, yours, &c.

AMICABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I had hoped that my letter of the 24th ult. contained full and sufficient answers to your correspondent "Investigator's" statements under date of the 6th ult. but from his letter in your last number it does not appear to have been satisfactory to him. "Investigator" commences his letter of the 30th ult. by telling you that I wish to make you believe that no such prospectus as that to which he has referred was issued by the Amicable Office, but that I do not expressly deny it. It should be observed that "Investigator," in his former letter, distinctly stated that his client's policy was effected on the 9th October, 1832. In order, therefore, to prevent the possibility of any mistake or omission on my part, I went so far back in my examination of the prospectuses of the society as the year 1831, to which period I confined myself, considering it unnecessary to go further; and I now expressly deny, without hesitation, that any prospectus containing the paragraph quoted by your correspondent has been issued by the Amicable Office during the last twenty-one years. I did not, however, nor will I, assert that no such prospectus was ever circulated by the society; for in the year 1820, claims by deaths were paid at the rate of 360*l.* for each share, and by the old constitution of the society, each share was, up to a certain date, guaranteed to produce 150*l.* consequently the difference between that sum and 360*l.* paid in the year 1820, amounted to 210*l.* or an addition of 140 per cent. upon the guaranteed share of 150*l.* but that was the utmost ever paid by the society. I cannot at the present time lay my hand on a copy of the prospectus which was in circulation thirty-two years ago, and the printer, whose name "Investigator" has given, appended to the prospectus from which he quotes, has been dead, I am informed, upwards of twenty years. But "Investigator" remarks,—"The real question is, whether the policy" on the life of his client "was effected on the faith of the statements therein made as to bonuses being true." Now this is a question which it must be unnecessary to say, I am utterly unable to answer. But, let me ask, is it reasonable to suppose that any person would be so negligent of his own interests as to effect an assurance upon his life in the year 1832 on the statements contained in a prospectus issued in the year 1820, and applicable to that year only, instead of obtaining from the office one of their latest papers?

I have already mentioned in my letter of the 24th ult. that the sums payable on claims were advertised every year whether they rose or fell; nothing, therefore, was ever concealed from, or misrepresented to, the public. If "Investigator's" client had been in possession of a prospectus issued in the year 1819, he would have seen that no more than 200*l.* was paid on each share in that year.

I have endeavoured fully and fairly to answer every statement made by "Investigator" in his letters, and I hope I have done so satisfactorily to him; but should it be otherwise, although I am at all times happy to give information when applied to, I must decline noticing any further anonymous communications.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

HENRY THOS. THOMSON, Registrar.

Amicable Society's Office, 50, Fleet-street,

December 8, 1852.

P.S.—As there is an apparent discrepancy in the statements contained in this and my former letter, relative to the amount of each share payable on claims in the year 1820, I consider it proper to explain that the fact of the society's shares being guaranteed each to produce 150*l.* instead of 200*l.* up to the period alluded to, had escaped my attention while writing my letter of the 24th ult.

Queries.

A KNOTTY POINT.

[Although this is, perhaps, in strictness, a point of law, and not of practice, we insert it on account of its singularity.—ED. LAW T.]

I should feel obliged if you or any of your numerous subscribers could enlighten me on the following point:—

A. B. residing at Monmouth, died on Tuesday, the 30th November, 1851, at 10·55 p.m. local time, who had a legacy left him by C. D. who lived in London, and died the same day, but at 11·2 p.m. Greenwich time. The difference between the time of these two places is sixteen minutes. The dead year having now expired, the executors of A. B. claim the legacy, under the impression that had the time been uniform, A. B. would consequently have survived C. D. by nine minutes, and are therefore entitled to the legacy. Are they so entitled?

Dudley, Dec. 6, 1852. AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

COUNTY COURTS.

THERE is no more difficult point for the determination of a judge of a County Court than what in particular cases constitutes a question of title so as to oust his jurisdiction. All decisions of the Superior Courts upon this are therefore of great interest, and should be carefully noted. Two such were reported last week. In Adey v. The Deputy Master of the Trinity House, 20 Law T. Rep. 110, the action was for dues payable to the trustees of a harbour for vessels passing within certain limits by both outward and homeward bound ships. This was held to be a question of title to tolls, and so not within the jurisdiction of the County Courts. In Chew v. Holroyd, 20 Law T. Rep. 113, it appeared that A. the owner of a cottage, underlet to B. the whole except (as he alleged) two rooms, which he reserved for himself. B. alleged that A. had let him the whole, and with another entered the two rooms and removed A.'s furniture, for which he brought an action in the County Court. It was contended that this was a question of title, but the Judge held otherwise, and gave a verdict to the plaintiff of 25*l.* Now on a motion for a prohibition, the Court of Ex. held that title was in dispute, and that the County Court had not jurisdiction.

But this objection as to title being in dispute must be taken at the trial or it cannot be made afterwards, for in Ex parte Sherring, 20 Law T. Rep. 115, where a prohibition was moved on the ground of title it was refused, because as CROMPTON, J. remarked, "it never could be permitted to a party to make one case before a Judge below, and failing there, to come before this Court with an entirely new state of facts, and so seek to obtain a prohibition."

ADVOCACY IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—A short time since a letter appeared in the LAW TIMES, stating that the judge of the Marylebone County Court had decided that the 10th section of the County Court Amendment Act did not exclude clerks who were attorneys, and had taken out their certificates, from appearing as advocates. Now, as it has been decided in the Durham County Court, and I believe elsewhere, that such clerks are not eligible to appear under that section, it would perhaps be some advantage to the Profession if your correspondent could give a more detailed account of that decision, or of any similar one, as it might have an influence on those judges who have decided to the contrary.

If the decision in the Durham County Court be correct in the letter, it certainly appears to be not in accordance with the spirit of the law, and it will be an obvious hardship on those who have employed at considerable expense managing clerks who are admitted attorneys, but who must nevertheless in every case, however small, and perhaps at great personal inconvenience, appear themselves, or fee counsel at an expense often greater than the amount in dispute, as well as on young men, who for the first few years of their professional lives have entered such situations, and who, though pronounced competent by the proper tribunal, are altogether excluded from one branch of the profession.

With the aid of your valuable paper, we might hope soon to see this evil amended, either by inducing a different interpretation of the section in question, or by means of a clause for that purpose in the next County Courts Amendment Act.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

EQUITY PRACTICE.—Again there are several points in the New Procedure to be noted by the practitioner. The LORD CHANCELLOR, in The Ipswich Charities, 20 Law T. Rep. 105, has declared it to be his purpose to "put an end to the practice, which has of late become very general, of allowing parties to file affidavits over an unlimited period of time," producing delay and costs. In The Duke of Buccleugh v. Comber, 20 Law T. Rep. 105, his Lordship said: "I wish it to be understood that in the cases of persons who are committed for the non-payment of costs, which have been vexatiously incurred, I will give no relief."

The Lords Justices have ordered a sale of mortgaged property on a claim of foreclosure, and the form of the order will be found in Cator v. Reeves, 20 Law T. Rep. 105. In Featman v. Mousley, 20 Law T. Rep. 106, a slight alteration of a printed bill had been made in writing, the transposition of the order of the Christian names. Their Lordships permitted the bill to be filed, Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE observing, "We must not be understood, however, as intending to sanction the filing of a bill of this kind where the alteration is at all extensive or important, or where it is such as to interfere with the legibility of the bill." Where a female ward of the Court, prior to the passing of the new statute, married without leave of the Court, and the suit was revived against the husband, and the wife's share of the property in question was vested in trustees for the benefit of the female plaintiff and her issue, it was held by the Lord Justices that such a change or transmission of the interest of the plaintiff had taken place as justified an order being made, under sec. 52, to the effect of the usual supplemental decree, and that it was not necessary to exhibit any bill of revivor or supplement. (Atkinson v. Parker, 20 Law T. Rep. 106.)

The MASTER of the ROLLS has held that the proper course is to move to prove the execution of a deed by affidavit, and not viva voce. (Ball v. Carter, 20 Law T. Rep. 106.)

COMMON LAW.—It would seem, from a question put by COLERIDGE, J. in Matheson v. Matheson, 20 Law T. Rep. 109, that an affidavit for a rule to enter a suggestion, under section 129 of the Procedure Act, of the death of a plaintiff, so as to enable the administrator to revive a judgment obtained by him, should state that defendant is alive. It was not so decided, but the doubt was started, and it would be as well to avoid it in any such affidavits.

In Cobbett v. Hudson, 20 Law T. Rep. 109, it was decided by the Q.B. that a party to an action may state his case to the jury, and afterwards be examined as a witness in support of it. The Court expressed its strong disapprobation of the practice, as being extremely inconvenient; but, there being no positive rule of law to the contrary, a new trial was granted where the Judge had refused permission to the plaintiff to be both advocate and witness.

In the Law of Awards it is to be noted that, where an award is sought to be set aside, on the ground that the arbitrator has mistaken the law, the Court will not look at a written statement of his reasons, "unless he delivered them as parcel of the award. If he does so, then the Court will look at the two as one document, and will suppose that he has reserved the matter of law for the consideration of the Court; but if he has absolutely decided the question of law submitted to him, we cannot inquire into the legality of his decision." (Reg. v. The South-Western Railway Company, 20 (Law T. Rep. 110.)

ADMISSION OF ATTORNEYS TO THE BAR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I was somewhat surprised to observe, in your last number but one, an article advocating the propriety of allowing attorneys to be called to the Bar immediately after being struck off the rolls for that purpose. Nevertheless, I am not sure that I should have addressed you upon the subject, had it not been for a letter which appears in your last number. This letter, however, confirming my apprehensions that the proposal once being started, would quickly be taken up by others, I feel anxious that something should be said in behalf of the existing practice. And not knowing whether any one else will take up the championship of the present regulations, I come forward, and the rather at this early period, hoping that those who are disposed to support the change may listen with greater impartiality and candour to what may be urged on the other side than they probably would do hereafter, when, having commenced an "agitation" for the change, they would be so wedded thereto, as (which too often happens) to be incapable of appreciating what is advanced in opposition to their own views.

Now, Sir, there seem to me to be many good reasons why an attorney should not be allowed to go at once to the Bar, but I shall content myself with naming two or three which are frequently, and I think justly, considered as having great weight.

First, then, with a view to maintaining the respectability of the Bar, and to keep from it, as much as possible, needy adventurers, who are the most likely to degrade it,—not by their poverty, but by the artifices to which penury may compel them to resort,—it has long been a rule that during his years of probation a student for the Bar shall not engage in any other business or lucrative employment. This rule is not always adhered to so strictly as it might be, but still it is a rule which ought not openly to be broken in upon, as it would be by allowing attorneys to be "called" the moment after they ceased to be attorneys.

Secondly, although an attorney may be very well skilled to conduct his business—especially a country business—he may, nevertheless, be almost entirely ignorant of pleading, as also of the practice in the Courts at Westminster; and, in the case of country attorneys, such is, in fact, the rule rather than the exception. How, then, could one of this class properly fulfil the duties of a barrister without devoting some considerable time to the study of that which is all-important to him quâ barrister, but which, if he has a good town agent, is of very little moment to him quâ attorney? He ought, then, to have time for this study, which the present regulations give him.

Thirdly. There are men who, after soliciting business as attorneys, and having got a good many actions afloat and growing ripe for trial, might in this stage of them migrate, getting the clients to adopt some friend of the incipient counsel to conduct the further proceedings; this friendly "brother chip" engaging with the ci-devant attorney or new-fledged barrister to give him the briefs in all these actions. Thus the new man would go into court the day after he was called with a bagful of briefs, and a friend near him grateful for past favours and willing to reciprocate in future.

Thus would the hybrid barristers completely "take the shine out" of those "thorough-bred" counsel, who, honourably adhering to the etiquette which you, Sir, are so anxious to maintain, have to wait silently and obscurely to the end of their lives, for that unsolicited business which in these days seems to come to those only who "hunt it up" either in one way or another.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—As one of this agitated class, I feel comfort in your assurance that we are not going to be hurt, except in name. But at the top of the third column of p. 118 of your last (No. 505), I find that the future "country agents" are to be appointed on payment of 1*l*. I was appointed in July last, and paid 8*l*. 13s. for the doubtful advantage of a Mastership. Am I not, then, a little hurt if my neighbours get for 1*l*. an appointment which less than five months ago cost me the sum I mention.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.

MASTERS EXTRAORDINARY — COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I cannot but be somewhat amused at the cool suggestion made by "A Solicitor," in your last number, that all solicitors should be allowed to administer oaths to the same extent as Masters Extraordinary, and all attorneys to the same extent as commissioners, and that (I apprehend he means) without themselves incurring the expense of obtaining the commissions now required. He is evidently a solicitor who has not expended 10*l*. in obtaining a commission to take affidavits in Chancery, and some 5*l*. or 6*l*. in obtaining commissions to administer oaths in the common law courts. May not your correspondent (with his views) be reasonably asked why all persons should not be allowed to practise as solicitors and attorneys without incurring the expense of stamp duty to the amount of 120*l*. and other expenses amounting to between 30*l*. and 40*l*. in order to procure admission to the different courts. It is a matter of indifference to me by what title I am authorised to take affidavits, nor, indeed, have I much objection to every solicitor being authorised to do so, provided the amount I have expended be returned to me, or, if the expenses be lessened, then the difference between the modern and the ancient expenses, so that there may not be, to use your correspondent's expression, any invidious distinction.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

LAW OF EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT.

Upon reconsidering the 14th section of the above Act, it does appear that a will relating to land does not come within the limit of that section, unless it be thirty years old or upwards; when, according to the cases of Doe v. Lloyd, Peake, Ev. ap. 91; and Wynne v. Tyrwhitt, 4 B. & A. 376, it seems it would do so.

I am obliged by A. B.'s notice of the point.

THE MERCANTILE LAWYER.

Two cases in the Law of Patents appear among the reports of last week. In Holmes v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 20 Law T. Rep. 112, the rule of law was stated by Jervis, C.J. to be that "every patentee in his specification must describe his invention so that an ordinarily skilled workman may read and understand what patent is old and what new. It is also free from doubt that there may be a patent for a combination of old parts with new." Where, therefore, A. took out a patent for a turn-table, and in his specification described its constituent parts and mode of use, but did not state what of it was old and what new, it was held to be bad. Amies v. Kelsey, 20 Law T. Rep. 115, was a point of practice under the new Patent Law Amendment Act. An application was made, under sec. 42, for inspection. It was held, that this may be done at any time after action brought, but that the affidavit must shew why such inspection is necessary.

Glover v. Jones, 20 Law T. Rep. 113, was a curious question as to the liability of a servant under these circumstances:—A. was driver of a stage-coach, and B. clerk and bookkeeper to C.; B. usually made up A.'s account with him, and paid him his wages, entering them in his books weekly, and he settled with C. (the master) monthly. A. having as he alleged 38*l*. due to him, applied to B. for it, admitting that he had detained a sum which he had received for C. for parcels, &c. B. sent him 20*l*. on account, and promised to pay the balance on his calling to adjust the accounts. A. afterwards wrote to C. for the balance, stating that he should look to C. for payment, and then he brought an action for it against B. Was B. liable? It was held by the Ex. that the action could not be sustained.

COURT PAPERS.

APPEALS FROM COURTS OF COLONIES TO THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

By an Order in Council, dated Windsor, Nov. 27th last, it is declared expedient, according to the provisions of the Act passed in the 7th and 8th years of her Majesty's reign for amending an Act passed in the 4th year of his late Majesty William IV. that any person or persons may appeal to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in her or their Privy Council, from any final judgment, decree, order, or sentence of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, as a court of civil judicature, or as a court of revenue or of escheat, in such manner, within such time, and under and subject to such rules, &c. as therein mentioned.

THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

PRACTICE IN CHAMBERS.

Under the recent alteration of Chancery Reform the several judges have agreed to and adopted the following resolutions as to chamber practice.

The following are the applications to be made at chambers, viz.:—

1. As to guardianship of infants (except the appointment of guardians ad litem).
2. For the appointment of special guardian to concur in a special case.
3. As to maintenance or advancement of infants.
4. Under the Drainage Act.
5. Under the Trustee Act of 1850 and 1852.
6. For administration of estates under the Act of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.
7. Under the Legacy Duty Act for payment of money out of court.
8. For time to plead, answer, or demur.
9. For leave to amend bills or claims.
10. For enlarging publication or the time for closing evidence.
11. For the production of documents.
12. Relating to the conduct of suits or matters.
13. As to matters connected with the management of property.
14. For payment into court of purchasers' moneys under sales by order of the Court, and investing the same.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

MANCHESTER LAW CLERKS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY.

THE members of this society, accompanied by a highly respectable body of friends and patrons, held their third annual dinner on Wednesday week, under the presidency of R. B. Armstrong, esq. Q.C. M.P. Recorder of Manchester. The dinner took place at the Albion Hotel, and was served up in the well-known style of that establishment.

Amongst the gentlemen present were Robert Barnes, esq. Mayor of Manchester; Frank Ashton, esq. Mayor of Salford; Mr. Alderman Walker; Mr. W. T. Jemmett, one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy; Mr. Joseph Heron, Town Clerk of Manchester; Mr. Charles Gibson, Town Clerk of Salford; Mr. John Ogden, Clerk of the Peace; Messrs. J. P. Cobbett, John Cross, William Saunders, and Thomas Wheeler, barristers; Messrs. J. F. Beaver, S. P. Hitchcock, B. Whitworth, T. Whitlow, A. S. Austin, Robert Taylor, T. Taylor, J. Bond, B. Gartside, and W. P. Roberts, attorneys; and Mr. E. Blackmore, surgeon.

After dinner, "Non nobis Domine" being sung by a party of vocalists, the Chairman proposed "The health of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen," which, with that of "His Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the royal family," was cordially drunk.

Song, "Hail, Star of Brunswick."

Mr. John Tasker, the Secretary of the Society, read the report for the past year. The following is an abstract:—

"The committee beg to refer the members to the list of donations to the funds of the society, amounting to the sum of 98*l.* 6s. 6d., and of annual subscriptions amounting to the sum of 45*l.* 3s. as a convincing proof of the continued interest evinced by the Profession in the welfare of the society. Upwards of four years have now elapsed since the formation of this society, during the whole of which period its prospects have continued to improve, and by a sure, though gradual, increase in the number of its members, as well as in the extent of its patronage, its general objects have been greatly promoted. The committee submit to the donors and members the following details, showing the present state of the funds of the society. On reference to the annual statement of the society's accounts, made up to the 1st of July, 1852, it appears the total receipts were 140*l.* 4s. 8d. The payments for stationery, printing, advertising, postage, &c. 5*l.* 3s. 7d. leaving a balance in favour of the society of 135*l.* 1s. 1d. During the past year the society has received from members 39*l.* 5s. 6d.; from donations and annual subscriptions, 61*l.* 3s. 6d.; for rules, entrance-fees, fines, and certificates of free membership, 4*l.* 9s.; and interest from the savings bank, 3*l.* 9s. 9d.; making together, 108*l.* 7s. 9d.; and the total expenditure for the year, 36*l.* 12s. 4d.; leaving a balance in favour of the society of 71*l.* 15s. 5d.; which amount, when added to the balance in hand at the last report, makes 206*l.* 16s. 6d. as the total capital of the society, exclusive of the subscriptions due on the 1st inst. The number of members at the present date is thirty-three, being an increase of fourteen since last report. The committee would here beg to remind the clerks in Manchester and in the country, that those qualified to become members of the society are clerks to attorneys, barristers, special pleaders, conveyancers, and proctors, and of the public law officers in Manchester, or who reside within the limits of the Manchester Law Association, viz. within a circuit of twenty miles from Manchester. By the present state of the society's funds a free member is entitled, in case of sickness, to 7s. per week (and when the annual subscriptions due on the 1st July inst. are paid, he will be entitled to 10s. per week), and his wife, child, relative, or nominee, to 15*l.* at his death; and should such free member survive his wife, then and in such event he would be entitled, according to the state of the society's funds, to a sum equal to one-half the sum payable on the death of a member; and when the society is possessed of 1,000*l.* or upwards, a free member will be entitled, in case of sickness, to 20s. per week; and his wife, child, relative, or nominee, to 25*l.* at his death; and when the society is possessed of 2,000*l.* the wife, child, relative, or nominee of a member will be entitled to 40*l.* at his death; and if the member survive his wife, he will be entitled to a sum equal to one-half, and likewise to an annual allowance, when advanced age, infirmity, or accident, permanently prevents him from following his customary employment. During the past year applications have been made by members of the profession to the committee for clerks, and in every case the committee have had the pleasure of assisting clerks to situations; and upon considering the subject, the committee have thought it desirable for the convenience of the profession, to adopt a registry for supplying clerks, members of the society, with situations, and this, coupled with the co-operation of the profession, will furnish the society with the means of procuring employment for members requiring it, and at the same time will be a source from which the profession may be guaranteed clerks of respectability and good character. In concluding this report, the committee have great pleasure in stating that, since the establishment of the society, not a single claim has been made upon the funds, on account of sickness or death, shewing the comparative good health of its present members, and the probability of its funds continuing greatly to accumulate."

The usual complimentary toasts and speeches followed, and the evening was spent pleasantly. Such a society cannot be too much encouraged, and therefore we have given so much space to its proceedings.

NOTICES OF NEW LAW BOOKS.

The Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, with Notes of all the Cases decided on its Construction, the New Rules and Orders, with the Forms, Schedules, &c. a very copious Index. By C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, author of "The Law of Master and Servant." London, LAW TIMES Office.

WHEN the LAW TIMES Edition of the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act was published, with notes, by Mr. WISE, a promise was given that, as soon as the New Rules and Orders were issued, they should be published as an Appendix. They were then expected to appear very speedily. But two years elapsed and no effort was made for the purpose, and it was not until Lord ST. LEONARDS, with his untiring industry, devoted himself to the subject, that the defect was supplied, and a body of rules issued which exceed in length the Act itself, long as that Act is. In the meanwhile a vast number of decisions have been given by all the Courts upon the construction of the statute, without which before him the practitioner cannot venture to read or refer to it. Hence the necessity for adding to the new rules and orders another edition of the Act, with notes of all those numerous decisions upon its construction. The Appendix has thus unavoidably grown to be much larger than the original book; but then it is complete in itself, and, to meet the requirements of the Profession, without increasing the cost of it, the price charged for this edition of the Act, with all the decisions and rules and orders added to it, is not more than was the price of the original edition of the Act alone, so that the possessor of WISE'S, or any other edition of the Bankruptcy Act is not, in fact, put to any additional cost by reason of the statute itself being repeated here; and the convenience of having the whole of the text of the new law of Bankruptcy in one volume is manifest, and we trust that the practitioner will find its worth greatly increased by the copious and careful collection of the decisions made by Mr. HERTSLET, and placed under the sections of the statute to which they relate, so that the words of the law and the interpretations put upon them by the Judges may be seen at one glance.

PAMPHLETS.

MR. G. A. DEAN, Agricultural Architect and Surveyor, has published an Essay on The Compulsory Enfranchisement and Commutation of Copyhold Property, in which he puts forth many valuable suggestions for ascertaining the value of existing interests in Copyholds. As the opinion of a thoroughly practical man, this pamphlet will doubtless be esteemed by those whose duty it will be to conduct the coming enfranchisement.—Mr. A. RIDGWAY has published some Remarks on Notarial Evidence, suggested by the recent case of Achilli v. Newman. It was to this pamphlet that he referred in a letter in the last LAW TIMES, where he pointed out an error into which the whole press had fallen with respect to the famous judgment of the Inquisition. He suggests some desirable improvements in the law of evidence as respects the more easy admission of notarial documents.—Some Suggestions on Nisi Prius Trials at Assizes, by JNO. GORDON, Esq. Barrister-at-Law, urges the necessity for more frequent assizes, with other reforms very similar to those which were some time since proposed in these pages in the Letters to Lord CAMPBELL; but the question cannot be too often mooted, for it is of vital importance.—From GEORGE ROSS, Esq. Advocate, we have received the first part of a work which promises to be extremely useful and interesting, a collection of the Leading Cases in the Commercial Law of England and Scotland, systematically arranged, with notes, this first part being devoted to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes. The cases are selected with sound judgment, and the notes display much learning. We trust that Mr. ROSS will be very careful to indicate the differences (whenever they exist) between the law of Scotland and England, that his readers may not mistake the one for the other, a disadvantage to which the student is always liable where a book contains two systems of jurisprudence, and which only the utmost vigilance on the part of the author can avoid. It is even felt where a treatise describes both the law as it was and as it is—the mind is apt to confuse them much more when the same work blends the differing law of two countries. Would it not be more prudent to keep them quite apart by separately paging them?

BOOK-KEEPING for SOLICITORS.—KAIN'S SYSTEM.

"Its general acceptance proves that experience confirms its utility."—Law Times.

The following are extracts from a few of the many voluntary testimonials received from the profession:—

"I find your system very satisfactory."
"Satisfactory and advantageous."
"We have found it to work satisfactorily."
"The most satisfactory ever brought under our notice."
"It ought to be widely adopted; it works most admirably, correctly, and satisfactorily, and has the advantage of being very simple. The more I use it the more am I pleased with it."
"A great advantage."
"Decidedly a great improvement."
"I much approve of your system."
"I testify my entire approbation of your system."
"I take great interest in the successful working of your system."
"I am convinced of the superiority of your system over all others that have come under my notice: it only requires to be known to be appreciated."
"Its best feature next to its soundness is its simplicity."
"We much approve of it, and will recommend it to our friends."
"I am most thoroughly satisfied of its accuracy and value."
"We quite appreciate the system."
"We have derived advantage from its adoption."
"The system is simple and easy."
"We can with confidence recommend it."
"We are much pleased with the system."
"Many of the profession here (Liverpool) have adopted the system."
"After a year and a half's trial, we increasingly appreciate the simplicity and accuracy of the system."
"We have kept our books by this system for two years, and have found it a great saving of time and trouble, and at the same time correct and satisfactory."

An exemplification can be had of the Author, price 2s. post-paid, of whom also are to be had, the necessary Account-Books.

SCOTTISH UNION INSURANCE COMPANY (FIRE and LIFE),

Instituted 1824, and incorporated by Royal Charter,
No. 37, CORNHILL, LONDON; EDINBURGH, and DUBLIN.

The large Paid-up Capital and Accumulations of Premiums, carefully invested, afford the most absolute security to the Assured with this Corporation, which has been Twenty-seven Years Established.

GOVERNOR—His Grace the Duke of HAMILTON and BRANDON.

The Advantages to Insurers with this Office will be found all that can be desired, whether considered in point of—

SECURITY,
MODERATE RATES of PREMIUM, LIBERAL CONDITIONS, or the LARGE PERIODICAL ADDITIONS made to the LIFE POLICIES, as appears from the following TABLES, SHEWING THE ADDITIONS TO POLICIES OF 1,000*l.* which have been Seventeen complete years in existence.

Age when Assured.	Additions.	Total Sum payable in case of Death.
20	£280 1 6	£1,280 1 6

1,580	1827	2,500	508 0 0	3,008 0 0

The next Division of Life Profits will take place in December 1853, being an interval of Five years.

The Bonus may be applied, at the option of the Assured, in any of the following ways:—

I. It may be added to the Sum Assured; or
II. Applied in Reduction of Future Premiums; or
III. Surrendered for a Present Payment in Cash.

Fire Insurances at the reduced rates.

Policies in this Office are INDISPUTABLE except in cases of FRAUD. "Free Policies" are issued, at a small increased rate of Premium, which remain in force although the Life assured may go to any part of the World.

Parties assuring within Six Months of their last Birthday are allowed a proportionate diminution in the Premium.

The premiums may be paid up in one sum, or in a limited number of payments, on advantageous terms.

Eighty per cent. of the profits are divided at the end of every Five Years among the Assured. At the first division, to the end of 1849, the addition to the amount assured averaged above Fifty per cent. on the Premiums paid.

The financial year closes on the 31st December; and parties effecting assurances before that date will have the advantage of an extra year's bonus.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

ADVANTAGES OFFERED.

EXTENSION OF LIMITS OF RESIDENCE.—The assured may reside in most parts of the world, without extra charge, and in all parts by payment of a small extra premium.

MUTUAL SYSTEM WITHOUT THE RISK OF PARTNERSHIP.

The small share of Profit divisible in future among the Shareholders being now provided for, without intrenching on the amount made by the regular busine-s, the Assured will hereafter derive all the benefits obtainable from a Mutual Office, with at the same time, complete freedom from liability, secured by means of an ample Proprietary Capital—thus combining in the same office all the advantages of both systems.

The Assurance Fund already invested amounts to £850,000 and the Income exceeds £136,000 per annum.

CREDIT SYSTEM.—On Policies for the whole of Life, one half of the Annual Premiums for the first five years may remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy, or may be paid off at any time

LOANS.—Loans are advanced on Policies which have been in existence five years and upwards, to the extent of nine-tenths of their value.

BONUSES.—Five Bonuses have been declared; at the last in January 1853, the sum of 121,126*l.* was added to the Policies producing a Bonus varying with the different ages from 24 to 55 per cent. on the Premiums paid during the five years.

PARTICIPATION IN PROFITS.—Policies participate in the Profits in proportion to the number and amount of the Premiums paid between every division, so that if only one year's Premium be received prior to the books being closed for any division, the Policy on which it was paid will obtain its due share. The books close for the next division on 30th June, 1856, therefore those who effect Policies before the 30th June next, will be entitled to one year's additional share of Profits over later assurers.

APPLICATION OF BONUSES.—The next and future Bonuses may be either received in cash, or applied at the option of the assured in any other way.

NON-PARTICIPATING.—Assurances may be effected for a Fixed Sum at considerably reduced rates, and the Premiums for Term Policies are lower than at most other Safe Offices.

PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS.—Claims paid thirty days after proof of death, and all Policies are Indisputable except in cases of fraud.

INVALID LIVES may be assured at rates proportioned to the increased risk.

POLICIES are granted on the lives of persons in any station, and of every age, and for any sum on one life, from 50*l.* to 10,000*l.*

PREMIUMS may be paid yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; but if a payment be omitted from any cause, the Policy can be revived within fourteen months.

The Accounts and Balance Sheets are at all times open to the inspection of the Assured, or of persons desirous to assure.

A copy of the last Report, with a Prospectus and Forms of Proposal, can be obtained of any of the Society's Agents, or will be forwarded free by addressing a line to

REDEMPTION OF MORTGAGES AND LOANS.
LEASEHOLDS MADE EQUAL TO FREEHOLDS
FOR THE PURPOSE OF MORTGAGE OR SALE.
ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS.
GUARANTEE OF MORTGAGES.

SOLICITORS will find the above FORM of ASSURANCE of great utility to them in facilitating the Transfer of Property.

These extensions to property of the principles of Life Assurance have been already extensively adopted by the Profession.

IN ADDITION to the above, the LAW PROPERTY ASSURANCE SOCIETY effects every kind of Life Assurances and Annuities, and grants ANNUITIES TO PROFESSIONAL MEN in case of permanent disability.

For Particulars and Prospectuses, apply at the Offices of the Society, 30, Essex-street, Strand, London; or by letter to RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE COMPANY. Empowered by special Act of Parliament.

Offices, 3, Old Broad-street, London.

Insurances against railway accidents can now be effected with this Company, not only for single and double journeys, and by the year, as heretofore, but also for terms of years and for life, as follows:—

To insure 1,000*l.* for a term of five years, premium £3 10 0
" ten " 6 0 0

To insure 1,000*l.* for the whole of life, by annual premiums on the following decreasing scale:—

For the first five years, annual premium £1 0 0
" next five " 0 15 0
" next five " 0 10 0
" remainder of life " 0 5 0

To insure 100*l.* for the whole term of life, by single payment, according to age, viz.:—

Above 20, under 30.	Above 30, under 35.	Above 35, under 40.	Above 40, under 45.	Above 45, under 50.	Above 50, under 55.	Above 55, under 60.	Above 60.
£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1 1 0	1 0 0	1 0 0	1 0 0	1 0 0	1 5 0	1 10 0	1 15 0

The above premiums include the stamp duty, which is payable to government by the Company.

The total amount insured by any of the above modes will be paid in case of death by railway accident while travelling in any class carriage on any railway in the kingdom, and proportionate compensation in the event of personal injury.

NORWICH UNION LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY: established 1808.—A bonus having been declared at a General Meeting of the Members of this Society upon the 30th of June last, copies of the Directors' and Actuary's Reports may be obtained at the Society's Offices, 6, Cresent, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London; and Surrey-street, Norwich.

This Society has now been established upwards of forty-four years, upon the principles of mutual assurance, during which period it has paid to claimants on terminated policies upwards of 3,000,000*l.* sterling, in addition to which nearly one million and a quarter sterling has been assigned by way of bonuses; while the accumulated capital, for meeting existing engagements (and which is almost wholly invested on real and Government securities), exceeds 2,100,000*l.*

There is no proprietary to divide with the assured the profits of this institution, which is one of the very few purely mutual insurance offices. In addition, however, to the entire profits of the Society, persons now effecting insurances will be entitled to participate in the benefits to be derived from the reserved fund, now amounting to 215,127*l.* 12s. 7*d.* and which, affording all the protection of a proprietary capital, will at the same time increase instead of diminishing their future bonuses.

The rates of premium are below those of most insurance offices, and under the age of forty-five not less so than ten per cent.—a benefit in itself equivalent to an annual bonus.

One half of the first five annual premiums may remain as a permanent charge upon policies granted for the whole duration of life.

ALBERT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY. Established 1838.

Principal Office, 11, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, London.

Indisputable policies.

Assurances, annuities, and endowments granted, and every other mode of provision for families arranged.

Half the annual premiums for the first five years may remain on credit for any period until death, on payment of interest at five per cent. per annum.

Parties allowed to go to or reside in most parts of the world without extra premium.

Naval and military lives, not in active service, assured at the ordinary rate.

Policies forfeited by non-payment of premium revivable at any time within six months, on satisfactory proof of health and the payment of a trifling fine.

Policies on the life of another secured, notwithstanding the part of the world in which the assured may go.

To Readers and Correspondents.

"Reader"—It is a rule with us never to answer the attacks of contemporaries, which are almost always dictated by spite or jealousy It is a waste of time and trouble We would not depart from the recognised courtesies of journalism so far as to indulge in personalities and abuse we could not stand stand to fight with the same weapons of Billingsgate and therefore, we should not meet them upon equal terms, we decline to enter into any conflict with them

"A Subscriber"—The case in Watkins is not reported
